"REMOVE NOT THE ANCIENT LANDMARKS WHICH OUR FATHERS HAVE SET."

VOL. 4. JAMES CREEK, PENNSYLVANIA, JANUARY 3, 1873. NO. 1

THE AUTUMN LEAVES ARE FADED

BY F. W. SUNDAM.

Yes the trees are faded Jennie,
Where once the yellow apples grew,
That we sat and ate together
Beneath their shade, long months ago.

The shade is gone where then we sat,
All bare the leafless branches spread,
Far scattered on the Autumn blast,
The leaves lie withered now and dead

The happy song-birds, too, are gone,
Far to the southern lands away;
No more their warbled echoes wake,
The early dawning of the day.

Robed in a winding sheet of snow,
Now lie the fields once green and fair;
Wild winds o'er faded nature shrieks,
The sad requiem of the year.

Farewell to summer and its joys,
Farewell green leaves and flowers gay;
Thou songbirds too, a kind farewell,
For all things here must pass away.

And we, ere many years are gone,
Down in the silent grave must lie;
While the storms and the winds above,
Will sing our long last lullaby.

Yet 'tis alone our mortal part,
With mortal things of earth must lie;
Unending life our spirit's find,
Where leaves and flowers never die.

Free'd is that land of love and light,
From winter's dreariness and gloom;
No frosts or chilling winds can blight,
Its fair and everlasting bloom.

Sweet rest, may there the weary find,
And progress upward, evermore;
With sin, and woe, and death behind,
Eternal life and joy before.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

For the Pilgrim.

A NEW YEARS DISSERTION.

For the first time in the history of the PILGRIM, do I, as a stranger among a great portion of the readers of this excellent and well conducted paper, attempt to write a friendly greeting. A stranger I say, but not to all, for quite a number of you I have met with before, and others no doubt, have seen me in person which to me are unknown. Let this be as it may, it is my porpose to write occasionally for the columns of the PILGRIM the present year, God sparing my life, and then, if the editors will accept and publish the same, you and I may form a closer intimacy ere the present year closes.

One thousand eight hundred and seventy-two is now to be numbered with the things of the past, adding one more year to the long column of years, from which time we date the christian era. Think, more than eighteen hundred years have passed by since the little babe of Bethlehem was circumcised after the custom of the Jewish law. Again thirty years after this event, was He publicly declared to be the Son of God, and then in the short time of three years following this event, was He publicly crucified on Calvery's summit. Thus we see that as year after year would roll back into eternity with the things then transpiring, other years with new occurrences would take their places. But in no instance could the succeeding year bring forward what the preceding one had carried along with itself in any other way than by memory. What a blessed gift memory is! With this we can retrace the ocean of time, and bring to our remembrance things that long since have happened and have passed away with the passing years. Some of these reminiscences of the past are of a pleasant, while others of a sorrowful nature. Some of them we would fondly cherish and often feel sad that we are so slow in bringing them up before our minds with all the little incidents connected therewith, while others we are as ready to have buried in the dark past.

Standing, as we are, upon a new era of time, we naturally look prospectively into the future of the present year, arranging things for the present and perhaps another year still farther away. Had we not as poor weak and perishable mortals, better first take a retrospective view? Let us look into the year just passed, and let us try and bring up some of the things that are now recorded in eternity. Husbands and wives, how many of you can recall to mind the happy hours you and your dear companions spent together on New Year's day just one year ago, or even later in the year. And where is one or the other of you now? Cruel death found his way to your domicils and carried one or the other a victim away, we hope, to a better world than this. Oh, the sighs and groans that then escaped from a heart that was bleeding for a loved one! I just now recall such scenes that happened in the past year. In what consist your present joy? Can you in truth say, "my joy and consolation is based upon the hope of meeting my partner in a country where years are not numbered and where the hand of God will wipe away all tears from our eyes?

Fathers and mothers, how many of you were called to the painful duty of standing by the bed side of a dying son or daughter, one that was near and dear to your hearts? Perhaps that son or that daughter was allowed by you, as Christian parents, to indulge freely in the vanities of the world, so much so that all their precious time of former years was entirely taken up in these sinful indulgences, and your ears were saluted with the words, "Papa, Mamma, O, I don't like to die, I am afraid to die, I am a sioner, pray for me." Many, yea very many have passed away with the past year uttering language of a similar nature.

Fathers and mothers, let me entreat you as a lover of your souls, ask yourselves the solemn question this New Years week, "have I done my duty to my children and family as God's word and my own good judgment would indicate that I should have done, first for myself, and secondly for my family at large, or may not some of my own children, they of my own household, stand up against me in the day of judgement?" O, do have an eye upon yourself and your children; and let this New Year cause you to form, within you, new resolutions for the better, and pray God that you may successfully carry them out?

Sons and daughters, how many of you were called during the year just passed to witness the last faint breathing of a kind Christian parent, one that often prayed with, and for you? Do you now recollect how the silent tear unbidden stole down your cheek, and perhaps fell upon the cold brow of your best loved friend on earth, how as orphans you sought the orphan's prayer, your heart broken and bleeding, almost, if not altogether willing to have the Savior to pour in oil and wines? Did you carry these feelings through all the past year and still out of the ark of safety, and do you mean to carry them through another year? Beware, there is danger ahead. Death may lay his icy hand on you before the present year closes, and lay your body low, and launch your spirit into eternity.

Ministers of the Gospel, have we been as faithful in our calling as we should, or could have been in the past year? Upon us hang weighty matters. Oh can we be so happy as to hear the Master of the house say, "you have been faithful in all my house, you have not shunned to declare the whole will and council of God. Now sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Fathers Kingdom." Such no doubt have passed away from our side, in the past year. Their voices are heard no more by us. Will we not double our diligence for the future? The present year may close the labors of quite a number of us. Who is ready when the Muster calleth?

Editors of the PILGRIM, you too have entered upon a new year. Your labors of the past year is before us. Your work when viewed from the present new era, is, like all of ours, in many things it might have been better, but upon the whole so far as my knowledge goes, it has rendered satisfaction pretty generally. This should give you some encouragement to you as the publisher of the paper, but I trust you too with the rest of us, will try to improve, correct, &c., as you pass along in the present year, which I trust may be a pleasant and prosperous one, one that may amply reward you for your labors that you may bestow upon the PILGRIM, and for the good that may grow out of the same spirituality, a crown of everlasting life. Carefully examine the matter intended for its pages by the light of the Gospel of Christ. Let every sentence be formed under the influence of the Holy Spirit so that nothing may appear upon the face thereof that will cause a blemish to be brought upon the purity of Jesus, or his holy word or in the least stigmatize our holy religion that we have based upon the chief corner stone. Pray much and watch not a little.

To all brethren and sisters, old and young, may this year be a pleasant and happy one. May the church of Christ rejoice in seeing many souls return from sin and unrighteousness to holiness and righteousness, so that if the Lord of heaven and earth sees fit to make his appearing that many, many might be permitted to go in with Him and feast with Him in His Fathers kingdom. Even so Lord, Amen. C. G. Lint.

ORIGINAL HISTORY OF THE BAPTIST BRETHREN'S BEGINNING IN AMERICA.

This manuscript was intended for the Pilgrim Almanac, but crowded out, we therefore insert it in the Pilgrim, hoping that it will be satisfactory, both to the writer and our readers. The copy was written in the German and translated by L. Furry.

There came from Swartzenau, Germany, several families in the year 1719 to Germantown, Pennsylvania, and in the following year, 1720, 30 families more, all Baptist Brethren, also from Germany, with Peter Becker their preacher. They came from different places in Germany to Germantown and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. These brethren organized a congregation at Germantown with their teacher, Peter Becker in the year 1821. After that, some of the Brethren moved to Conestoga, Lancaster county, some to Skippack, others to Oly and Faikens *Schwam fuugus. Then had they, at different places, their meetings with Peter Becker their preacher and overseer. (Then the brethren agreed to choose another preacher, and the choice, by a majority of voices, fell on brother Conrad Beissel for speaker, and John Hildebrand for deacon, assistants in the service at Conestoga, by the counsel of Peter Becker as †Bishop with the brethren at Germantown, because Peter Becker dwelled there. But Conrad Beissel at Conestoga soon caused some difficulty by commencing other ways (order) with the brethren of Conestoga and conceived an idea to keep the Saturday instead of the Lord's day as a seven dayer. After many and long admonitions, the church could not avail anything with Conrad Beissel to leave his own ways and to yield obedience to the Germantown brethren.) In the meantime, in December 1729, Alexander Mack, also arrived from Germany to Germantown. Then the congregation agreed with Mack to decide by voice of the majority of the congregation whether to keep the Sibbath or Sunday for the Lord's day, when 11 voices agreed with Conrad Beissel to keep with him, and 27 for Sunday, with Peter Becker and Alexander Mack. So Becker and Mack with the brethren in Germantown and Conestoga, proceeded as the majority decided. (But Conrad Beissel, upon his own hand, commenced the Cloister (or nunery) at Ephrata to establish the seven dayer, (Seventh day Baptist) and he has for a considerable time priestridden several brethren and sisters.) After Alexander Mack had died at Germantown in the year 1735 was Michael Frantz chosen for speaker and John Landis for deacon. In the year 1735, at Conestoga, Lancaster Co., Pa., Michael Frantz was speaker and Bishop about 12 years, from 1735 to 1747 and then moved West; after that came Michael Pfoutz in his stead as speaker and bishop, from the 1747 to 1769, 22 years in the Conestoga Congregation, where he then died at the age of 50 years, the 4th of May 1759. Then came Christian Longenecker in his stead as speaker and Bishop in the same Congregation from 1769 to 1772, a time of three years. After that, because the congregation had considerably spread, the Brethren concluded to divide the Conestoga into three districts in the year 1672, one district called Conestoga, the other White Oak and the other Swatara. Then were Peter Eichenberger and Jacob Stull appointed as overseer for Conestoga Congregation; Christ. Longenecker and John Zug for the White Oak, and Han Jacob Bashor and George Kline for Swatara, Berks Co. district.

In the year 1798 or 1800 was the Swatara district again divided into, two districts as Little and Big Swatara.

Now, or from this time, my manuscript covers the Conestoga Congregation only; written from time to time by Eichenberger and Jacob Stull. After Eigenberger went away, in the year 1801, was David Kemfer chosen to the ministry, and Jacob Stoll, Bishop. After that, while the Congregation increased, was in 1815 Jacob Pfoutz and Abraham Zug both chosen for speakers. In 1822 Jacob Stoll died in his 92 year. He was a Bishop 67 years.

In 1823 are Jacob Pfoutz and Abraham Zug, both, by the laying on of hands ordained to the office of Bishoprick.

1831 was Christian Bomberger chosen for speaker in Conestoga Congregation.

1832 David Kemfer died at the age of 81 years.

1841 Abraham Zug died; his age was 69 years, 4 months and 22 days.

October 5th, 1841, was organized the Tulpenhocken Congregation from a part of Conestoga, a part of White Oak, and from a part of the Little Swatara, and John Zug was chosen for their minister. Named Tulpenhocken.

1849 Christian Rupp was chosen for a minister.

1844 Joseph Myers was chosen for a minister.

1845 Jacob Reinhold became a minister.

1849 Israel Myers was chosen for a minister.

1864 Bishop Jacob Pfontz died, aged 87 years, 5 months and 25 days. Was a minister and Bishop 49 years in Conestoga.

Jan. 1864, again is the Conestoga Congregation divided into three districts, the one named Conestoga, the other Ephrata and the other West-Conestoga, and Samuel Harley chosen for minister.

1866 William Tries was chosen to the ministry.

1866 Samuel Myers and Jacob Hockman were chosen ministers.

1870 Isaac Sherk was chosen to the ministry.

1870 Israel Myers died, aged, 56 years, 4 months and 20 days.

MAIN MISSION.

Dear Brethren:—Being aware that your readers feel a desire to hear or read something about the Main mission, and as we ascribe our success, (so far as we may call it such,) to the blessings of God, drawn down by the united, and unceasing prayers of our dear brethren and sisters in our behalf; of which praiseworthy exercise your readers doubtless, love an honorable share; I will gratify them with an article on that subject.

We landed on our field of labor on the first of Nov. On Sunday the third we preached for the first time, and likely, the first sermon ever preached by a Bro. in that State. It seemed the Lord had a hand in making and opening so that we could preach several times that day, for owing to wet weather, the minister in charge, did not attend, and so we were invited to fill the appointment, which we did as God gave ability, and we learned, with a degree of satisfaction. But not knowing their customs and habits, we, at first, rather felt ourselves slighted, as no one seemed to take in hand to make arrangements for farther appointments, and when going to prayer, sometimes one or two, at other times none at all would kneel with us. At first we looked upon these things as indignaties offered unto us, but we soon learned otherwise, for some offered us their dwelling houses, at any time we seen fit to make an appointment, without first asking their consent, and as to kneeling in prayer, we also learned that mostly only those who audibly pray wil kneel; and the rest generally keep their seats. On the following Sabbath a similar vacancy gave us an opening at another Meeting-house. Thus we continued preaching, and visiting from house to house, until the evening of the first of Dec., when we had our last meeting with them, which made thirty-three meetings altogether. We had quite an affecting time when we bade them farewell, many tears were shed, many desires expressed to be remembered in our prayers: as well as desires made to return again.

The people among whom we labored are strictly moral, not only moral, but a majority of them are religiously inclined; in short, they answer very near to the testimony given to a Cornelius, "One that feared God, and gave much alms, and one that prayed always." Those Christian graces they measurably possess. Of this, we are witnesses; for that which they have been instructed in, they are quite zealous to carry out, whether Scriptural or traditional. As to almsdeeds, if we may judge by the hospitality bestowed upon us as entire strangers, we must decide they stand second to none with whom we ever formed acquaintance. Where-ever we came we shared the very best they had, and that with such a degree of cheerfulness that betokened the act to be done as "unto the Lord," "in the name of a disciple," "praying always," may be equivalent to regular attendants on prayer which we found those people to be who make a profession. Generally speaking they, are an intelligent, orderly, well informed people: especially well versed in the Holy Scriptures; at the same time like the Ethiopean Eunuch, have need that some one guide them, so that they may understand what they read. Some may wonder why we returned so soon when we had such a prospect before us. I will give our reasons which have been satisfactory, so far, to all we met. A severe New England winter was at the door, in fact, already set in. About 8 inches of snow was lying when we left, with a fair prospect of it accumulating every day, and which sometimes falls to the depth of from 5 to 6 feet, and then the horses nearly all sick so that those who could not wade the snow, were deprived of attending meeting, and we had no other way of getting from place to place. On account of the horse disease our labors are confined to quite a small circuit; which, for a time we much regretted, but afterwards considered it to have been providential, thus demonstrating that by perseverance an interest can be awakened among those people, which we could not have learned by going from place to place.

Love to all.

D. M. Holsinger.

NEW YEAR.

A cheering thought pervades many minds at the approach and opening of of New Year's day; it being the beginning of the year, and also the next in the year, January, which means two faced, looking back over the past and forward upon the new.

While in meditation over the past, many meanderings come clustering around the mind, in drawing a picture of the workings amidst the human family, knowing that there is a supreme Being that rules in heaven and earth, who is unchangeable; yet many seek to find him in various places that he has not said he could be found.

When Christ was born he was searched for by many, even the wise of the world but he could not be found, only where he had told them through prophetic language. So with the first month, its only place among all the twelve is at the beginning. From this we learn that God cannot be approached, only by his appointed ways.

When we were brought into existence, his law controlled the same, and we learn that many live but a few minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, or years and pass away like the passing years. Some in sickness and sorrow all their days, some in luxury 'till near the last, not lifting their voices in thankfulness to the great I Am. How many can say with the beginning of the New Year, that I am a christian, my ways are of God's appointment, when God calls I obey, hear him, and answer, 'come unto me.'

Dear reader, are you as obedient as the New Year, or why can you not date your return to God with the year? When sickness prostrates you, you must obey, when death comes you will obey, and when God calls to judgement, obedience comes again, and when the words that all who are accountable can read or hear read, "come ye blessed, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," or "depart ye workers of iniquity into everlasting punishment prepared for the devil and his angels." What joy if the first salutes our ears, but what sorrow if the word depart? Remember you and I will obey one or the other. O, may we take heed to our ways while in the present life, knowing that we can look back over the past year and speak of its changes, drouth and moistening rains, of sickness and health, of joy and grief, families whole and broken, but of the present and coming year we know but little; but we hope for God's blessings and a fruitful year, with health and strength. Think what your feelings would be if you were to give me many rich gifts, but in return I would treat you unkind and unthankful, think! think!! Stop, and think how you have spent the past year, and what thy future career should be to be obedient.

Now dear Pilgrim your twelve months have closed and the new has begun, may your progress be with the progressing year as fruitful as the year is desired to be, ever abounding with truth, strengthening and encouraging brethren and sisters on their way home, with strong invitations to sinners to turn—bring food to the hungry and water to the thirsty that they may rejoice while the angels of heaven unite to praise God, that the lost is found the dead alive and the number of worshipers increased. Your pages have been welcomed by many, and may they be more so in the coming year, that no contentions find way to thy pages but peace, harmony and good feelings rule.

A happy New Year, a pleasant close, with the bright prospect of entering into the haven of eternal rest.

FROM OREGON.

Dear Brethren and Friends:—In compliance with the request of many of the brethren and friends that I met with in the state of Iowa, I will say that I left my present home on the 2nd. day of September enroute for Iowa. Stopped with the brethren in Jackson Co., Rogue River Valley, Oregon, four days, had one meeting. Preached the funeral of our respected young friend John Henry Wimer, who died the 28th. of Aug. in his 22nd. year, had a very attentive congregation. From thence we traveled to California, stopped with the brethren there near Lathrop only a few days, had one meeting, visited a few families, viz: Eld. George Wolf, Bro. Peter S. Garman, Bro. Jacob Shelly and Jacob F. Flory, and a few others, who all treated us very kindly. On Friday morning the 13th. of Sept. we took the emigrant tram for Omaha, thence to Iowa. Arrived at Bro. Nathan Millers near Lacona, Warren Co. Iowa on Saturday the 21st., had four meetings here, one person was received into the church by baptism. We had a very pleasant time with the few brethren and friends who reside here, and others who met us.

On Tuesday morning the 24th. Bro. Jacob and sister Cynthia Shoup, who started for their residence in Marion Co. Iowa, took me in their conveyance. Had one meeting in their neighborhood and from thence they conveyed me to my old residence near South English, Keokuk Co., Iowa, at which place we arrived on Friday evening the 27th of Sept. Here I remained a little over one month attending to some temporal affairs, visited a great many of the brethren and friends, was present at three Communion Meetings, one near Dresden in Poweshiek Co., one near my old residence and one in the south-eastern part of Keokuk county, also was present at a good many other meetings. Was met with a very kind reception, was very well treated, and enjoyed a feast of fat things. There were six persons baptized in Ke kuk Co. while we were there. Saw many brethren with whom I had enjoyed happy seasons in days and years that are in the past; and while there it was renewed again. On the fourth Sunday in Oct. was the last meeting I was at in Keokuk Co. There was a very large collection of brethren and friends, the attention and order were very good and their seemed to be a very good feeling among the brethren. In all prabability our next meeting will be in eternity.

On the first of Nov. we were again on board the cars enroute for the far West. Arrived at Altoona, Polk Co. Iowa next morning, stopped with Eld Georg R. Baker remained with them and other brethren over Sunday was present at three meetings. Here we also had a very pleasant season with the brethren, was very kindly received and entertained. Stopped a few days in Rogue River Valley, Oregan. Arrived at our present residence near Sublimity, Marion Co. Oregon the 20th of Nov. found all well. Thank God. Had a very pleasant trip and good health, traveled nearly six thousand miles over mountains, deserts, valleys and plains, exposed to dangers in various ways, but the good Lord watched over us and kept us from all danger. Thanks be unto his Great name. The brethren here are in usual health and there seems to be a growing interest among them. On last Sunday there was one person baptized making fourteen in all since we moved to Oregan, which was last Oct. a year ago. We have never yet regretted our moving to this place, the Lord is here and we can serve Him as well here as elsewhere.

Now I will close by tendering my heartfelt greeting of love to all, also my thanks to the brethren and friends for their kind treatment exercised toward me. Your unworthy servant would say to all our dear brethren everywhere, remember us in your prayers.

David Brower.

Sublimity, Oregon.

The apostle says we are "epistles, known and read of all men." They read us every day, while perhaps they have no desire to read God's word; and the information they get from reading our daily lives, is the evidence to them of the real value of the religion we profess.

FAMILY READING.

One of the most important duties of the head of a family is to supply its members with an abundance of good reading, carefully selected, to meet the wants, tastes and mental capacities of each. No parent can be negligent of this duty without incurring the greatest responsibility and violating a sacred trust. As good reading matter finds its way into a home, the very atmosphere of that home, gradually, it may be, but surely changes. The children begin to feel a new and brighter life opening before them in knowledge, duty and love; they talk about men and places, books and authors, the past and the future, and discuss the issues of the present. New fields of usefulness and pleasure open for them, and out of this number will come forth intelligent, and if the right kind of moral influence is thrown around them, good men and women to fill honorble places, and become useful members of the church and of society.

The periodical literature of the day is so abundant and so good in quality that by careful selection, the best thoughts of the greatest men may be reached, on all the branches of science, the industries and religion. The already long list of good books is constantly increasing, and at prices within the reach of even the poorest by a denial of useless, harmful and expensive luxuries, and appropriating the savings to such purposes. Then those who have inbibed a love of reading, study and improvement, and the investigation of new and useful topics are less likely to be led astray by the light and erroneous views that will certainly be presented to them all along their pathway through life.

EARNESTNESS.

The late Rev. Rowland Hill, in once addressing the people of Wottan, raising himself, exclaimed, "Because I am in earnest, men call me an enthusiast. When I first came into this part of the country, I was walking on yonder hill, and saw a gravel pit fall in and bury three human beings alive. I lifted up my voice for help so loud, that I was heard in a town below at a distance of near a mile; help came, and rescued two of the sufferers. No one called me an enthusiast then: and when I see eternal destruction ready to fall on poor sinners, and about to entomb them irrecoverably in an eternal mass of woe, and call aloud on them to escape, shall I be called an enthusiast now. No, sinners, I am no enthusiast in so doing, and I call on thee aloud to fly for refuge to the hope set before thee in the gospel."

OUR ANTIETAM LETTER.

CHRISTIAN WORK.

"To do good and to communicate forget not." So says the Apostle Paul. I shall perhaps never forget these kind words, nor the manner in which they became deeply impressed upon my mind. On the occasion of one of our lovefeast meetings, a short distance from this place, about five years ago, I met the first time, a dear brother, Elder S. who lives beyond the mountains in Adams county. He bore the marks of age, his beard and hair being silvered with the frosts of advancing years. He was experienced in life. I, youthful and had but a few weeks before entered the ranks of the army of Jesus—"a new creature" in the gospel world. It was in the evening, at the close of my first communion with the church, I met him, and among other of his words, were the words introducing this letter. They were impressed at once, and remain indelible. It proved a keepsake, and if that brother's eye should trace these lines, I will take occasion to say, "thank you." The words gave me an earnest not to be a selfish Christian, but to say a word for Jesus, now and then, and thus communicate the grace and experience of our holy religion. "To do good" is to do as Jesus did, for "He went about doing good." Therefore, my christian readers, "let your light shine," and may we prove by exemplary and earnest lives that "none of us liveth unto himself," but for the purpose unto which we are called and fitted by the Gospel.

We are Christians, and by this we profess to be followers of Christ. We profess to have repented of our old, sinful life; to have faith in Jesus; to have been baptized as Jesus, our unique exemplar was in the flowing stream, and to have received this Spirit, to be "a new creature," and to "walk in newness of life;" to live by prayer and faith and love and hope; to represent our absent Master. How do we fulfill our high and holy calling? If by self-examination we find ourselves wanting, may God help to take heed, lest we fall short. "To do good and to communicate forget not." Yea, "forget not."

But says a correspondent, "How can I do any good?" You cannot of yourself. All our help must come from Jesus, therefore, He said, "Lo, I am with you always." As surely as we love Him, and "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called," so surely will He go with us each day to help us say a word for His glory, say a word to create hope in some desponding breast, or shed a ray of light in some heart which is dark with sin, or a word of advice to "an erring brother," or a word of comfort to a bereaved heart. You feel an interest in those around you, then speak a word about their welfare, and thus help them as Jesus gives you help. So there are ten thousand ways to "do good" in the world. Please read 1 Tim. 4: 12 and Titus 2: 7.

You can all talk for your own personal interests, say something for the cause of Christ, also. Many of you can write letters, and I think too, you might write news and christian thoughts for the PILGRIM. The long evenings have come, and I trust we shall soon have plenty of good, cheering words coming through the public press. Let us have reports of news, statistics, &c., from every congregation. The grace of Christ be with you all. MONITOR.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN GAMALIEL AND NICODEMUS.

For the sake of properly illustrating the early history of John the Baptist and Christ, we attribute the following conversation to Gamaliel and Nicademus, and may be presumed to have taken place a short time after John commenced preaching in the wilderness.

Gamaliel. Well, Nicademus, which way this morning?

Nicademus. I think of going beyond Jericho, and perhaps near the Jordon.

Gam. Near the Jordon! What is going on there?

Nic. A somewhat strange and very peculiar person has been preaching there for the two last weeks; and I learn that the wilderness during the past few days has been almost alive with people, who never grow tired of hearing him preach.

Gam. What, a man preaching in the wilderness, who can he be?

Nic. By many who have heard him he is believed to be a young prophet.

Gam. Perhaps it would be much better for us to be very careful about such pretending prophets; as he may be another Judas of Galilee to rebel against the Romans.

Nic. He is not of Galilee; from what I have been able to gather, so far, it appears that he is from the hilly country south of Bethlehem.

Gam. What is his name, or has he any?

Nic. His name is John; the most of the people call him John the Baptizer.

Gam. The Baptizer! why is he called that, he don't baptize I hope?

Nic. Yes I have been told that all who are persuaded to follow him are baptized in the river Jordon.

Gam. He certainly cannot be a person of really great intellectual ability, or else he would certainly have visited that department of my school devoted to the "law and prophets."

Nic. He is said to be quite eloquent, and most remarkably well versed in every department of the Holy Scriptures.

Gam. You say he is from the hilly country, south of Bethlehem?

Nic. Yes, that is the general rumor.

Gam. Are you certain to what tribe he belongs, and who his father was?

Nic. I have not yet been able to ascertain the correctness of that matter: about ten years ago I saw a very handsome and intelligent young man in Hebron, who, I learned, lived not far from there, and the people called him John, and I concluded at that time that he might be the son of one of our priests, as I knew that one of them had a son by that name, and whether this is the same person, I am not quite able to tell; if he is then I know all about his parents.

Gam. [Studies a few moments, and slowly says.] Well now it slightly strikes my mind that I saw that very young man about ten years ago, and I am not certain but that I knew him when he was a boy.

Nic. And indeed! is it possible! and where did you happen to see him?

Gam. One beautiful day in seedtime, when Luke, the eminent physician of Antioch, Matthew, the tax gatherer of Capernium, and I were passing near the wilderness, we saw a noble looking young man seated upon a large rock that lay near a beautiful spring just at the foot of the Jordan bluff, with a measure of honey, and some locust by his side. He was reading from a small roll, which Matthew said was the book of Malachi, in the Hebrew language.

Nic. Did you enjoy the pleasure of conversing any with him?

Gam. When he saw us approaching, he gently folded the roll from which he was reading and placed it in his bosom. When we drew near where he was seated, he arose to his feet, and with a modest and humble bow saluted us with these beautiful words, "Grace and peace be unto you;" we much admired his manly courtesy, and greeted him with the salutation of our fathers "May thy days be long on earth" He bowed, but made no reply, though his countenance gave expressions of secret sadness, mingled with a ray of unknown hope. Never shall I forget the strange feelings that thrilled my bosom, when I heard the voice of the man of the desert. Silence prevailed for the space of one minute—all nature was still, then I simply remarked "I hope you are our kinsman by blood" He gently said "I am of the tribe of Levi: my father was of the course of Abia, and my mother whose name was Elizabeth, was of the daughters of Aaron"

Nic. Did you learn his fathers name?

Gam. Not for certain. Luke, who during this time was carefully contemplating our interesting stranger, remarked: "Gentle sir; are you not the son of Zacharias?" Just at this interesting moment we spied a band of Arab robbers making their way toward us, when the young man quickly said: "brothers make your escape, make haste." We rapidly made our way up a narrow vale, through the thick olive vines, and saw nothing more of our interesting Levite.

Nic. Did Dr. Luke know the young Levite's father?

Gam. While on our journey home he remarked that, he was of the opinion that he saw the same young man, some three years before that time. His father then lived among the hills, south of the city of David, and during his protracted illness, had called for medical aid, and it fell to his lot to visit him (being in Jerusalem at that time) and while there saw this young man, who was then about seventeen years old. Luke further remarked that when he saw him in his father's house he was reading the same roll that he had at the spring, and he thought he could recognize his features.

Nic. Do you remember anything of his appearance?

Gam. It was at least ten years ago that I saw him, and he was then a finely built young man, large black eyes, and hair of the same color. His complexion was somewhat affected by the desert sun, nevertheless his countenance strongly indicated a powerful mental capacity.

Nic. About what was his age?

Gam. Agreeable with what Luke intimated we judged him to be about twenty.

Nic. How was he dressed?

Gam, His manner of dress gave him the appearance of a prophet. Matthew conjectured that he might be a hermit.

Nic. Can you distinctly form an idea of what material his clothes were made?

Gam. He wore a large mantle, which presented a strange appearance and in all probability was made of camels' hair. This was drawn close to his body by means of a leathern girdle.

Nic. Did you learn whether he was living with his parents at that time?

Gam. Luke stated that if he was the son of the priest Zacharias, his parents were dead, having died some two years before that time; and Matthew remarked that he was living in a secluded cave not far from where we met him, and spent the greater part of his time reading the sacred rolls.

WE ALL MIGHT DO GOOD.

We all might do good
  Where we often do ill;
There is always the way
  If there be but the will,
Though it be but a word,
  Kindly breathed or expressed,
It may guard off some pain,
  Or give peace to some breast.

We all might do good
  In a thousand small ways—
In forbearing to flatter,
  Yet yielding due praise;
In spurning all rumor,
  Reproving wrong done,
And treating but kindly
  The hearts we have won.

We all might do good,
  Whether little or great;
For the deed is not gunged
  By the purse or estate;
If it be but a cup
  Of cold water that's given,
Like the widow's two mites,
  It is something for heaven.

A TALK WITH THE LITTLE ONES.

It may be of some interest to you, my little readers, to tell you that after enjoying a pleasant trip from my home in Ohio, I arrived safely and well at the PILGRIM office. I never told you that I was going to make my home with the PILGRIM family, but the Editor knew it very well, and don't you think he requests me to write to you. Are you not glad that he remembers you? I am. I'm so glad he has introduced us. You see the Editor wants us to become acquainted. We thank him for it, but would feel more thankful could he think of some way to have us acquainted in the right way, but I suppose he knows his business, and thinks it best to remind me of a whole group of little wisdom seekers whom I have almost forgotten.

How I wish I could find some excuse for my long delay; but I can't, and if I could there would be no use of framing a whole column of excuses.

But what a slow way of talking this is. Excuse my little patience. I had almost forgotten how well you like to read, but what shall I write? How I wish some of our little readers were here in the office to-night to tell me what to write! I can half guess the many subjects you would have me write about. Some would want this, that and the other until I would get so tired listening that I would be tempted to tell some little mischievous urchin to pour all the ink out of the stand and fill it up with honey, so I might write a real sweet letter—one that would begin with love and end with love.

I wonder how you have spent your Christmas. May I not feel happy in believing you had a good time? I will tell you how I once saw a man spend Christmas. He spent it in a drunken fit; one of the worst kind of fits men, and sometimes boys, ever get. You see he thought it would look big to get drunk on Christmas, but, Oh, what a thought. I'll never forget that time as long as I live. A man drunk on Christmas. It looks bad enough to see a man drunk on any day, but will our little readers tell us why it looks so awful bad to to see a man drunk on Christmas?

CARRIE'S STORY.

"Please, Carrie, put your sewing away and tell us a story? See its getting too dark to work."

"Well, what shall I tell you about?

"Little Willie and his dog, Captain."

"Wait one minute till I get Percy on my knee, and then I will commence."

As soon as they were all seated, Carrie began:

"In a country very far from here, there lived on the borders of the forest a poor wood-cutter. He had seven sons, the youngest of whom, Willie, was only eight years old. He was a good, obedient child, and was his father's favorite. One day the old wood-cutter felt so ill that he was obliged to stay in his hut, and not go out to his work at all. About noon he became so much worse, that he told Willie to go at one and fetch his brothers; and to tell them that their poor old father was dying. Willie ran as hard as he could to his brothers, and gave them their fathers message. The six brothers immediately set off for home, on the way disputing who would have the hut, who the ass, and who the large dog, Captain. When they came to the hut, the old man could scarcely speak. All he could say was,—"I give you all the hut, you six oldest, will have the ass, and my boy Willie, shall have the dog."

He then died.

Poor Willie cried as if his heart would break, but his brothers railed at him and told him to "hold his tongue."

The next day they buried the old man, and the day after they told Willie that they were going a day's journey into the forest and he would come with them. Willie asked if he might have Captain with him, and his brothers said "yes." In a few minutes all was ready, and they started off.

Just about dark they came to an open nook, and there they there stopped for the night. Soon they were asleep, and there was not a sound, except now and then the distant howl of a wolf. When Willie woke in the morning, he was alone. He called his brothers loudly, but there was no answer. His dog was still there with him and Willie said cheerily,— "Come, Captain! we will go home." They set off through the dark woods. At dark Willie was not home, but had to stay in the forest. Just as they were asleep, a huge wolf sprang at them from a neighboring thicket. Captain sprang at the wolf, caught him by the throat and choked him. That night they slept little, and Willie was very glad when morning came. They pushed on all that day, and just as Willie was ready to sink from fatigue and hunger, he spied a light, not very far off. He struggled toward it, and at last came to a gate, which he opened and walked straight up to a large stone house. Willie knocked, and an old woman opened the door. She asked his name; he told her "Willie Bernard." She told him to come and bring his dog. She gave Willie some supper, and the dog a plate of scraps. After supper she asked his history, and told him he might live with her. Willie and she lived happily for the rest of their days.—Young Folks' Rural.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—As the readers of the PILGRIM have been called upon to notice the account of a circumstance that transpired in London, perhaps it will not be amiss to promulge our view after surveying that given by Bro. Slifer as he earnestly inquires if there is anything wrong in the case. The service being called Dedication and Benediction of children in lieu of baptism is certainly sufficient for us to gather all we want regarding whether he expects the child to be baptized when it arrives to the age of discretion. The children of Israel killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month and roasted it with fire. Should they have killed it on the tenth day when they drew out and took it, struck the sideposts and lintel with the blood and then sod it in water in lieu of roasting and performed their ceremonies, we would hardly wonder if they intended to roast that which had been boiled: neither should we consider or make an ado whether they pleased God with their service, when God had said, "Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire." Ex. 12: 9. We are not under the jurisdiction of Levitical priesthood for which we should be thankful as the comers thereunto could not be made perfect. But the priesthood has been changed and there must of necessity be a change also of the law which required the violent to take it by force, and this force rent the veil or the temple from the top to the bottom and gives the scarlet dyed sinner, and the unclean access by accepting the conditions which "Wayfaring men, though fools may not err therein." Isa. 35: 8. It is said that here are over one thousand different forms of religion at the present day. If there were a thousand, exactly nine hundred and ninety-nine would be going wrong if Jesus' prayer availed anything when he implored the Father thus: "Holy Father keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." John 17: 11.

I do not rightly understand Bro. Slifer when he asks, if christian parents should ask us to bless their children. The prayers of the church should coincide with Jesus' prayer that we may be one; and I hope that our members may never become so sickly as to ask such a thing. Should the world make such request let us not publish them christian parents nor Christ-like people or we shall prefix and diminish God's word and be in danger of their blood being required at our hands.

Bro. Slifer inquires "who will say that he did wrong in thus gratifying them when he had such an illustrious precedent?" Jerobeam ordained a feast like unto the feast that was in Judah and offered upon the altar. But his priests were of his own make which had not been consecrated to communicate virtue. They had a precedent, their altar was fashioned like those in Judah, and yet they must hear from the man of God the lamentable cry, "O, altar, altar, upon thee shall priests be offered which offer incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

It is claimed by various sects at the present day that men can bless each other and communicate the Holy Ghost by the virtue which is in them, but as our Savior gave us no such promise we may but expect to reap the reward of the ungodly by adding to "the prophecy of the book.

Peter told those on the day of Pentecost what to do for the remission of their sins. Ananias told Paul that it would wash his away, and this same Paul declares to the church at Corinth "that other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." And I have no fears that our elders in Annual Meeting will ever suffer a foundation to be laid to displease God, and rob his son Jesus Christ of the honor, "who has redeemed us with his own blood that he might purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." Pure religion and undefiled before God is to visit the sick; and when we visit our sick members; we should give all the comfort in our power to soul and body, what is more consoling to the afflicted christian than the promise connected with annointing. If we inform them of this, which is our duty, few would die without sending for the elders to annoint them in the name of the Lord. I have often been asked of infant consecration, &c., yet I have the first time to give the plea that our church don't do it. But my answer to them that are such is this: Jesus declared them fit subjects for his Father's Kingdom before he took them up in his arms. Although it was once said that the fathers had eaten sour grapes and put the childrens' teeth on edge, but God now says that we shall not have occasion to use this proverb again, as the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, and attempting to purify or better that which God has made pure would be to hew out cisterns that can hold no water. And simultaneous to this, I fail not to tell them that while their babes are safe in the arms of Jesus that they are in a strange land and can only cross "by the washing of regeneration," Tit 3: 5. which is the will of the father, and Jesus says that if any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, but no promise previous to this, after they have gone out of the way.

MILLERSVILLE. Pa. }
Dec. 25th 1872. }

Dear Readers of the Pilgrim:—It has been some time since you have heard from me through the columns of the PILGRIM and now as I have a little recreation from the general routine of study I purpose leaving you hear from me, although I may not have much of interest to communicate to you. Since my arrival at school I have given myself wholly to study, consequently have not had time to write on subjects that would be of interest to the readers of the PILGRIM. I can assure you however that although I do not at present, take an active part in the work of publication, or in contributing to its columns, I am none the less interested. At some future time, perhaps not far distant, I expect to resume my labors with renewed energy. I am much interested and often feel like putting my hands to the work again—a work that we have the evidence of having been productive of good, and hope that it may be instrumental in performing a much greater work for the upbuilding and advancement of the Redeemers Kingdom in the future

On Friday evening Dec. 20th, school closed for one week. A large number of the students went to their homes to spend the vacation, but as it is some distance to my home, and the vacation being short, I remain in the vicinity of the school. It would have afforded me much pleasure to have returned to the old mansion house, and the PILGRIM home. If there is a place dear to me on earth it is home, and I claim there are many reasons why it should be. Cold and hard must be that heart that can be indifferent of it, especially when kind parents reside there. The feeling that clings to parents has more of heaven in it than earth. But our feelings are not always a rule of action, and I therefore deny myself of the pleasure that I might have realized from a visit to my home. On Saturday morning Dec. 22nd, I went to Lancaster City about four miles from Millersville. Here had the pleasure of meeting Bros. G. B. and H. B. Brumbaugh, who were on their way to Philadelphia, but stopped off here to remain several days. There was preaching at different places until Tuesday evening. The weather was very cold, yet the meetings were generally well attended, and some interest manifested. I accompanied Bros. during their stay here, and enjoyed myself much. I formed a number of acquaintances and found the brethren and sisters kind and sociable, alive and active in the performance of the Master's work. Bro. H. B. B. informs me that the prospects for the PILGRIM the coming year are good, and this information gives me encouragement. I hope that our brethren and sisters are going to take a greater interest in behalf of the PILGRIM than they have heretofore, and if so we can expect to accomplish more in the future.

On Tuesday morning Bros. went on to Philadelphia, and I returned to Millersville again. Things are very dull about here now. Of the five or six hundred students, there are perhaps not more than a hundred here now. I spend the time in my study, and feel much refreshed from having a little recreation.

It is now Christmas morning, the time that is hailed with joy and gladness by all. The stealthy steps of time have carried us on to the verge of another new period of time, and just before the old, shaggy, tattered year takes its flight, there is a general animation; the cold selfish feelings that are sometimes so prominent, are covered by those of kindness and love, every action indicates a heart in which burns a brilliant flame of love, and thus earth approaches nearer the likeness of a Paradise than at any other period of time, and why should it not? Surely the remembrance of that great event, the presentation of the greatest gift of which we can conceive should dispel all those narrow, contracted, selfish feelings and fill the soul with ecstasy. It is true we are receiving manifestations of God's goodness daily, and hourly, and these are reminders of this goodness, and should awaken feelings that should cause a perpetual flow of gratitude.

"But O, thou bounteous giver of all good,
Thou art of all thy gifts the crown."

His gifts, His kindliness and love are apparent wherever we look, but on this glorious morn, we have God manifest in the flesh, presented to us, and He is truly the crown of them all. This consideration is what should give the day its history, and to the Christian, it is a thought that awakens emotions of a higher type than those occasioned from any other source.

But I will perhaps become too lengthy. There is one subject I wish to direct attention to before we close. Since I have been here, I am more than ever impressed with the necessity of having a school conducted by the brethren, and situated among the brethren. If we had a school of this kind our brethren and sisters who wish to attend school could feel at home, and our children who are not connected with the church would be less exposed to influences that are productive of evil. The school here is not sectarian, and all sectarian feelings are, in a measure, avoided, but the influence is not such as is calculated to bring our children to the church. There are three here that belong to the church, and perhaps four or five of the brethren's children that are not members, and at the different schools in Pennsylvania alone, there are perhaps hundreds attending school. Now it would certainly be better if these were brought under the influence of the church. I have been making observations in reference to these things, and think I have been in positions to make them correctly, and my conclusions are that the schools generally are very dangerous places for our brethren's children. Even if the schools are unsectarian the general influence is to drift them into the popular current, and besides this, there are various amusements that are looked upon by popular christendom as being harmless that the Brethren look upon—and I think rightfully too—as being productive of evil. I do not suppose there are any of our brethren that would be pleased to have their children engage in dancing as an amusement, yet it is much practiced at some schools at least, and is looked upon as not being harmful. It is not necessary that I condemn it as an evil, I have my opinions in reference to these things, but do know that it has the appearance of evil, and should not be engaged in by Christians, and our youth should be taught to look upon it as improper amusement and of a low order. I might refer to many things of a similar nature that are carried on at schools that tend to evil. In all these things our brethrens children are as likely to engage as any other, and I was told of one that engaged in it very freely during this vacation. I suppose if those parents knew it, they would not appreciate that knowledge very highly. How much better for such if we had a school located near a church, and at such times have them attend preaching instead of engaging in such amusements They would enjoy themselves just as well, and be free from the many temptations that are presented at such times. Besides this, our brethren and sisters want a school where they can feel at home, where they can attend regularly, services conducted by the brethren, and enjoy their society. We cannot feel at home at many of the schools, and it is especially so with our sisters. There are many that neglect their education on this account, and I think it is high time that better educational advantages are placed within their reach, I believe that it is just as important that our sisters be educated as our brethren. It is not merely the attainment of facts that will fit us for some calling in life that we want, but we want culture, a strong, healthy, vigorous mind,—a mind that is capable of thinking clearly and accurately. This culture our sisters need as much as we. They have just as important positions to fill in life, and I see no reasons why their education should be neglected. I may have more to say in reference to this subject in the future. I hope that a move will be made soon towards the erection of school buildings designed especially for the church. I would enjoy myself much better if I could be surrounded by the church, and I believe this is the experience of all our brethren who are attending school.

J. B. B.

Dear Brethren:—I have been thinking of writing a little for the PILGRIM for some time, and as there is no meeting to-day that we can attend, I will improve my time in reading and writing. I have been wondering and thinking much of late as to how I could do some good to somebody, and seeing the liberality and kindness of the dear Editors of the PILGRIM in sending it for $1.25 in case any body wished to make any one a present of it. I adopted a plan, that is, to send the PILGRIM to a few dear friends that I think will like it and probably pay for it after they read it. If I don't see their name in the money list some time before the year is out I will pay for them myself. I expect there will be some that will think it, if they do not tell me, that I had better keep my money and let some wealthy members do that instead of me, as we are really poor folks, but I am afraid the rich ones would say they could not afford it.

Now dear brethren and sisters don't think hard of me for writing the way I do, I mean just what I say. Who is it that has not got some dear friends yet out of the ark of safety or on an erroneous path, probably, that might be saved yet before it is too late by simply reading the PILGRIM, as I think you will all admit that it contains much pure Gospel truth, and as the Gospel tells us that one soul is worth more than the whole world, and as there are so many erroneous teachers in this world, I think the brethren have more than they can do to preach the truth to everybody. I think the sisters ought to help in the great work by writing for our periodicals and sending them to all the outsiders they can, and by letting your neighbors read them after you have read them. I am convinced that most people like to read the PILGRIM whether members or not, and probably, like myself, they never had the Scripture so plainly explained before as it is in the PILGRIM as I must confess that it was through this paper that I had my eyes opened to the awful condition that I was in, and I think and hope that many more will see as I did before it is too late, and as it was through the kindness of a brother that sent the PILGRIM to us that I got acquainted with it. I feel as though I could not be thankful enough to him for the precious gift

OUR HOLIDAYS.

For a long time we looked forward to the holidays with the expectation of having a pleasant recreation, but as the time approached our labors seemed to increase and found that the only way to get free of office duties would be to leave. Bro. Geo. and ourself had, for some time, under contemplation, a trip East and concluded this would be our only chance. On Friday p. m. we started for Lancaster, Pa., and reached the home of Bro. Rineholds about 9 o'clock where we were kindly received and spent our time with this family until the next evening when there was an appointment for us at the Neffsville Church. Next A. M. (Sunday) at Enas, some 3 miles north of Lancaster and in the evening at Neffsville Church, also in Lancaster, we filling the appointment at the former place and Bro Geo. at the other. At these appointments we had the pleasure of the assistance and society of Eld. Rider from near Elizabethtown. Bro. Rider labors in the German and is a man of much Christian zeal, courteous, kind and sociable. He was accompanied by Bro. Gibble, a deacon, who gave testimony to our labors, as is the custom of some of the eastern churches.

According to arrangement, our time was now up for Lancaster, but as the meeting seemed to grow in interest, Bro. Rinehold prevailed on us to extend our time until Tuesday morning. On Monday we attended the funeral of brother Herr's child and in the p. m. visited the household of Bro. Peter Grosh who came into the camp at a late hour but abounds in love for the cause. We spent a pleasant season with the family and they seemed to be much encouraged. In the evening we held our last appointment in the Neffsville church. Notwithstanding the weather was extremely cold, the meetings were well attended and considerable interest manifested. Some three decided in favor of Jesus, and we believe a number of others were almost persuaded. This church is under the charge of Eld. Rinehold who seems to rule well and has the confidence and co-operation of his members. The membership is sociable and disposed to entertain those who place themselves within their households. We enjoyed our stay with them much. We made a pleasant acquaintance in the home of Bro. B. Evans. Here we met a young brother who accepted the call at the age of 12 years and seems to be quite consistent and faithful. His sister Sadie has also chosen the "good part" and there are several other brothers that we hope will follow their good example and flee the wrath to come before it may be too late. Bro. Evans intends to locate in Lancaster by Spring, having for one of his objects, the means of affording better facilities for the education of his children. This is right as we learned, by observation, that education to children is of far more importance than wealth. Wealth has been a great curse to the children of some of our eastern brethren.

During our stay at Lancaster we met our younger brother and Pilgrim associate, who is attending school at Millersville. He is deeply impressed with the necessity of having a Brethren's school in Pa., and has under contemplation to establish one in the vicinity of James Creek, as a better, more accessable and healthful location cannot be found in the State.

On Thursday morning we continued our journey to the city of Philadelphia and made our first call at the house of Eld, C. Custer where they were ready and waiting for us. In this family we call ourselves at home nor could we feel otherwise as there was nothing spared to make us feel comfortable. With his daughter, sister Mary, we have a special acquaintance as she had her first experience in teaching in our district and boarded with us. She is now teaching in Camden, N. J. and is succeeding finely.

The brethren in the city sold their old church in the Fall with the expectation of having a new one built again the Holidays, but were disappointed, so that we had not the pleasure of worshipping with the members in a church capacity, and the weather was so extremely unfavorable that we did not make many calls. On Thursday evening before leaving the city we stopped with Eld. Jacob Spangle and spent quite a pleasant evening in his family. At 11:40 we took the train for home, but when we entered the coach it was jammed with people and what little space was left was filled with smoke. We then entered a sleeping coach where we were supplied with splendid beds—commended ourselves into the care of God and slept soundly until late next morning. On account of the heavy fall of snow and the storms we did not reach home until Friday morning, when we found all well and several hundred letters that had accumulated during our absence. Since then our lot has been one of incessant labor, often until the midnight hour, yet we do not complain, but feel greatly encouraged at the increased favor which the Pilgrim is receiving everywhere. From present indications its circulation will be largely increased for 1873 and hope there may be a proportionate increase in its usefulness.

The Main Mission.—We received two reports of this Mission just a little too late for the last No. of 1872, and as they both contain about the same in substance, and Bro. Holsinger's was partly in type before Bro. Longenecker's was received, we hope he will excuse us in not publishing both.

Pilgrim Almanacs.—On account of the large number of subscribers coming in we may possibly have made some mistakes in sending the Almanacs. If any have not received them before or with this number, let us know and we will supply.

Behind Time.—On account of press of business we are a little behind time, but will be all right in a short time.

Little Sallie called so early to be an angel in heaven we hope, with the dear parents to meet thee in glory!

Sleep, little prattler, gently sleep,
Beneath thy new made earthy mound;
Whilst sunbeams through the osiers peep,
And birds make music all around.

Rest, little prattler, gently rest,
Thy little pilgrimage is o'er;
Now nestle in the Savior's breast,
Safe on the bright and shining shore.

POETRY.

MY BIRTHDAY.

BY LAURA.

"The years creep slowly by," we're older grown you say,
Ah, no! my friend, on lightning wings they speed away;
Another year! my heart throbs wildly with its loud Amen,
As cycling in its course the day has came to me again.

Upon the hills of life—how many have we gained?
What sights have seen, what lessons well attained,
While anxious care has left its trace upon our brow;
From childhood's happy then to woman's sadder now.

Ah, me! my friend we're older grown in worldly ways,
We love the trumpet tones, the magic voice of praise,
We've put aside our innocence with every childish toy,
And things of sense, too oft our precious time employ.

Did we but read aright the lesson of the hour,
Did we resist for aye the subtle tempter's power;
Could we temptation's luring snare evade,
Then not in vain would be the debt on Calvary paid.

Our feet have wandered far, Oh, God! to Thee we cry,
And to thy arm we haste, too thee for refuge fly,
For there, 'tis only there we'll find abiding rest,
And in thy loving smile, will be forever blest.

Then ever speed the years on lightning wings away,
Nor ask with tearful eyes for days and years to stay;
They've borne the echo back to "Him who dwells above,"
The record of our life—the golden gleam of love.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN GAMALIEL AND NICODEMUS.

Continued.

Nic. From what I have already learned, I believe that to be the very young propbet who is creating such intense excitement in the wilderness, and if so, I surely know much about his parents. His father and mother died about twelve years ago, leaving an only son, whose name was John. It has been nearly ten years since I last heard of him, and after summing up all that I have been able to gather so far, I conclude that the same John is preaching near the Jordan.

Gam. About what do you presume his age to be at the present time?

Nic. He is said to be about thirty years of age.

Gam. Well the young man that I saw near the large spring ten years ago, was abont twenty, hence at this time he would be thirty. It is very likely that he is the same person who is preaching beyond Jericho. Were you acquainted with his parents?

Nic. Oh yes, I knew his father quite well, and have often seen his mother.

Gam. Who was his father?

Nic. Zachariah, he was a priest of the course of Abia, and his mother was Elizabeth, she was of the daughters of Aaron.

Gam. That agrees with what Luke remarked respecting His father, and while at the spring the young prophet told us that he was of the tribe of Levi, his father being of the course of Abia, and his mother, Elizabeth of the daughters of Aaron. But I am led to confess that I really don't believe that I was ever acquainted with his father.

Nic. Never knew old father Zacharias! You certainly have seen him quite often; he was at one time one of our priests of the course of Abia.

Gam. When?

Nic. Nearly thirty-one years ago; his term or days of ministration expired about twenty-one months before the death of Herod the Great.*

Gam. You certainly must be mistaken, I don't think he served in that course at that time.

Nic. You really ought to remember him, as, according to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense at that time.

Gam. It may have been, but it fails to impress itself on my mind in that way.

Nic. There is one thing which I know you have not failed to remember.

Gam. What is that?

Nic. Nearly thirty-one years ago, and about twenty-one or two months before Herod's death, we were standing near the temple, when an aged priest of the course of Abia passed in to offer incense: he remained there so long that all the people marveled that he stayed so long in the temple, and when he came out he could not speak unto us, for he beckoned with his hand, and remained speechless, and we all concluded that he had seen an angel. Now you remember this, I know

Gam. Yes—certainly, I knew that pious old priest, and is this prophet in the wilderness his son?

Nic. From what I have been able to learn, so far, that is my impression for his name is John, and that is the only John that I know of among the Levites.

Gam. Well now I am glad to hear of that. Before my father, Simeon died, he used to talk a great deal about these good old people, who lived in the hilly country south of Bethlehem, and often wished to know how Elizabeth's cousin Mary, who resided in Galilee, was getting along.

Nic. Perhaps your father was well acquainted with these people, and also had some knowledge of their son John.

Gam. O yes! Since we have been conversing of these interesting events my memory is rapidly filling with the conversation of my father, respecting the Levite family. He knew the lad quite well, and admired him very much. But John, had a second cousin near his own age, living in the city of Nazareth, who appeared to awaken a remarkable interest in our family. I have not heard of him for quite a number of years. But more about the young prophet—is his appearance good?

Nic. His dress is similar to that you saw ten years ago in the wilderness, and his diet is said to be composed, principally, of Locusts and wild honey.

Gam. I think I must take young Saul with me, and go and hear that remarkable person, but for the present I must retire to my school-room.*

Nic. I would be pleased to learn something more of the prophet' second cousin who lives in Galilee, if you be pleased to tell me when we have more time.

Gam. Call some evening and after looking up the matter I think I can relate to you some very interesting accounts of his birth &c. [They both separate, and in the evening of the next day meet at the house of Gamaliel where their conversation was resumed.]

Gam. Well Nicodemus, as you have just returned from the Jordan, I presume you can tell us all about the young prophet.

Nic. Soon after leaving you yesterday morning, I learned that the road near Jericho was infested with a band of Arab robbers, so I judged it safer to postpone my trip a few days.

Gam. I presume that you have been thinking very much over the remarkable events that are just now transpiring in our long forsaken land.

Nic. My mind has been employed during the last two days with these interesting events Everybody is making investigations.

Gam. I presume you have heard a great deal during the day.

Nic. Yes, I have been spending all my time talking and examining the sacred records. I presume you are ready to relate to me that story of Johns' second cousin, although I heard a great deal of him to-day, I was conversing with a man who resides near the sea of Galilee.

Gam. Did you learn his name?

Nic. He stated that his name was Zebedee. Two of his sons, James and John, were in company with him.

Gam. I know him well, he is one of the oldest fisherman on the coast of the sea of Galilee. I also enjoyed quite a pleasant interview with Matthew of Capernium, who was on business here. But what did Zebedee reveal to you of John?

Nic. He said but little about John, only stating that he was well acquainted with his second cousin, and told me many things of this strange young man.

Gam. I am truly glad to learn more about him, though I formally knew him in his younger days, and gained much information of him in my interview with Matthew. But then what had our fisherman to say of him?

Nic. He appears to know all about him, and a great deal of his parents

*Herod surnamed the Great, died in the Spring of the fourth year, before the commencement of the Christian era.

*Gamaliel was a distinguished teacher of the Jewish law, and president of the Sanhedrin thirty-two years.

TO SISTER K. B. OF OHIO.

My dear sister in the bonds of Christian love and union; I feel like penning a few words of encouragement for you, and all others, similarly circumstanced, who have our blessed Masters cause at heart. From personal acquaintance, and otherwise, I am fully persuaded you have an ardent desire for the welfare of souls, and the prosperity of Zion. Having, yourself in youth, consecrated your all to Jesus, it is natural you should have a concern for the young, and feel like devoting your life more and more to the purpose of causing them to enlist, as soldiers of the cross. In your love and zeal, you ask, "What can I do for Jesus?" It is to answer this question, that I now take up my pen.

I have no doubt, you feel the need of the assisting grace of God, in a work so important. We should all feel "that of ourselves we are nothing," then will we put our dependence in Him whose promises are so full of comfort. Believe it, though you are young, you can do much for Jesus. Remember that the influence of the young, falls with power upon the hearts of the same class, and, also have a peculiar, and beneficial bearing upon the minds of the more aged. All around you, you have young associates, some have named the name of Jesus with a hope of salvation, others have not, but are yet out, exposed to the lowering clouds of God's indignation and wrath! In your every day walk among them, and conversation with them, you may do Much for Jesus. Let them see and feel, that you really enjoy the peaceful and happy influence of "pure and undefiled religion," and that the simple pleasures of the world, and fascinating influences thereof, have no charms for you, but rather let them see, that with you, the cross of Jesus hath influences that are brighter, sweeter and dearer than aught else. With a meek and humble spirit, and chaste conversation, use every means in your power, to win their affections from the world, that they may turn them heavenward; and thus be the means of causing, through God's blessings, the wicked to turn from their evil ways, and cause your fellow soldiers to cling with a tighter grasp, to the cross of Jesus.

I would not advise the casting of "pearls before swine" but under fitting circumstances, let us not be ashamed to speak of Jesus, while in the society of the worldly minded, knowing, that often the right word in the right place, may be as precious seed, that may eventually bring forth good fruit. "A word fitly spoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." In all things dear sister, "be as wise as serpents, and harmless as doves."

Next, we will speak of the Sabbath school, where you may do much for the glorious cause of Jesus. There you have labored in the capacity of a hand maid, in the nursery of the Lord, and I am glad to believe your labors, with those of all your co laborers, have not been in vain, and that you are encouraged with the knowledge, that in that relation, you can be instrumental in the hands of God, of doing something for the building up of Zion. It is an important fact, that first impressions are of such a nature, that it is hard to remove them. Oh! then what a noble work it is, to labor week after week, to fasten upon the tender mind the truths of the Bible, and infuse within the precious young souls the love of a crucified Redeemer. In that sphere, dear sister, you can do much for your Savior, the church, and precious soul. Ask God to prepare you for the work, and enter upon your duties with convictions, that it is a matter of importance, no less than the eternal interests of dear and precious souls. Work with a will in all places, and at all times, and through the blessings of God, your labors will not be in vain in the Lord. Why should you spend your time and talents for Jesus? Ah? yes, why did Jesus lay aside His glory in Heaven, and come down here and labor in this world? Was it not to seek and save that which was lost? and that includes you and I. Shall we not then labor for that FRIEND who did so much for us, and shall we think it a hard task to labor a few days, for those precious ones around and about us, that they may be partakers with us in that great salvation? And again, we say, should we not work for Jesus, when we see just ahead, the glorious reward or gift of God which is eternal life—yea an eternal crown of glory, and a place of shining brightness, amid the stars of Heaven? O then dear sister K. we would say to you, and to all the dear ones of the household of faith, let us labor while we have time and opportunity, yes let us

"Work for the night is coming,
Work through the sunny noon;
Fill brightest hours with labor,
Rest comes sure and soon.
Give every flying minute
Something to keep in store;
Work for the night is coming,
When man works no more."

A few more days of labor, a few more seasons of meeting and parting here in this world, and then, if faithful, we die in the Lord, and then rest from our labors, and THEN mortal shall put on immortality and THEN meet to part no more. And there in the bright fields of living green, we will see the fruits of our labors brought to perfection through a Saviors love; see precious souls basking in the smiles of God's love, that were induced to take the first step upward through our influence and labors of love. Oh! the joy of meeting there, father, mother, brothers and sisters, associates' and an innumerable company of angels, all singing anthems of glory, honor and praise to Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

OUR CHRISTMAS GIFT.

This morning, Christmas day, we look back through the long train of time of 1872 years, to that when Christ, from the root of Jesse, made his appearance in the manger of Bethlehem, and we behold with joy the great and glorious promise of God fulfilled; "A child is born unto us." This scene caused the angels to rejoice when they brought the glorious news to the shepherds, who were shocked with fear, but the angel said, "Fear not, for we bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people, for unto you is born this day, a Savior in the city of David which is Christ the Lord." This caused the angels to shout through the air "Glory to God in the highest, peace upon earth good will to men." Now we see the Shepherds hasten to the place, when they had seen it they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. Next in turn, we see the wise men from the East coming to Jerusalem, who were moved by a star which they saw and they asked, "Where is the new born king? we have seen his star in the East and have come to worship him." This troubled king Herod with all Jerusalem, and Herod soon envied this child and sought to kill it, but God removed it from Bethlehem after the wise men had worshiped it and bestowed their gifts and treasures upon it. I heard it preached that the wise men committed an error when they went to Jerusalem to inquire from the king and his subjects, but it looks to me as if they had done what every wise man should do, go where they can get Scriptural evidence to find the way to Jesus who was born king, and it was not the case as we are told by some, that the wise men lost sight of the star because of stopping at Jerusalem, but there is the only place we learn the star first appeared unto them in all their journey and went before them, until it stood over and above where the child was, hence the wise men could not mistake themselves in their worshipping, because they had the Word of the Lord and the star to guide them in the right way and to the right place. They were not satisfied without having the testimony of God's Word in this matter. Let us all follow the wise men's example, always consult the word of God to tell us the way to Jesus, and then start the way the Word directs and God will not fail to send the star to accompany us all the journey through, 'till we come where He is that we may be there also, that we may see his glory and yield up all our treasures to Him. Let us always remember in all we do how great the love of God is to usward in this Christmas gift, who became the way for us, and he gave us many bright examples. Here is a good one for the youth of 12 years. When He began to be about His Father's busines, and he was also subject to His parents, to give all the good children an example for them to follow Him, and finally come unto Him and obtain the Kingdom of Heaven. But young men and women, He also gave you an example and also told you that you shall keep the commandments. He also tells you that you cannot live by bread alone, and that you must give an account for every idle word you say. He told you you shall repent and believe the Gospel, and if you believe and are baptized, you shall be saved. He told you if you weep here you shall laugh, but if you laugh here then you shall weep. He gave you and I no example of sporting and laughing, but of weeping and praying, and of doing good to those around Him. He told us we shall take up our cross and follow Him daily or we cannot be His disciples, that if we are ashamed of Him and of His words then will He be ashamed of us before His Heavenly Father and His holy angels. He also told us He would come again, and no one knoweth the day nor hour therefore He wants us to be ready, always to watch and pray, for in such an hour as we think not, He will come. And to those that will say the Lord delayeth His coming, such He will give their portion with the hypocrites in outer darkness where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Then my young friends, never spend the Christmas day in idle talk and foolish amusements, much less my brethren and Christian friends, do not be found at the idol of a Christmas tree or some pic-nic, but come to Christ the true Christmas tree. Upon him hangs all the fruit of eternal life, and He will give it to you without the aid of Santa Claus. Brethren, be not found in the preacher's gambling shops, but keep yourselves from idols is the prayer of your well wishing brother.

TO A FREE PEOPLE.

The time has come in which it is necessary for all men and women who have within their breasts a single spark of love for their Creator, and the love of liberty to be on the alert. Secret societies have their organization in almost every known corner of our free and independent nation. What is the grand object of these institutions? What benefit can be expected from these organizations? Nothing. They are a curse not only to those who are outside these societies but also to those who belong to them. Every member of the order of Masons is bound by oath to disregard the law of Christ! Every member is bound to regard those who oppose them, as an enemy and oppose their progress in life in every possible manner! They are bound to support their own members in application for any office of trust or position of any kind, in preference to any one else, regardless of character! No one can fail to see the final result of such proceedings as these, and should use their utmost endeavors to root out from among the citizens of a free country, like ours, such corrupt organizations. But how shall it be accomplished? We think it may easily be brought about by the lovers of freedom providing they adopt the proper means. Let no lover of freedom countenance these associations either by supporting in office, or patronizing in business of any kind, any one who is known to hold a membership in these organizations. But says some devoted christian, if we do this we shall fail to obey the injunction to love our enemies, &c. Let me say to you, my christian brother, that this is not good reasoning; for there is no injunction upon record that requires any one to love the principles of the devil; but on the other hand, it is your duty, as a christian, to do everything in your power to destroy these principles; then let no man have any dealings whatever with the members of these organizations, and save themselves and posterity from a form of slavery more direful upon the people than that to which the Africans were subjected, in times that are past and gone.

LIBERTY.

A memory well stored with Scripture and sanctified by grace is the best library.

There is some promise in your Bible exactly adapted to every trying hour.

TRIAL OF FAITH.

That "Without faith it is impossible to please God," is a truth so manifest throughout all the sacred pages, that it seems sometimes we had scarcely need again be told; and this is indeed acknowledged by all Christian professors. But when the faith of all is tried, oh what a precious and rare virtue is that faith which is unto the saving of the soul. Then when it has passed through all the fiery ordeals and escaped all without a visible mark of a test, except that by repeated trials, it has become stronger and brighter, as "gold tried in the fire." But the apostle Peter says of them who had received like precious faith with them, (the apostles), that the trial of their faith being much more precious, than that of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

When the Bible is seldom read, and the divine sanctuary neglected, few trials of faith will be met, but if all that is commanded, and that is forbidden be carefully searched out, and held sacred and essential to our eternal well being, and a determination fixed to profit by them, notwithstanding any and every emergency, then sore and fiery trials will be met, and if the conscience then be kept void of offense, O, how precious that faith. Such a faith is not without works. Such is a living faith. To such a believer is the Gospel the power of God unto salvation. To such believers gave He power to become the sons of God. While faith as a mustard seed will remove mountains, what will such a faith not accomplish?

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JAMES HIPES.

OF THE ROOT RIVER BRANCH.

The subject of this notice was born near Tenglcaster, Va., March 4th 1803. In the year 1832 he emigrated to Ohio. Some time during the year 1836 both he and his wife came to the Church of the Brethren. In 1837 removed to Montgomery Co, Ind. From there, emigrated to the Territory of Minnesota, Fillmore County where he remained until his death, which took place on the morning of the 14th of July 1872. Between 3 and 4 o'lock in the morning, he winged his way to the Sunny Land from whence no traveler returns. His disease was not certainly known. He was afflicted for about seven years before his death, he very often had sick spells from which he would soon recover until the morning of the 14th he arose from his bed and dressed himself for the purpose of assisting a tenant who was living in one part of the house, (in case of sickness), and soon after he was dressed, he was taken sick. He walked to the barn, a distance of 6 rods, and returned to the house and sat down in the front door of the house, and in ten or fifteen minutes, he was treading the turf bound shores of an endless eternity. He gave mother and some others who were present the last parting hand, saying, "I must leave you now." Then to the celestial fields of glory, he quickly bent his way. He closed his eyes, and his spirit had taken its flight to a world unknown to us. Father lived a consistent member of the Church of the Brethren for about 35 years and we hope that he was prepared for that great and solemn change, from this mortal to immortality. Yes, father has gone over the river of death, but what a great consolation does the blessed hope afford us when we know that we shall meet beyond the Jordan of death, when this weary journey is done. Yes, we shall meet beyond the river where no farewell tear is shed, and how true the saying is. "When we are in the midst of life we are in death." Morning spread over earth her rosy wings, the Sun rose clear beyond the horizon, the gentle air whispered through the open door in which lay the still pale lifeless form of one who had been the joy of of my aged mother and lonely niece, who was left standing at that lone post of death. All was still, the monster death had done his work—father was gone.

"When shall we meet again
Meet ne'er to sever,
When will peace wreathe her chain.
Round us forever."

MEMORIAL.

"Death loves a shining mark." This has been fully verified in the death of Sydney Hyder Johnson, who departed this life, December 7th 1872, at the residence of his cousin, Mr. W. H. Hiteshew, Chambersburg Pa., in the 24th year of his age.

In writing this article, we feel that we are doing our duty, not only to a cherished cousin, but to our young friends who do not think of the uncertainty of life, and the vanity of this world. Sydney was not only a fine writer, as his contributions to many Journals testify, but he was a kind and dutiful son, a pleasant and agreeable associate. Of him it might truly be said, as of the young man in St. Mark's Gospel, "And Jesus beholding him loved him." Though he was not a member of any religious Society, he always entertained the greatest respect for religious sects, and to Rev. L. A. Gotwald of the Lutheran Church, who was assidious in his attentions to him during his illness, he expressed the strongest hope of a blissful immortality beyond the grave. He had implicit faith in Jesus—and confided fully in Him.

What Baca valleys had to be passed, before we could say—Sydney is dead; he has gone from among us, his pleasant smile, and agreeable conversation will no more be enjoyed. How sadly will we look over his books, and his writing materials, which were such a delight to him. We hope God will give us all grace to bear this sad affliction, and to prepare to meet him at His coming.

OBITUARY OF JULIA MALOTT.

The subject of this obituary was one among the number of some forty, who were baptized into Christ, in that section of country, within the last few years. A few years ago there were no members at that place: the people being principly Old School Baptists. The Brethren's doctrine and the faith of Jesus being readily received, the little pilgrim band was moving along happily, until sister Julia sickened and died. On Christmas we received a message, (being with the brethren at Welch Run attending a series of meetings,) of her extreme illness. In company with brother Jerry Angle, deacon, we repaired next day, to her house, but she had fallen asleep in Jesus. A heavy gloom not only hung upon the heart of the husband and family, but upon the whole community. On the 27th we followed her remains to the grave. She was the first of the pilgrim band called to pass over to the other side. In her last moments she gave an unmistakable evidence of a living faith in Jesus, desiring to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord, regretting that her husband could not accompany her. She left in peace, receiving a faithful promise from Jacob, her husband, to accept Jesus and come after in the way. Our sister was beloved by all who knew her, she leaving an example for others to follow.

DILIGENCE.—We find in Scripture that most of the great appearances which were made to eminent saints were made when they were busy. Moses kept his father's flock when he saw the burning bush; Jacob is in prayer, and the angel of God appears to him; Gideon is threshing and Elisha is ploughing when the Lord calls them; Matthew is at the receipt of custom when he is bidden to follow Jesus: and James and John are fishing.

INTENDED REFORMATION.—How dangerous to defer those momentous reformations which the conscience is solemnly preaching to the heart!

THE GREAT EVENT.

"Glory be to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men." Luke 2: 14.

The above seraphic strain was heard in the night by those who watched their flocks by night, which caused the shepherds to say to one another: "Let us go to Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord made known unto us." When this was made known to them, they went in haste to Bethlehem, and when they came there they found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. When they had seen what was come to pass, they made known abroad what was told them concerning the child, and returned glorifying God for the things which they had heard and seen.

This glorious event occurred about eighteen hundred and seventy-two years ago, and it presents itself as fresh in our minds as if it had occurred in our age, for we derive the same benefits as those did who lived during the time the Saviour sojourned in this world.

This eventful circumstance caused the wise men from the far distant isles when they had "seen his star" to start from their distant land in search of the new born King to worship him. Psalms 72: 10. Isa. 60: 6. This was a time when the wise men opened their treasures and presented gold, frankincense and myrrh, which may have been of much advantage to Joseph and the mother of Jesus and the babe, as they had to take their flight to Egypt from the presence of a cruel king who sought to destroy the young child. When the child was but twelve years of age we may already learn a very important lesson from him, the time that his parents "found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors both hearing them and asking them questions, so that all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers." He went with his parents to their home and was subject unto them.

We find that the Savior was born into the world but the work of redemption was not yet complete, he had to lay down his life for his friends "and we are his friends if we do whatsoever he has commanded us." He had power to lay down his life and to take it again. "This commandment I have received of my Father." Here we can see the love of God in Christ Jesus concerning us, in sending his only begotten Son into the world to suffer and die, the just for the unjust to bring us to God. He suffered and died according to the scripture; yet the work was still not done, He had to be buried and rose again from the dead the third day, according to the scripture, which we find that he did, "Wherof He has given assurance unto all men in that He has raised Him from the dead." Now we find that "he has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, and in order to have the full benefits of what the Savior has done for us, we must become His adopted sons and daughters. He has exemplified the way and the only way to become his children. We must submissively follow him in all the ordinances blameless as he delivered them to us. "If children, then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs of Christ."

SAMUEL TEETER.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

Mr. Editor:—My mind is engaged at present, upon a subject which calls forth views which perhaps might be interesting to many of your readers, and which, with the blessing of God attending the weak effort, may produce good results. Time is moving onward carrying the human family on its rapid wings, not making any inquiry whether we are equipped for the journey or not. But while it is progressing, we are admonished almost momentarily as it rolls onward, that a preparation is necessary to journey down its rapid steps. We know not how soon we may be called from this stage of action. We have a plain directory, a sure and certain path to follow. All along that path we have written in unmistakable language: "Prepare to meet thy God", "My son give me thy heart", "Come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." Such and similar invitations are given throughout the entire law. We are traveling on a journey we expect never to return, we are only pilgrims journeying to a City whose builder and maker is God; that is, if we possess that pearl of great price, which was purchased on Calvary for sinful man.

The fountain is opened; the Savior has died and has risen, and is now interceding and pleading that we might live; offering a free salvation "without money and without price", a free gift; only look and live, "forsake sin, cleave unto righteousness", "to-day if ye will hear His voice harden not your hearts". Here mercy is freely offered and forgiveness is obtained. We have the Holy Bible where it is all explained. Time's march is onward; the unceasing wheels move forward; we are on a great battlefield; our enemy is satan, our true friend is Christ. Satan desires to have us that he may sift us as wheat, but the Savior says that He has prayed for us, that our faith fail not. Then let us trust in Jesus, and abide under his wing; fix our treasure in Heaven, and secure that rich inheritance, that invaluable prize, that brilliant crown, that true diadem, that sparkling gem, that will deck the true Christian in the bright realms of glory.

SUGGESTIONS FOR NEW YEAR.

Inasmuch as it appears to me, as well as to some others, that there is but little practical religion in the world compared to the amount professed, I will try to give a brief view of what I think would meet the approbation of God for 1873.

First we must be engrafted into the true vine Jesus Christ. Paul says, we are the children of God by faith in Christ, and so many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Now the crown is not at the beginning, nor at the middle, but at the end of the race. If we are true branches, we will bear some fruit, and endure the purging so as to bear more fruit; we should therefore offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to His name, &c. See Heb. 13: 14-15. How this "continually" should be understood. Remember the evening and the morning constitute the day, see also Exodus 29; 30 and to the end of the chapter. This should, at least, be a public sacrifice by those who are heads of families, twice a day, and if they see proper, seven times a day, and again at midnight, but those might be in the closet. And those of our brethren and sisters who are not heads of families, see that you honor your father and mother, or those with whom you dwell, in not putting any thing in the way of their family worship, and offer your private prayers continually, in behalf of all men. Love to God and love to man, should be the main-spring of all our actions. We should also strive to grow in grace, and a greater knowledge of the only true God and His holiness, and our sinfulness. Strive more and more to please God.

A BROTHER.

Youth's Department.

FOR THE YOUNG.

Dear Young Readers: Here I am for the first time with pen in hand, to tell you something, which we hope will not be inadmissable, about Jesus, as this name we know, sounds sweet to you. A long time ago, over 1800 years, in the days of Herod, who was a King, Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, not a rich, fashionable town but poor people lived there. For this reason the rich Jews refused to receive Jesus as being the Savior. Jesus' parents went up to Bethlehem for a certain purpose and while there Jesus was born, and as there was no room for them in the inn, they were compelled to lay Him in a manger, a place in which horses are fed. Dear children, think how poor they must have been, no money to get a bed to lay him on, or friends to administer to their wants. Think of this dear young friends, you who have good warm clothes and beds, and friends to care of you. About this time, King Herod wanted to kill Jesus and to accomplish this, he sent forth his armies and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem and in all the surrounding country, thinking that by this, he would kill Jesus. But the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph, the father of Jesus, and told him of Herod's work and that they must take Jesus and go to Egypt another country, which they did. So dear young reader, if you love Jesus, he will lead you out of all difficulties, yes, if the adversary tries to persuade you that it is no harm to put on fashionable things remember the story of Jesus, how poor, how despised he was by the fashionable, and that to be followers of him you must be plain, though the rich may laugh at you, Jesus was laughed at and was mocked. So Herod was defeated, and when Jesus arrived at the age of about 30 years, he was baptized of John, a man who "was sent from God," in the river of Jordan. Then he went up into a mountain and stayed there forty days eating nothing, when the adversary came and taunted him. Here is an important lesson to be learned from this. Jesus was hungry when the tempter came to him. Then he thought would be the best time to tempt him, he said, "if thou be the son of God, command this stone to be made bread." But Christ met him with truth and said, "it is written thou shalt not live by bread alone but by every word of God." So when satan tempts you to do anything wrong, tell him you cannot do so for Christ tells you not to do so. When Christ had ended his mission on earth, being taken by wicked men and put to death and laid in the grave, the third day an angel came down and rolled a stone away from the mouth of the tomb, which had been placed there by the Jews, and Jesus came forth, continued forty days, and then went up to heaven in a cloud, and now he is there, preparing a place for you, and if you love and obey Jesus, when you die you will go to him, and be happy forever.

CORRESPONDENCE

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

INDIAN CREEK CHURCH, }
Newton Co., Mo. }

We give this as an item of history as it seems from what knowledge we have of the officiating Elders, that this is the first Lovefeast held by the "Congregational Brethren." We are pleased to learn that in their order there is no very great deviation and hope the proper efforts will be made to affect a union. We should by no means divide on such small differences.

Dear Pilgrim Brethren and Friends: As there has not been any report yet from this little Church, I have concluded to give you a short one myself, that the many readers of this valuable paper may know that we are yet alive, and still have the privilege of obeying high heaven by practicing these most sacred principles and ordinances handed down to us by God through his Son Jesus Christ which was, and is to be practiced while the world stands.

On the evening of the 10th of Nov., this little body assembled to wash feet and to partake of the bread and wine, the emblems of Christ's broken body, assisted by those dear Elders, some coming two hundred miles. Those who labored with us during the meeting were Elders Daniel and Franklin Hendricks of Jasper Co.; Elder Isem Gipson of Cater co., Mo., and Elders Hopping and C. Shank of Lawrence, Kansas. The day was passed in preaching the word, exhorting and prayer. In the evening, all things being ready, supper being served the brethren and sisters surrounded the table, making one link as we were baptized in one body, perfectly joined together. The minister, on reading the 13th chap. of John, coming to the 4th verse, Elder Gipson arose from supper, layed aside his garments and girded himself with a towel, after that poured water in a basin and washed his brother's feet and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded, so on around the table. Each two and two washed and wiped each others feet. After ending this ordinance, ate the supper, but while some did eat, the minister took the bread and blessed it and broke it with his brother, after that each two broke the bread between each other, so on around the table, consequently this ordinance was performed. In like manner he took the cup, gave it to his brother, after that two and two supped together, on around the table, serving alike to brother and sister, as we cannot read of but one cup being used. See Mark the 14:23. First Corinthians, 11:25. What a glorious privilige this is, that we can obey the Savior in performing these commaodments? How happy it makes us feel, when we obey the law and do our duty? Christ says, "if ye know these things happy are ye if you do them." If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love. John 15: 10. Then if we strictly obey these commandments, we are a light to the world even as Christ says, "I am come a light into the world that whosoever believeth on me shall not be in darkness." Then dear young readers let us ever stick to the word and show our light by our works. Never shall I forget the order that was manifested at our little meeting in performing these ordinances. The world sympathized with us and said we were right. Bear with me dear readers for being tedious in stating to you our little meeting, for I would have you to know that we practice down here what we read.

As I promised that my letter would be short I trust you will bear with these few remarks. May God still add such blessings as we daily receive.

From a young pilgrim.

N. DICE.

Brother Brumbaugh:—I take the present opportunity to give you some church news for your worthy PILGRIM. Our church district was organized in June 1857, known as the Coldwater Church, and left in care of Elder Philip Moss who died in a few years after. Then we were left for some time without a shepherd, but the Lord protected the little flock, and some time after, others were elected to the ministry and placed in his stead, and the church slowly increased from time to time over a large territory until of late, it was thought necessary, for the sake of convenience and that there might be made a more extensive promulgation of the Gospel, to make a division and form two sub districts, which was fully established and ratified on last Saturday at our council meeting held for that purpose, by the assistance of Elders E. K., and Benjamin Beeghly of Waterloo Church, The newly organized district was then called Rock Grove district, with one minister, W. J. H Bauman, who was in the second degree of the ministry. The church then thought it necessary to hold an election and the result was that Bros. H. N. Lane and Philip Workman were chosen to the ministry and brother W. J. H. Bauman promoted to the office of bishop to take the oversight of that district, while the writer has the charge of the original district as above named, with the assistance of his co-laborers in the Word, Bros. Benjamin Ellis, J. E. Eikenberry and T. U. Tallhelm.

Now as the Lord has prospered us, notwithstanding the many impediments that were thrown in the way by the enemy of souls, we trust that God will still bless us, and that we will all go forth as bold soldiers of the cross in letting our light shine, and adorning ourselves with meekness and Godly fear, for in so doing we may be able to advance the Kingdom of His dear son, our Lord Jesus Christ. By the way, I will further say that our meeting-house that we have in progress is now stopped, as the cold weather came on before the mason work was completed. It is all done up to the gable ends and I expect will have to stand so until Spring. Now as we are all helpless, needy creatures we desire the prayers of all God's children, especially may those of our young in the ministry be willing to take up the cross and labor for the Master's Kingdom is my prayer. J. F. EIKENBERRY.

Brother Henry:—I, in company with Bro. Joseph Snowberger, started on the morning of the 7th of Dec., on a mission of love to the brethren, sisters and friends in Bedford Co. Pa., met on the train at Cove Station. Stopped off at Bloody Run—was there met by brother Isaac Ritchy and conveyed to his house on Clear Ridge and in the evening went to the Clearville Meeting-house, had a good meeting. After meeting went home with Bro. Ritchy. Next day, had meeting again at 10 o'clock, also in the evening. These meetings were well attended, good order and considerable interest manifested, After meeting in the evening, went home with friend Philip Grubb and was kindly entertained. Next morning, friend Grubb took us on his spring-wagon to friend Himes Grubb. In the evening, walked about three miles to the Werner school house, rather small congregation, weather disagreeable. After meeting, went home with friend James Grove and was kindly entertained by the family, much love and kindness manifested to us— have some reason to believe that they are not far from the Kingdom. In the evening, friend Grove accompanied us some three miles to the Clearville meeting-house, were requested, by different persons, to speak on the subject of baptism that evening, which we did as the Lord gave us ability. This was our last meeting at Clearville. After meeting went home with brother John Smith, was well entertained. Next evening, he and his wife and sons took us to the Clear Creek school-house full house and good meeting. After meeting, went home with brother Jacob Liugenfelter, well cared for. Next morning, went to Snake Spring Valley, had two meetings, 10 o'clock and evening. Next morning walked across the mountain, about seven miles, to Elder Steel's congregation, had four meetings, well attended and much interest manifested. On Monday morning we were taken to the funeral of old brother Frederick Oaks. Preached his funeral and returned home about four o'clock, found all well. We have great cause to be thankful to the good Lord for his protecting care exercised over us, while on this mission of love.

Dear Pilgrim:—I had thought not to give an account of our meeting at so late a date, but as church news is interesting, I have concluded to give a short sketch of our meeting.

On the evening of the 12th of October, the brethren assembled at our meeting house, Shiloh church, to attend to the ordinances of the Lord's house. The ministering brethren present were Martin Cosner and Wm. George from Grant Co., W. Va., and Solomon Buckalew and Z. Amon from Preston Co, W. Va., and others. Meeting opened by Bro. M. Cosner. Preaching by Bro. Wm. George to a large concourse of people. Good attention to the word preached. Followed by Bro. M. Cosner and Solomon Buckalew, with very appropriate remarks, after which the people were dismissed for a short time. Assembled again by singing, the brethren and sisters seating themselves around the table to engage in the most solemn thing belonging to the house of God. It is a solemn thing indeed to engage in these things, knowing that we must give account to him, the judge of quick and dead. We are truly glad to say that we had the best order manifested at this meeting for several years. Next day, met again for preaching at 11 o'clock. Sermon by Bro. Solomon Buckalew, to which good attention was given. Discourse from the following text: "Watch and pray always that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass and to stand before the Son of man." One baptised on Sunday. May the Lord help us to live in the future more conformed to his will, so if we meet no more upon earth, we may meet in the Celestial City where parting will be no more.

Dear Pilgrim:—I can not give you any church news, as most of the brethren can, but I love to read it, and that is the only comfort we have. We have not seen any of our ministerng brethren in this state yet, but we hope to live, to see the day, that the Brethren may fulfill the command in this place, which our Savior gave to His Apostles, on the mountain, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you", as we believe the people here in this country, are not taught to observe all the commands. I hope and trust, that some of the brethren will come and teach the gospel in its purity. We would be very thankful, to have some of the ministering brethren come and hold meetings here. Yours in Christ.

MOSES MOIST.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—On Sabbath morning, Nov. 10th, amid the inclemency of the weather, we felt very desirous of meeting with God's people in the Sanctuary, and after reaching there found, much to our surprise, that Bro. Daniel Snowberger of New Enterprise, Pa., would address us. After reading part of the 4th chapter of 2d Timothy, he selected for his text these words, "Preach the Word." We never had much of an opportunity of hearing Bro. S. preach, but we were deeply impressed with his sermon. By this text we understand that the whole Word of God is to be preached. This the Bro. tried to hold forth in its true light. We are not to take a part of the Word, and preach and practice it, and consider it part not to be observed and obeyed by us. Only a short time ago we were conversing upon the subject of Feet-washing when it was told us that Christ only washed His disciples feet to show his humility, and if we only acknowledge this humility of our Savior, it is not necessary that we perform the action. We do acknowledge that Christ showed his humility by washing his brethren's feet, but if I say I can be humble enough to wash my sister's feet, can any one believe it until I really show my humility by performing the action? Really not. The sermon was concluded by James A. Sell. Brother S. preached in a school house at foot of Ten in the eve. Following Saibath, November 10th, Bro. G. Myers addressed us at the school-house at Eldorado from John 1; 13. "Which were born," &c. Let us diligently strive for the religion of Christ that we may not be "born of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Let us not give heed to perverse doctrine but follow the words and examples of Christ, that we may not be found guilty of failing in one point, and that we may win the crown of glory and sit at God's right hand for

"'Tw'ill not be long our journey here,
Each broken sigh and falling tear;
Will soon be gone, and all will be
A cloudless sky, a graveless sea."

E. R. STIFLER.

Dear Brethren:—I will write a few lines for the PILGRIM. Brother S. S. Sherfy and I visited the brethren and friends in Washington Co., Va. We endeavored to preach to them the Word of the Lord a few days, had some good meetings with these kind friends. Thence we went to Ash Co., North Carolina. We found there a number of brethren, sisters and relations, and also kind friends. We preached the best we could by the help of the Lord, five or six days. We had good congregations and good attention to the word preached. The Lord opened the hearts of some, so that they brought forth fruits meet for repentance, and gladly received the Word and were baptized in the likeness of the death of the Son of God, and others made application. We bade farewell to those kind friends with tears, hoping that we will meet them again by and by. We set out for home, came by the way of Taylorsville in Johnson Co., Tenn.,—had a good meeting here, then we came again by the way of Washington Va., held a Communion meeting with the brethren and sisters;—a very large audience on Saturday night and also on the Sabbath. We then came home and found all well—had a happy meeting with the family. Thank the Lord for the blessing. May the grace of God and the Communion of the Holy Spirit rest upon all the Israel of God is our desire and prayer.

Kind Editors:—With this we send the names of our patrons, to your worthy paper for the coming year We however expect yet to add a few more names to the list. The PILGRIM meets with a warm reception with us, and we fondly hope that it may still continue in a manner that it may merit such patronage.

Our periodicals will aid us in performing our duties, if they give evidence to the wisdom that James speaks of as being "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy." We do think that the character of the editorial labors in the church has much to do with the union and love that prevails in the church. An Editor sustains very much the same relation to his readers, that the minister does to his congregation. Every thought or sentiment that he edits he is to some extent, sowing that in the hearts of his readers; hence it very conclusively follows, that published matter should be "first pure."

The names we enclose are from the west branch of the old Rome congregation, under the eldership of Bro. J. P. Ebersole. We have a colony of about thirty-five members, a convenient house in which we meet every alternate Sabbath in humble worship—have had nine accessions during the summer. Yours in love.

I. T. ROSENBERGER.

Gilboa, Ohio.

Dear Editors:—Being at leisure this afternoon, I came to think over the past and found that we could have improved it better, and which is lost, therefore we should improve our time and spend every moment for some good cause since "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should have everlasting life." My dear brethren and sisters in the faith, what great love God has manifested unto us. As the apostle says, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we shall be called the children of God." Now since the grace of God has appeared unto all men, and blessed us with everything to make our bodies comfortable, also with a knowledge to serve Him in His own appointed ways. Let us try to live faithful, improve our time by serving the Lord in love and sincerity that we may be prepared to follow the saints who have gone to their glorious reward.

The brethren of the Codorus Church, York Co., Pa., have built a meeting house this past Summer and Fall which is now finished. It is 70 feet long by 40 wide. We had the first meeting in it on the 14th of Dec. Saturday evening, Sunday forenoon and in the evening. Bros. Charles Royer and John L. Beaver of Union Co., Pa., were present during our meeting, preaching to us that glorious gospel of Jesus Christ, which Paul was not ashamed of, which is the power of God unto salvation. Our meetings were well attended, on Sunday evening the house was quite full of dear blood bought souls, listening to the Word preached by the brethren. May it have its effect through the grace of the Lord is my prayer.

On Monday the 16th the brethren left the vicinity of Logansville and went with Bro. Jacob Shamberger to Md., filling a few appointments there, they then left for the Upper Codorus Church where they ended their journey which they did on the 23d and then left for their respective homes. May God reward their labors with the crown of life.

Dear Pilgrim:—This area of the church is moving along slowly. There has been three added to the church by baptism, in the last year, and five by letter. There is a large field in this country, for the disseminating of the bread of life. When I hear of so many ministering brethren East, that travel mostly among large congregations, it makes me wonder why it is so. Brethren come out West among the scattered brethren, and labor for the cause; you can do much good. When traveling through this country, give us a call, as this is a good country, and room for all that wish a home.

SELLERS.—December 7th, A. D 1872, in the Lower White Oak church Lancaster Co., Pa., sister Amanda, wife of brother Peter Sellers, aged 48 years, 1 month and 6 days.

She suffered much which she bore with christian patience, and when she felt that the time of her departure was at hand she made choice of Elder Bro. David Garlach, Benjamin Eby and the writer to preach at her funeral. She then fully resigned herself to the will of the Lord and in her dying moments she left the strongest evidence of a glorious immortality. She leaves a husband and four daughters to mourn their loss which is to her, great gain. This family could scarcely be reconciled were it not for the words of the Apostle 2d Cor. 7: 10, "since the ties of nature are broken," &c. On the 6th her remains were followed to their last resting place at Brethren's Meeting-house near Manheim (said Co.) by a large concourse who mourned the loss. An affectionate wife, a kind mother, a consistent and praiseworthy member has gone to her rest. Funeral services from 2 Cor. 4: 17-18 and 5: 1 by the aforesaid brethren.

Thus has passed away a mother in Israel, leaving a vacancy in the church and family circle that cannot be filled. Her lungs were diseased for some years. Since early last Spring she was mostly confined to the room, and the last two months to her bed. She bore her affliction with christian fortitude, and in obedience to the demand of the apostle, called for the elders of the church and was anointed in the name of the Lord. In the morning of her departure, she addressed her youngest sons and said they were here and she was going to a better world—told them to obey their father and likewise called for other of the family and gave them the instruction of a christian mother and closed her eyes in death.

Funeral discourse to a large attentive congregation, from Phil. 1: 21.

She was sensible to the last, and was resigned to the will of the Lord, and without a murmur or complaint peacefully passed from earth away.

She leaves a sorrowing husband and three little children, and a large circle of friends to mourn her untimely departure. The little children now loose the kind care of a loving mother, which they so much need in this cold and sinful world, but we hope the Lord will provide for them, and direct them into the paths of piety.

Funeral services by the brethren from Heb. 13: 14. JAS. A. SELL.

ZIGLER.—Dec. 28th, 1872, near Waterside, Bedford Co., Pa., Aaron Zigler, son of brother Jacob and sister Mary Zigler, aged 29 years, 8 months and 7 days.

He was afflicted for several months, but able to go about most of the time. The morning before his death, had visited some of his children in town, and came home about 1 o'clock, and said to his wife that he felt very queer, and then in a few moments fell with a stroke of apoplexy. He suffered seemingly in an unconscious state, and breathed his last about 5 o'clock, p. m. He left a kind widow, and seven intelligent and affectionate children to mourn their loss, but we believe their loss was his great gain. We believe he left the strongest evidence of a glorious immortality. Our beloved brother gave the strongest proof of a living faith in Jesus; his daily talk was religion, in his house and out of it; he read his Bible daily to his family and his life cast forth that bright and heavenly lustre that gave evidence that there was reality in the religion of Jesus. If space would admit, I could write pages in proof of his heavenly life. His desire was to be buried at the Spring Run Meetinghouse, Mifflin Co., Pa. The brethren at said place was at the station, awaiting the arrival of the deceased and friends with ample conveyances.

☞ HOW TO send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ WHEN MONEY is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ EVERY subscriber for 1873, gets a Pilgrim Almanac FREE.

NOW IS THE TIME.

There seems to be a time for everything and among the many things that should be done NOW is that of gathering subscribers for the PILGRIM. Our agents, generally, are doing finely and lists are coming in encouragingly, but we still have room for a large number more which we feel certain can be obtained if our agents and friends will make a little greater effort. Our No. 1 for 1873 seems to give satisfaction everywhere and all that is necessary to have a largely increased circulation, is to let it be seen. Brethren and sisters, try it. Take with you a copy of the PILGRIM and the Pilgrim Almanac and see what you can do. Do not wait on some person else, but try it yourself. It is true, times seem a little close and money scarce, but our terms are so easy that all can read the PILGRIM and pay for it. Those who do not have the money now, let them send in their names and pay for it as soon as they can. All we ask of you is, not to send us such names as you think will not pay at all. We cannot afford to send our paper free to any unless they are really poor. For such we do the very best we can, and if some of our wealthy brethren would send us a little that they could spare we would do much more. Some are doing nobly in sending the PILGRIM as presents to such friends as they think will appreciate the favor. Much good has been accomplished in this way and we hope that many more will take advantage of our liberal offer for that purpose. Remember, when the PILGRIM is sent as a present it costs only $1.25. Now brethren and sisters, let us hear from you and see what can be done. There are thousands in the Church, as well as outside of it, that would be benefitted by reading the PILGRIM. We are prepared to accommodate, at least, 1,000 with complete volumes and Almanacs, so that none need fear that they cannot be supplied. Let us hear from you soon and favorably.

OUR ADDRESSING MACHINE is on hands and part of the list set up, so that some will have their names printed on their papers this week, and in a short time we expect to have them all ready. We have the McFatrick Machine, the best that is made, and works like a charm, putting the names on as fast as the papers can be handled. Any of craft wishing a good and cheap Addressing Machine should enquire of us or call and see it operate before purchasing any other.

MARIETTA NURSERIES.—Our readers will please notice the advertisement of this responsible firm. From this Nursery we bought our trees which are now in bearing, and have, in every case, proved true to name which is quite an important feature in ordering trees The proprietors are men of good standing and of known integrity, for whom our brethren can sell without risking their reputation. Any one wishing to enter a pleasant and profitable business during the winter and spring, should write at once for an agency.

THE Pilgrim Almanac is highly spoken of by all who see it, and are especially pleased with our improved "Ministerial Record." We still have a good supply and are waiting to give them FREE to every subscriber for 1873. To some we may have sent two copies; such would do us a favor by giving one to some person who would be willing to take the PILGRIM. Remember, we have none for sale.

THE Herald of Truth says: Bro. B. Warkentin of Russia, in company with Bro. Jacob Y. Shantz of Berlin, Ont., made a trip to Manitoba, in British America, north of Minesota, upon an invitation of the Canadian Government. They spent some two weeks there, after which Bro. Shantz returned home and Bro. Warkentin remained in Summerfield, Ill., where he intends to spend the winter. He seems to have been pretty well pleased with the countries in Manitoba.

CRITICISMS.—Bro. Slifer's article in No. 46, page 387, has called forth a large number of criticisms, but as it is sufficiently met by Bro. Gibbon in No. 1 for '73, we think it not profitable to insert any more while we have such an abundance of other matter that may be of greater interest. The writers will please excuse.

THE BAPTISM of John, whence was it, from heaven or of men? Under the above heading, Eld. B. F. Moomaw promises to write a series of papers. The first paper is before us and will appear next week. Eld. M. is a sound reasoner, and our readers can expect something worthy of notice.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND WEEKLY PILGRIM sent together for $3.50. Those who have paid us $1.50 for the PILGRIM, by sending $2.00 more can have the Phrenological Journal. Send us your names accompanied by the cash, and read the best Journal of the kind in the world.

A POP VISIT.—We, to-day, received a short call from our esteemed Bro. J. F. Oller, who manifests his usual life in the good cause. He thinks that Waynesboro, his place of residence, would be just the place for the PILGRIM Office. Had not James Creek such strong claims on us, we would certainly give the place a consideration.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

A Church Floor Gives Way.

On Christmas night a congregation of three hundred adults and children were holding a celebration in a Baptist Church in the seventh ward of Williamsport Pa. The floor gave way and the whole assemblage was thrown into the cellar below. The oil lamps were broken, and the church took fire: the flames were soon extinguished, however. The scene was terrible. By 11 p. m., all the killed, fifteen in number, were removed. About fifty persons were injured, some fatally.

FLOODS.—Portions of the country in Leicester, Derby and Nottingham England, are submerged from the late floods. In some sections of these counties the tops of trees and hedges only are visible. A heavy landslide has occurred near Dover. Communications with that town are interrupted. The town of Petersborough, in Northampton county, is flooded, and many of the inhabitants are compelled to take refuge in the upper story of their buildings.

OFFICIAL TITLES.—By a government circular, all public officials in France, in their communications to the heads of departments, have been ordered to suppress the title of "his excellency," and merely to use the simple address of "to the Minister of, &c," or "to the President."

Oregon, in October, 1871 exported to England $285,503 55 worth of wheat, and to South American ports over $35,000 worth of grain. She also sends into British North America not less than 200,000 bushels of grain to be used there.

It has been recommended that an intermediate census of the United States be taken in 1875, in order to ascertain the growth of the country during the first century of its existence.

EMIGRATION TO TEXAS.—The Mobile and Montgomery Railroad one day sold $1,256 worth of half fare tickets to texas, and the next $1,900 worth of emigrant's tickets.

TO THE APOSTLES.

Being a collection of historical quotations from modern and ancient authors, proving that a THREE-FOLD Immersion was the only method of baptizing ever practiced by the Apostles and their immediate successors. The author, after proving Trine Immersion to have been the prevailing practice, in baptism, the first 1500 years of the Christian era, commences with the fifth century, and traces a Three-fold Immersion, to within 33 years of the apostle John's death, and then proves it to have been the Apostolic method of baptizing, while Single Immersion was invented not less than 326 years after the death of Christ.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, postpaid, on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, $1.10; Ten copies, $2.00.

POETRY.

THE HOMELESS ONE.

"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests,
But the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

'Twas night-fall on Judea's hills;
The busy sounds of work were still,
The shepherd from the fold had gone
And sought his rest at home till dawn;
The busy sounds of childhood's play,
Had echoed from the hills all day,
And now from humble homes there floats
Soft lullabys—sweet mother notes;
The birds had sought their swinging nests,
The night winds rock them to their rest;
Not one of all the creatures here
But had some spot to it most dear.

The pale new moon had hardly set
Behind the brow of Olivet,
When slowly toiling up the steep
Came ONE who often came to weep
O'er man and all his woes.

The crowd had left Him—they had homes;
The beggar, even, who all day roams
In search of charity, had some shed
Where he could creep and lay his head.
But far upon that mountain height
Was ONE who knelt and prayed all night;
The dews fell cold upon his brow,
Bent low in supplication now!

He had no spot called home on earth,
He could not share in song and mirth;
He knew the bitter grief and pain
That must be his, ere he could gain
Redemption for lost, ruined man.
The courts and mansions of the skies
Were his, but he himself denies,
That he our woes and sins might feel,
And by his stripes mankind might heal.

Though wearied with his toil all day
Beneath the burning noontide's ray,
Night brought no rest to him, no home;
He knelt and prayed with heaven's blue dome
Stretched far above his weary head—
And this for thee! for thee were shed
His blood and tears, which cleanse from sin
And make us blest and pure within.

Oh! thou who longst for rest above!
Weary of all thy wandering here;
Take courage; rest upon his love;
In all thy grief he bore a share.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

"THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT. FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?"

This is a question of superlative importance in these days of progress in ingenuity, and the devious ways in which the children of men endeavor to allure, deceive, and impose upon the credulity of the honest, and unsuspecting. It has become very common even in the exhibition of cabalistic performances, in order to quiet the scruples of the more conscientious, for the dramatist to pretend that it in some way possesses the sanctity of divine authority, or divine influences, and so also with what may be regarded the higher order of the inventions, and institutions of men. Thus Mahomet professed to have interviewed the angel Gabriel, from time to time, who revealed to him that he was chosen of the Lord a prophet; and communicated that religion, that he delivered to his people. So also the Pope of Rome claims that by virtue of Apostolical succession, and the power of inspiration, as God's Grand Vicar on earth, infallible, it is his prerogative to change "times and laws" Dan'l 7:25, to abolish institutions ordained by Christ and the Apostles, and establish such others in their stead, as may from time to time be suggested to his mind; and the same is true to a limited extent among protestent Christianity. This principle has at least obtained largely in the world, and is sanctioned and patronized by the church generally; and no marvel for men are men everywhere, and subject to the control of the same influences and if not sternly resisted the tendency is to flow in the same channel, that channel being popular, as we sometimes hear the idea expressed that we are living in a progressive age, the world is moving on, and we are compelled to move with it.

Of the unauthorized institutions alluded to we might mention, as unscriptural, Free-masonery, Odd-fellowship, the various orders of temperance associations, &c. I would not be understood to object to these as moral institutions where nothing higher is pretended, but my idea is that they are entirely superceded by the pledge of Christianity and that Christians are unequally yoked when united in common Brotherhood with these associations. Therefore when we are brought within the range of any of these human institutions, and the temptation is presented to cooperate with them, we would do well to enquire in the language of the text at the head of this article, (with the necessary alterations), "Is Free-masonry, or this, that, or the other institution, from God, or is it from men?"

"If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth none." We need by no means be at a loss for the answer to any such question, for with a little care on our part to divest ourselves of human influence which may be brought to bear upon us by our surroundings, and "taking heed to the light of the sure word of prophecy," we shall most assuredly "be guided into the truth," for it is a peculiar trait in character of God's dealings with the children of men in communicating His will to signify it, in the most unmistakable language. In order then that we may know what we should do it is necessary that we have a command from God either directly expressed, or implied, "A command, says Wayland, involves three ideas. 1st That an act be designated. 2d. That it be somehow signified to be the will of God that the act be performed. 3d. That it be signified that we are included within the number to whom the command is addressed. Like an affectionate father, God has in all His intercourse with the human family from the giving of the law to Adam in the garden, down to the last command by our Savior and the Holy Ghost through the Apostles, signified His will in words and phrases suitably adapted to the human intellect, and farther He has given us the fullest assurance that he disapproves of everything that man presumes to do, apart from His authority, and that thereby His severest indignation is provoked. MORE ANON.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN GAMALIEL AND NICODEMUS.

Continued.

Gam. Did he inform you where the young man now resides?

Nic. Zebedee says he is living in the city of Nazareth, and John, who is about twenty-nine years of age, remarked that he sees him quite often, and that he and his brother James, have known him for a number of years.

James, who is well gifted in the use of words, proceeded to give the following description of him, as he appeared when he last saw him conversing with some of the learned in Capernium: "He is of lofty stature and well proportioned; his countenance is truly noble. The hair of his head is the color of wine, and from the top of his head to his ears, very straight and without radiance, but it descends from the ears to the shoulders in shining curls, and even further after the same magnificent manner. His hair is parted straight on the top of his head, after the manner of the Nazarenes, his forehead is smooth and clear, even without a wrinkle; his face free from blemish, and slightly tinged with red. His beard is the same color of the hair, and is forked, eyes very blue and brilliant. He has never once been seen to laugh, but many have seen him weep. In appearance, he is the most beautiful of the race of men."

Gam. Did they inform you what his name is, and how his parents are getting along?

Nic. James stated that all knew him by the name of Jesus, and he was living with his mother, whose name is Mary, but that when he was about thirteen years old, his father, whose name was Joseph died, leaving him to support his mother, which he did by working at the carpenter trade, which he in part learned of his father.

Gam. Did you learn how old Jesus is at this time?

Nic. Zebedee says that he is nearly thirty years old.

Gam. This is undoubtedly John's second cousin, whom we all loved so well.

Nic. You know that John is of the tribe of Levi, but Zebedee stated that Jesus is of the tribe of Judah, and how they can be cousins I have been trying to reconcile, as different tribes were not generally allowed to marry among each other.

Gam. That is perfectly clear in my mind since I examined the sacred records in the temple, and compared them with what I gathered from my interview with Matthew.

Nic. That is then one point which I wish you to clear up for me.

Gam. During my leisure, since I last saw you, I wrote down what I could gather of the genealogy of these two remarkable persons, and will simply read it to you: Mary, the mother of Jesus, was the only child of Heli, who was the son of Matthat. Unto Matthat was born two children the first was a son, whose name was Heli, and the second whose name I failed to ascertain, but will call her Rachel:—all these were of the tribe of Judah, having descended from David through his son Nathan. Rachel by the consent of the priesthood marries a man of the tribe of Levi, to them was born a daughter whom they named Elizabeth. Finally, Rachel's brother Heli become the father of a daughter, whom he named Mary, hence Mary and Elizabeth were first cousins. John and Jesus their children of course, are second cousins, though John by his father Zacharias was of the tribe of Levi, and Jesus of the tribe of Judah.

Nic. Well yes, that is clear now, but then there is another mystery in the matter which I have found no one who could properly solve it for me yet. I in company with Stephen the proselyte of Antioch, examined the sacred records and they do not appear to agree respecting the genealogy of Jesus.

Gam. In what respects do they differ? I think I can clear it up for you.

Nic. In the general record it is stated that "Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary," and in the private record it says that "Joseph the husband of Mary is the son of Heli: now then how Joseph could have two fathers, is not easily comprehended.

Gam. Well I can explain that. I was in the temple to-day, and Luke of Antioch was there, so we examined the records in relation to this matter, and found the same difficulty, but Luke who is well acquainted with both families gave the following solution of the problem: "If the general record is closely examined it will be seen that the genealogy of Joseph is traced through his ancesters to David, but in the private record it is traced from Heli to David; the difference is this: the general record traces the genealogy to David through his son Solomon, while the private record traces it to David through Nathen, the brother of Solomon. They are simply two distinct lines of descent. The first is the genealogy of Joseph, while the latter is that of Mary the wife of Joseph."

Nic. That is clear enough, but why is Joseph called the son of Heli, when Heli is the father of Mary?"

Gam. The reason is simply this: When Heli died he left Mary as the only heiress of what little property he owned in Bethlehem, and it was necessary that her genealogy be entered, in order to retain the estate of her father in the tribe to which he belonged. Then when Joseph married her, he became the son-in-law of Heli, but according to the law he was entered as the son of Heli, because he had married an heiress, and the estate

FIFTY YEARS AGO AND NOW.

What must we do to bring about a uniformity in dress among the members of the church, and keep the brethren and sisters from dressing so much after the fashions of the world, and what plan are we to adopt to get back to our fore-fathers and mothers simplicity and uniformity of dress? This question has been asked me by some of our beloved members often, "Can you not write a plan and have it published in our periodicals that we all may see how to act in union to bring about the desired reformation?" Now my beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, I want you to hear me patiently and weigh the matter in the scales of reason and good common sense, and see whether you cannot say amen to the truth or at least, do not condemn me before I get through, as I do not intend to write anything but what I know to be truth, and has come under my own observation during the past fifty years, or a part of it. To write all the events, changes and admonitions that I have heard given by our elder brethren and sisters for us to take heed to, time would fail me to tell. I am well aware of the tenderness of some on these parts, therefore try to handle the subject as smoothly as truth and brotherly kindness will admit.

In the first place, I will have to take you all back with me fifty years to see how they worshipped God and how humble they all appeared to be. How they were all dressed, and how they had their children dressed. I will now try to show how we have gotten away from the good and right way, first, and then it will not be so hard a matter to see how to get back again to the old Landmarks that our fathers and mothers have set up. Now let us take a look at our brethren seated behind the table, all have on the rounded coats, their hair parted on top of their heads, meek and humble looking men, you cannot see any difference in their dress, they are all alike. Now let us take a look at the sisters. Here they all sit together, all have their heads covered with a plain swiss cap, no edgeing, no lace for a border, no ribbands to tie them on, the cap, border and strings all of swiss. All wear a short gown, their clothing worn at that time was made by their own hands. Here we again see all uniformed; sisters all meek and humble looking women,—no pride among them, how beautiful the sight! We discover at the same time, the great love they have for one another, honoring and preferring one another—no evil word spoken against each other thus fulfilling the command not to speak evil of any man. Do you not think, my dear sisters, with me that God's blessings rested upon those good, meek, humble, loving sisters that lived fifty years ago?

We will now look at their children at church and see how they are dressed. Oh what a beautiful sight to see! All have on plain home made dresses with a waist string to draw them to their bodies, plain three cornered handkerchiefs pinned around their necks, and swiss caps on their heads. "What!" says one, "have caps on their little girls at meeting? I cannot see what that was for." All their daughters had caps on at meeting from the little child up to age of 20 years, whether they were members or not. We could tell our brethren and sisters at that time at sight and not only them but their children in the same way. Their children were not ashamed of their plain caps, I have seen as high as twenty little girls from five to twelve years of age, sitting together with their beautiful plain caps on, looking and listening at the brethren who were speaking to us about the goodness of God, I could not help but inwardly exclaim, O, what beautiful little angels these are sitting before us! Now I will try to tell those who cannot see what dressing their children in that plain manner was for. It was because they were bringing up their children for Christ, so that they would not get puffed up with pride and thus become ashamed of Christ and His Church. I knew a little daughter who got her cap soiled that she could not wear it to meeting, she would not go being ashamed to go without it being only eight years old. What do you think of that little girl? Not being a member by profession, and yet was ashamed to be seen at meeting without a cap on and some of you, who have been members for years, are ashamed of being seen at meeting with a cap on. Here we can see, to train up a child in the way it should go, is the only right way for us to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Now let us go to church meeting and hear the admonition of the church as given in by the visiting brethren, what they had found when visiting the members. What do we hear? There is too much pride creeping into the church. Some good sister had discovered that some were making their little children's dresses too much like the worldly people, too much after the vain fashions. Some brethren did not come in the order they should, and others chewing tobacco in time of meeting, spitting on the floor so much that those who sat next to them could scarcely find a place to kneel down, in time of prayer, without getting their clothes soiled with tobacco, and a great many other things not necessary to name. Then listen to our beloved elder brethren admonishing us and telling what these things would lead to if we did not strive against them. These admonitions were given at every meeting but pride still increased. Here let me tell where we first began to get out of uniformity. Right at our little children in the cradle. As long as the little ones in our cradles were kept plainly dressed and nothing unnecessary put on them by their mothers nor tolerated by their fathers, in short, as long as pride and fashionable dressing was kept out of our cradles, it was an easy matter to keep pride and fashion out of the church, but as soon as it took root in our cradles, then its progress was more rapid in the church. In the cradle was the door opened for fashionable dressing in the church, and some may ask who opened that door, was it Eve again? No, not altogether, Adam is also complicated in it. The sisters may have led the way, but the brethren appeared to be satisfied well enough to say nothing against it. We soon saw the difference in the appearance of the brethren's children. No more plainly dressed little girls at meeting. The sisters laid aside their short gown except a few who still wear them, the others made plain dresses instead, and soon all were in uniformity in the uniform. It was not so far from the worldly style, therefore not so much of a cross. It was a step down and was easier to make.

Now dear sisters, do not think I am going to say all I have to say about you, just keep cool a while yet, then I will tell you about us brethren also. I just want to tell you how we got out of the good old way of our forefathers and mothers in Israel and then tell you how we must get back again if the Lord will. A. J. Corbell.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON THE LANDMARKS.

"Remove not the ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set." Prov. 22: 28.

In noticing the foregoing injunction as a motto for the Pilgrim I was made to wonder whether the Editors ever gave those words a thorough consideration, to see what really, their spiritual signification or use may be to us; for, "All that is written before is written for our learning." The attentive Bible reader will readily perceive the practical application of those words under the former dispensation. When Israel were made possessors of Canaan, the land was divided to them by lot, but that division only related to the twelve tribes, and not to the sectioning out of each man's inheritance; or the patrimony of each head of a family. This became the duty of the leading men among them; such as Jethro advised Moses to appoint over the people, and whom he termed "captians," but are sometimes called elders, and at others fathers. And just as at this time, when a survey of lands is made, certain marks are left whereby said survey can be traced again at any time. Just so it was then, and these, in Bible language are "The Landmarks which the fathers did set," and by reference to Deut. 19 : 14 it is quite evident the Lord, through Moses, gave them His approval; and 27 ; 17 a solemn curse is denounced against any one removing them. So now we have their literal definition, use and application pretty clearly before us. Let us try whether we can see what is therein contained for our learning. Jesus Christ procured an inheritance in which, not only every Israelite, but every son and daughter of Adam, has equal interest, in its broadest sense. But as there were tribes among Israel to be taken into the account of the general division of their possessions; so there are classes to whom the teachings, the promises and threatnings of the Gospel are applicable; so that the whole domain of that vast inheritance is all divided out, not by lot, or chance, but "By the determinate counsel, and unfathomable wisdom and love of God." Then as Palestine was promised to Israel in a general sense; in that sense we all are equally interested in the Heavenly Canaan. These promises are gathered from the following texts: "Christ tasted death for every man" "So by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." "I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." But when the tribes or classes have their apportionments allotted to them,—the lot or part that falls to the infantile and ignorant class is: "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." "Where there is no transgression." "The first commandment with promise is, honor thy father and mother." "The times of ignorance God winked at," But to those of riper years and knowledge the apportionment is, "Repent and believe the gospel." "But now commandeth all men everywhere to repent" "Repent and be baptized every one of you * * for the remission of sins," &c. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "And the Spirit and the Bride say come, * * and whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." "To you and to your children is the promise, and to all that are afar off."

Lastly, the other class, which are the, "Fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, idolators, and all liars shall have their part (portion) in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." These quotations certainly include the destiny of all living, and may be said to stand parallel with the allotted inheritance of the ancient Hebrews, with this difference; in the disposition of their inheritance by lot man had no choice, unless he utterly refused citizenship. In the "inheritance reserved in heaven," we see men can choose for himself or if he, forfeits that which had been intended for him, his doom is still unalterably fixed; not by that which is the corresponding part with the "Landmarks," but by that which corresponds with the apportionment by the lot. Whenever we come to consider the parallel, or correspondence of these "Landmarks," we invariably find them of human origin or institution; for such were they, but backed up with the divine sanction, as they also were. God delivered His people out of bondage; He drove out the nations of Canaan before them; He divided to them their land by lot, and now they must make such other regulations, as the nature of their circumstances require to promote and maintain love, union and peace among them; for this very reason those "Landmarks" were set, so that each one knew precisely how far he may go.

So we, my brethren and sisters, were "delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of His dear Son." Our enemies are vanquished, and we are brought together into a church relation, or capacity, as they were; and now we must maintain love, union and peace in the church. Now as the God of Israel gave His sanction to those "Landmarks," or divisions, "Which the fathers did set" so has Jesus Christ given to His church, not only His sanction, but power to legislate, in the absence of positive law, saying: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in Heaven." But knowing the evil propensities in man, and the number of temptations to which he is exposed, He has furnished us an outline with rules for this purpose. "If thy brother trespass against thee, tell him his fault between thee and him alone." * * * "Tell it unto the church." "But if he shall neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican." Here I maintain the Savior gave His sanction to the desires of the church, just as the God of Israel had to those arrangements made by the fathers, for the regulation of their temporal affairs, and only the authorities that enacted, or set up, had power to repeal, or remove again. Thus, an Israelite being charged with removing his "neighbor's landmarks," is brought before the elders or judges of his city; they are bound to investigate the case, but having no field-notes, plot, or draft in that law which Moses gave them, or in the division made by the lot, they must resort to, and investigate the "Landmarks" and subdivision made by the fathers; and in doing so the guilt is fully established by the requisite number of witnesses. The curse or penalty attached to said offence, must now be inflicted with the same rigor or strictness, as if he had violated one of the ten commandments. Precisely so it is in the church of Christ. Difficulties do arise between brethren; they are proceeded with in gospel order until the case is before the church. The leaven is at work, and if not purged out will leaven the whole lump. The whole body is endangered. But be it remembered it is the church that is to be heard now; and nothing is said in this connection of hearing the Gospel. Then if the church can find no letter whereby to decide or dispose of said case, she must decide by the best light she has according to the spirit of the Gospel. But in case such a decision is passed by a majority of an individual arm or branch of the church, to the disowning of a party that neglects to hear the church, and the expelled party, with a minority, are dissatisfied with the proceedings hitherto, they now appeal to the highest authority in the church. Their case is laid before the District Council, but they fail to see alike; or if they do agree they consider the query of a general character, and with their answer, send it up to Annual Meeting. That body now investigates the case, confirms the proceedings of the church, and it, being the highest acknowledged body in the church, its decisions are final and conclusive; and can only be repealed, altered, or amended by that body which gave them its approval. Here I find a correspondence to "the ancient landmarks which the fathers did set;" and of which we have quite a number in our borders; and yearly need more, as our borders are enlarged, and further subdivisions are made And O! may none of us have the presumptions, or covetous disposition, to remove any of those "Landmarks" without legal authority, lest we draw upon ourselves the curse, or penalties annexed, which may be summed up in these words: "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this phrophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out

IN MEMORY OF HANNAH FURRY.

Having been an intimate friend of the subject of this notice, whose obituary appears in another column, and also, a member of their little family during the past Summer, I therefore, pen a few thoughts on the death of her who was so much loved by all.

I had a great desire to visit her during her sickness, and often wished to be at her bedside, but as I could not, I daily waited for messages from her, which sometimes were favorable for her recovery, and which caused us still to have hopes for her, 'till at last the sad news, "Hannah is dead," reached our ears. Oh, how hard to realize that she is no more! She who was so young, so pure and innocent, is gone. In the school-room where she so much loved to go, there is a vacant seat; schoolmates will meet her there no more. When Sabbath school opens again, her teacher will miss an interesting pupil from her class. A fond mother, a loved sister and little brothers, will no more be made glad to see her coming home, but Oh, the vacant place in the home circle! the void there that can never be filled! There where she daily moved with womanly grace and a sweet temper, shedding sunshine all around her, is where her absence will be felt the most. She who, with a willing heart, lightened their cares and welcomed them on their return will be thought of very often.

Many prayers, no doubt, were offered for her recovery, but God's ways are not our ways, and He saw fit to remove her from this world of trouble. All the prayers that were offered, the skill of physicians, the attention of kind friends and all the care an affectionate sister could bestow did not avail, He saw fit to remove her just in the bloom of youth, seemingly, a bud in the midst of full blown roses has been plucked. Grandfathers and grandmother, whose locks are blooming for the grave, have been passed by, and death has taken one who was yet young, and promised a long life of usefulness.

Dear young friends, is not this a solemn call to you all? Remember, you too must die. Only a few months ago, I gave many of you the parting hand for awhile; among that number was Hannah. How little did I think that would be the last time I would see her. You have often been called by the ministers of God, and in various ways to forsake sin, but this I think is a special call to you. The youngest of your circle has been taken from among you. Oh heed the call; for it may be the last one for some of you. Prepare while young for that home that Hannah spoke so much of going to during her last days on earth.

"Green grow the turf above thee
Friend of our early days;
None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee but to praise."

A HOPE AND A PRAYER.

Since our last Annual Meeting, we have heard many express the hope that at our next meeting of the kind certain questions of difference will not so much as be mentioned, From experience it should be learned that the discussion of questions where there is such a difference of opinion as to forbid even the probability of a union is worse than useless. The design of our annual council is to foster love, union, and a oneness of mind, so much so as possible, touching the doctrine and regulations of the Church. That being the motive it would seem unwise to present to the meeting such a question as is calculated from its nature to produce discord rather than union and love, especially if it be a question that has been before the meeting time and again, and that too without bringing about the desired result, that of union of thought upon the subject. This subject is one of such importance that we have thought much upon it, and propose, out of love for the cause, a remedy. It is within the power of the district meetings to remedy the matter. Let the brethren in those councils, and in their deliberations keep one thing in view and let that be the welfare of the Church at large. Because they may have a trouble at home is no reason why the trouble should be carried into the whole "camp," to there cause a commotion and trouble that otherwise might have been avoided. If the question causing the trouble is entirely new and of a general nature it might be advisable to take it up to the Annual Council, but if it arises from a question that has been before the A. Meeting time and again, we do think it would be unwise to take it there, but rather try it in a way consistent to the principles of love to dispose of it at home, if that can not be done even by "prayer and fasting" Let a committee be called and decide the matter according to the circumstances and the tenor of the Gospel and the decisions of the A. Meeting. It is then to be hoped, and fondly hoped that each district will act with such discretion and wisdom as to virtually say at the next A. M., as touching those vexed questions: "we can rule our house," or in other words, we can get along at home without the assistance of the A. M., we have wise men at home, we have a membership that are endowed with the Holy Spirit who manifest a spirit of love, union and forbearance. To see questions of a local nature or such as have been before the A. M., or of such a trivial nature that it looks like they might have been settled at home, certainly does not cast great credit upon the district that sent them. We are glad, when a district is called, to hear they have nothing: that answer means they have much of love and union at home. We not only hope but we pray that at our next A. Conference that one question on which so much has been said will not come up, if not we shall with thousands others be glad. Then those that would from the cause distract or dismember the body will be driven to the wall, and it is believed the mantle of peace will robe the church and prosperity follow her, even in those days of "perilous times." So may it be. J. S. FLORY.

KEEP IN THE RIGHT CHANNEL.

"Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life." &c.

Notwithstanding I am weak; Notwithstanding I am fallible; notwithstanding I may become excited; notwithstanding I am liable to go to extremes, yet, I say to us all, keep in the right channel.

Some years past, but I will never forget, I heard our old brother, John Brumbaugh, say, when preaching: "The middle course is the right course." He preached a number of years in Miami county, Ohio. I say, with the departed brother, the middle of the channel is the safest place for our ship. When we keep in the right channel, we are in the narrow way which leads right to the strait gate, and right along in the middle of the broad way. But the narrow way is marked out so plain, and "way marks" put up all along, so we can keep in the right channel if we only look up to the "way marks," hence we have to watch and be on our guard at home and abroad, but this is no mystery for we are so forgetful. We should learn to be temperate in all things, all learn to do all things, decently and in order, in our eating, in our drinking, in our talking, in all our walk and conduct, and particularly in using intoxicating drinks and tobacco. If we all would keep in the right channel, the tobacco question would go down, where it ought to be, and the Brethren will have no cause at our council meetings to take sides and go out on extremes to the right and to the left, in their deliberations or discussions. I love all the brethren, but I was made sorry at our last A. Meeting, when we could discover that love was not, all the time, the controlling principle.

"Faith, hope and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. 13 chap. Read from 4th ver. to the end of the chap. Where charity rules we always keep in the right channel. We should not be offensive, as some members like to see clean faces, and they do not like to see so much tobacco juice spit on the floor, or on the stove or wall, but let us bear with one another in love. We hope till our next A. Meeting, things will be better, who may live to see it.

There has been much good counsel and admonition given to the members in regard to foolish, fashionable dressing, but will not affect much so long as the root is cherished, and some of our church officers are not in the right channel. But again, let love be the ruling principle.

In conclusion, I will, in this silent messenger, send greetings to all the brethren and sisters who know me in this life, east and west, north and south, especially to my two brothers and one sister in the flesh, who live in the west, Samuel and John Murray and Catharine Billhimer, and their families.

LEARNING OBEDIENCE.

The lesson of obedience is one which all must learn. Hard and unwelcome as it seems, it will write itself in some way upon our hearts. We must learn to bow, to yield and to obey.

Man's fallen condition is a condition of willful rebellion against rightful power, of impotent resistance to wise and just authority; of unholy opposition to divine law and wholesome rule. This perverse opposition is Sin. "Sin is the transgression of the law," or more literally and forcibly, "Sin is lawlessness." It was the exercise of this lawlessness which first drove man from Paradise, and filled the world with trouble and distress. Rebellion against God involves all other rebellion. All authority is derived from, and delegated by the Almighty. Man rebelled against God, and creation has rebelled against man. Governors reject God's rule, and nations reject theirs. Husbands refuse to be subject to God, and and wonder why their wives are not subject to them. Parents disregard the precepts of their Heavenly Father, and wonder that their children are also disobedient, unthankful, and unholy.

Thus we see lawlessness lies at the root of all human disorder, sin, and misery. Every violation of divine law, moral, mental, physical or social, whether written on the stones of Sinai, the fleshly tables of the heart, or in the very constitution of created things, draws after it a penalty and pain. Every obedience is a step in the way of life and peace.

Our first lesson then is obedience to authority. "Children obey your parents," is the first mandate of God to infant minds. Those who refuse to obey, heap up for themselves trouble, calamity and death. There are persons who deliberately refuse to regard anything but their own wills. They are too old to obey. They know enough to take care of themselves.

One such turbulent and ungovernable spirit in a community, or church, a workshop, or a family, is enough to break down all discipline, and tread under foot all authority. The faithful are discouraged in obedience, the young are encouraged in disobedience. Government is defied, rulers are condemned, and waywardness and confusion are the results.

Such persons must learn obedience. They are not exempted from the general necessity. They must learn that they are not almighty, and hence not independent. The lesson is severe—often it is tedious. They defy society, and become outlaws and vagabonds. They defy the church, and are excluded from its fellowship. They spurn the family-rule, and find themselves left outside to meditate upon their folly. They trample on the laws of health, and condemn themselves to years of pain and sorrow, sickness and distress. They defy the laws of God, and the afflictions of time and the judgments of eternity roll in upon them, to convince them of their dire mistake.

Rebellion is war. No man can resist God's law with impunity. No man can harden himself against God and prosper. Rebellion must end in defeat. Man must bow or fall, must bend or break There is no escape. "As I live, saith God, every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess." Sooner or later all must yield,—if not now at mercy's altar, then at the judgment seat of Christ. If not here when pardon is offered, then hereafter, when mercy is fled.

The voice of wisdom calls us to obedience. Submit yourselves to God;—resist the devil and he will flee from you. Man must have a master. If he refuse to be God's servant he will become the devil's slave. Christ's yoke is easy; let us learn to wear it and find rest to our souls.—The Christian.

TEACH THE CHILDREN.—Teach your children early to love the religion of Jesus Christ. Bring them into vital communion with the people of God, teach them to enlist their interest in the church of Christ, love to work in it, support it by their money, and stand by it in after life.

If you neglect this your house will be full of young pagans, as many a prosperous man's house is to-day filled with children who are further from any religious character than the Chinese or the North American Indians. It is a dismal day for any people when the little ones are turned over to wild and heartless materialism and atheism, for guidance and for help. The poorest church is better than a godless and inhuman creed. Organized religion is the corner stone of human society, and every fabric of it reposes on childhood as its living foundation, renewed and redeemed by the love and grace of Almighty God.

Make it a rule never to utter any unnecessary complaint or murmur, but in patience to possess your souls.

Youth's Department.

The following, is from a young pilgrim of 17 years of age who while quite young in life lost, both father and mother. We give it as a good example for our young readers, as we think he displayed great wisdom in accepting God as his father as he is truly a friend of sinners, and a father to the fatherless.

CLARION Co, Pa. }
Dec 2nd, 1872. }

Dear Pilgrim:—I have read your pages with interest, and am pleased very much with the good news it brings to the Christian readers. But there are many persons in the world who would rather read novels or some accounts of this world's folly. I dare say such is the case with many, at least, it used to be so with my-self when I was traveling on the downward road to ruin, thinking of nothing but this worlds pleasure; not thinking of that ever near presence of God, who at his will could call us at any time, from our wild and wayward career, to meet the great Judge at the bar to pronounce our doom.

O! sinner stop for one moment and consider; you are standing on a slippery foundation, and sooner or later you may be cast off, and what is the result? You are cast into everlasting punishment, there to suffer in torment all through Eternity.

There are few who have not heard of the dangers of sin, therefore take warning before it is everlastingly too late. Turn at once and be saved from the wrath of God which awaits you at his coming. Oh, how unexpected many must meet God! In the full vigor of health they are cast into eternity prepared or unprepared. Yes, thousands of instances could be related but we have all heard and seen enough to know that God is infinite. Then turn, Oh! turn from the ungodly paths, and seek an interest in the wounds of a once crucified but now living Redeemer.

I earnestly thank God for what He has done for me, though it was His will to call from me at the age of three years, my father and mother; but it was His will and so I am content, knowing that He does everything for the best. I have not the pleasure that many have, to comfort their parents by kind words or sympathy, yet I hope to greet them, if it is God's will, when we meet in that land beyond the skies, where parting shall be known no more. THOMAS. B. ZELLERS.

OPEN HEARTS AND READY HANDS.

One day a teacher said to his class. "Boys, you can all be useful if you will. If you cannot do good by great deeds, you can by little ones."

The boys said nothing, but the teacher saw by their looks that they thought he was mistaken. They did not believe that they could be of any use So he said:

"You think it is not so, but suppose you just try it for one week?

"How shall we try it?" asked one of them.

"Just keep your eyes open and your hands ready to do anything good that comes in your way all this week, and tell me next Sunday if you have not managed to be useful in some way or other," said the teacher.

"Agreed," said the boys, and so they parted.

The next Sunday those boys gathered round their teacher with smiling lips, and eyes so full of light that they fairly twinkled like the stars. He smiled, as they looked at them, and said:

"Ah, boys I see by your looks that you have something to tell me."

"We have, sir, we have," they said all together. Then each one told his story.

"I" said one, "thought of going to the well for a pail of water every morning to save my mother trouble and time. She thanked me so much and was so greatly pleased that I mean to keep on doing it for her."

"And I" said another boy, thought of a poor old woman whose eyes were too dim to read. I went to her house every day and read a chapter to her from the Bible. It seemed to give her a great deal of comfort, I cannot tell how she thanked me"

A third boy said, "I was walking along the street, wondering what I could do. A gentleman called me, and asked me to hold his horse. I did so. He gave me five cents. I have brought it to put it in the missionary box."

"I was walking with my eyes open and my hands ready, as you told us," said the fourth boy, "when I saw a little fellow crying because he had lost some pennies in the gutter. I told him not to cry, and I would try to find his pennies. I found them, and he dried up his tears, ran off and felt very happy."

A fifth boy said, "I saw my mother was very tired one day. The baby was cross, and mother looked sick and sad. I asked mother to put the baby in my little wagon. She did so, and I gave him a grand ride round the garden. If you had only heard him crow, and seen him clap his hands, teacher, it would have done you good; and oh, how much brighter mother looked when I took the baby indoors again." —ex.

When the Christian is overtaken by the storm of adversity, or has been deserted by friends, or is called to bury a loved one, his heart is cheered and comforted by the voice, "It is I."

WELCH RUN, PA., }
Jan. 2, '73. }

Dear Pilgrim: It has been sometime since I have written for your columns, and will try and give a few interesting facts of our series of meetings which was held at Clay Lick Meetinghouse, beginning on the 21st and ending on the 28th of December. The Brethren who labored for us were J. F. Oller and D. F. Good from Waynesboro, Pa., G. Mourer N. Martin, D. Miller and G. Bricker. We had a good meeting, one I trust that will not soon be forgotten by the brethren and sisters who attended. We feel to thank God that it was our happy privilige to meet day after day and night after night in the house of the Lord, and hear the glad tidings of salvation proclaimed aloud, by our beloved brethren who came to us on a mission of love. May God bless them for their labors of love and have souls for their hire, with grace sufficient for their day and trial, and finally grant them a home in Heaven, where sickness, sorrow pain and death are feared and felt no more.

When we sat under their pleadings with sinners to turn from their evil ways to God, we wondered how they could resist the spirit of God and cling to satan, the enemy of their souls who is hurrying them on to destruction and will soon, ah! too soon, launch them into eternity unprepared. Think dear sinner before it is too late! Brethren and sisters, we should feel greatly encouraged in our race, for they urged us to press onward and upward to the mark and the prize of the high calling as it is in Christ Jesus. I can say, for one, that my soul burned with a strong desire to live a more holy life than I have done heretofore, and by the grace of God hope to do so. How sweet the time passed away when we were together in the sanctuary of the Lord, in singing, praying and praising God, and how loathe we were to leave the place were Jesus showed his smiling face, but time passed away and our meeting closed and we have returned to our homes. Let us not soon forget what we have heard, and be earnestly engaged in prayer for one another. Pray for us dear brethren, remembering that we often ask God to bless you and your families, and if we never meet in this vale of tears, may we all meet around God's throne in heaven where we will part no more.

"Where Jesus dwells my soul would be,
And faints my much loved Lord to see;
Earth twine no more about my heart,
For it is better to depart."

Dear Editors of the PILGRIM and brethren in Christ I wish to drop you a few lines for the first time to give you an iden of our situation at this place. We have been living here nearly two years and we never had a meeting any nearer than forty-five miles to my knowledge. I am sorry to think that we cannot have meetings closer and oftener. We feel ourselves as lost sheep without a shepherd. If we only could have some of the brethren come and preach for us, it would do us so much good, and they would reap their reward. Our little flock is but small. There are but five members living here, but may the grace of God rest on each and every one of us, that we may, with the prayers of our brethren, and sisters, go on in the faith of the promise which we have in Holy Writ, that "Where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them." Dear brethren and sisters, you that have the privilege of going to meeting, think of us as we need your prayers in our behalf.

From your unworthy brother,
D. H. SAXTON.

To the Brethren and Friends who intend to aid and assist us in building the Meeting House in the Hamilton Congregation, Daviess Co, Mo.

Inasmuch as the building committee has been appointed and some of the building material already prepared, and remittances coming in very slow, we would say to those brethren and friends who wish to manifest their love, kindness, and liberality by true tokens, (Means,) to send in at once or as soon as convenient. Any amount will be thankfully received. Remittances can be made by express or registered letter to either of the subscribers. Brethren and friends please consider this matter and act without delay, we think it is a good cause, and the Lord will reward you for your labor of love.

Dear Brother—Please say to the churches of the Southern District of Ill., that the committee of arrangements for A. M., wishes to say to them, that all the churches that wish to offer a location for the A. M. should send their request to the committee soon, as they expect to examine the places offered and determine the location this winter, and if no more places are offered before the committee will make their examination, they will make their selection out of the places now offered.

I would also say that I have yet a few copies of the Minutes of the District Meeting on reserve. If any of the churches in the district failed to get them, they can yet be supplied by notifying me,

An Abridged Report of a Trip to Pa., by Eld. John Knisley.

PLYMOUTH, IND., }
Dec. 23d, 1872. }

Dear Readers of the PILGRIM: In my notes of travel through the East, I promised to give a general report on my return home which promise I will now fulfill. On the 8th of Oct., I went west to Wanatah and thence south some fifty miles to a Communion Meeting at friend John Dobbins'. Eld. Jno S. Snowberger has the charge of this new district. From here I went to Monticello and attended a Lovefeast on the 11th. Here I met our esteemed Elder J. Quinter—had a very good meeting—Bro. Joseph Annich was ordained to the eldership. After the close of the meeting I went to the house of Bro. J. S. Snowberger's, and on the 14th we, J. S. Snowberger and wife, myself and Sister Dillinger were taken to Delphi to take the train for Pa. Arrived at Altoona on the 15th, at 7 p. m. From there we went to Martinsburg, Blair co., Pa., and was taken to the Yellow Creek Church to attend their Lovefeast. Jacob Miller has the oversight of this charge, assisted by L. Furry, D. Snowberger, Jno. Eshleman, S. A. Moore, John B. and J. Z. Replogle. This district is in Bedford co., and is thought to have a membership of 500. The Church seems to be in good order and in a flourishing condition.

From here we went to the Clover Creek Congregation, where they held a Lovefeast on the 17th. Elders Geo. and J. W. Brumbaugh preside here, assisted by G. W. Brumbaugh, Thos. B. Maddocks J. L. Wineland, and J. Snowberger. The meeting was interesting and much love manifested. From here we crossed the mountain and remained with Bro. Daniel Brumbaugh until next morning, when we took the cars at Coffee Run for James Creek. Here we met our dear Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh editor of the PILGRIM, and his kind wife, also two dear sisters, W. A. Clarke and Emma Miller, who are working in the PILGRIM Office. At this place I first heard from home and was very glad to hear from my children. Geo. Brumbaugh is the elder of the James Creek Church, assisted by H. B. and G. B. Brumbaugh. The members here all appear very kind and everything seems to be in good order. Their Lovefeast, commencing on the 18th, was one of much interest, and was a feast to the soul indeed.

On the 21st I, with Bro. D. Snowberger, took the train at New Pleasant Grove for Dale City, where we were met by the brethren and conducted to their homes. I was here made to think how pleasant it is to meet the brethren. So will it be when Jesus comes, we shall all then meet to part no more. We put up for the night with Bro. U. M. Beachley, M. D. Next morning visited the Companion Office and then visited the kind family of H. R. Holsinger, was well entertained. On the 23d there was a Lovefeast held at the Elk Lick Church. Here is a large membership and is the place that the A. Meeting will be held for 1873. On the 25th, in company with J. S. and Dan'l Snowberger, went to Bedford where we held a meeting.

On the 26th went to our aged brother Andrew Snowberger, Elder of the Snakespring Congregation, where we had several meetings.

On the 27th had a meeting in Morrison's Cove. Here I and J. S. Snowberger separated, and I went to the Hopewell District. Bro. Jacob Steel is the elder, assisted by Henry and D. S. Clapper. From here was taken to the Yellow Creek Church again and held several meetings and then gave the parting hand to my travelling companions and returned to James Creek where I remained until the 12th of Nov. I then started in company with J. P. Brumbaugh, for Philadelphia, but missing the train at Huntingdon, we remained over night with Bro. A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D. The Doctor entertained us kindly, is a man of talent and commands a large practice. Next morning took the cars for the City, and made our first call in the city of brotherly love with Bro. C. Custer and kind family. In the p. m. went to Germantown and called on Bro. Davis Yonce where I remained until the 16th, preached once and made a number of calls. Then returned again to Philadelphia and had two meetings.

On the 19th, started for Eld Moses Miller's Congregation, at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland co., Pa., had three meetings in Mechanicsburg Bro. Miller accompanied me on a visit to a number of the members which I enjoyed much. This congregation seems to be in good order and much love manifested. Then visited Elder J. R. Hanawalt's Congregation and attended eight meetings. At this place I got the sad news of the death of my son-in-law which ended the enjoyment of my trip and caused me to look homeward.

I started for James Creek where I had two more meetings and, one at Coffee Run. On the 3d of December I took my leave of the dear members and started for home where I arrived safely and found all well, but were sorry to find the vacant seats which were made by death during my absence. On the 5th our meeting commenced. Bro. Quinter failed to come, but Bro. J. Calvert and O. W. Miller were present, and labored for us to acceptance—one added by baptism and hope many more will come soon.

In conclusion, I will say that I never enjoyed myself so well as I did during this mission of love. I ask to be excused for not naming all the places that I visited, feel assured that you are all kindly remembered though not named. Brethren and sisters remember us in your prayers, and may we all hold out faithful until we meet on the other side of Jordan, never to part any more.

ALLENTOWN, PA., }
Jan. 15th, 1873. }

Dear Brethren Editors;—As no church news appears in the PILGRIM from this part of the Lord's vineyard, I will pen a few thoughts, if you think them worthy a place. On Saturday evening and Sunday last, Bros. Samuel Gettel and David Eiter stopped with the little band of pilgrims and soldiers of the cross sojourning at Bethlehem, and preached for us. They gave many words of admonition, and urged us to remain faithful to the end so that we may obtain that pearl of great price, the crown that faileth not away reserved in Heaven for those that fear God.

On Sunday afternoon we had a social meeting of singing and prayer. We felt that it was good to be together, and had a foretaste of Heaven indeed. I as a "babe in Christ" felt happy and overjoyed, and with renewed energy shall stand by the captain of our salvation in the thickest of the fight, plead boldly for the cause of the Redeemer, that I may once have a "clear title to a mansion in the skies," to a "city that has foundation whose maker and builder is God.

On parting, the farewell tears flowed freely, indeed many farewell tears were shed. I as a young brother never before knew that the dear brethren and sisters were so closely bound together. They are indeed blessed ties. May God inspire us with His spirit to feel still a deeper love for each other, and for our fellow men who are yet out of the ark of safety, in the gall of bitterness, and unconcerned about their souls salvation, so that they can see by our walk, talk and conversation in life, that we are "a peculiar people, zealous unto every good work."

The PILGRIM is still a welcome visitor. May it continue its weekly visits to the brethren, sisters and friends, and be the means of calling many to righteousness. That the Lord may bless us, and all connected with the publication of the PILGRIM, and at last when the warfare is ended in this vale of tears, take us unto Himself, where He shall wipe all tears from our eyes and we shall reign with Him forever and ever, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

LEWISTOWN, Pa., }
Jan. 13th 1873.——

Dear Brethren:—By these few lines I will inform you that yesterday evening our series of meetings closed. Had one application for baptism, two reclaimed and many good impressions made by the brethren, namely: D. F. Good, Jacob D. Trostle, and Jacob F. Oller. The Lord bless them for their labors, as they labored faithfully for both saint and sinner. The conviction of my heart is, that it will do us all good, and my prayer is, that the seed (or word of God) which has been sown broadcast amongst us by our beloved brethren, will bring much fruit to the glory of God, and to the conversion of sinners.

ELDER JACOB MOHLER.

DIED.

BULGER.—In the Snakespring Church, Bedford co., Pa., Dec 28, 1872, our sister Hannah Bulger, aged 40 years, 9 mos. and 29 days. Funeral improved by the brethren from 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52.

DEGARMIN.—In the same Congregation, on the 29th of December, Mary Degarmin, aged 98 years, 9 mos. and 3 days.

This aged mother was a member of the Lutheran church, and was much afflicted for the last 6 years, Funeral improved by the writer.

RITCHEY.—In the same community, on Dec 31st, 1872, Michael Ritchey, aged 39 years, 9 mos. and 21 days. Funeral discourse by A. Snowberger and the writer from Hebrew 9 chap. 27 ver.

The subject of this notice became alarmed in his last days about his future salvation, and made application to become a member of the church. We tried to encourage him in the good cause of Jesus, he being very weak in the flesh, and still weak in the faith, wished to wait till to-morrow, but that time never come to him. He leaves a sorrowing widow and 4 children to mourn the loss.

FOREMAN.—Also in the same Congregation, our much beloved sister Lydia Foreman, on the 11th of Jan., 1873 aged 76 years, 10 mos. and 29 days. Funeral improved by the same as above from John 14th chap. 1 and 2 ver.

The departed was a sister to Eld. Jacob Steel, and has been a very pious, humble sister and, much beloved by all who knew her. We believe she has gained the heavenly mansion prepared for the children of God. HENRY HERSHBERGER.

FURRY, Jan. 10, 1873, near New Enterprise, Bedford co., Pa. Hannah Amanda Furry, daughter of bro. John B. Furry, dec'd, and sister Elizabeth, now Miller, grand daughter of bro. Dan'l Snowberger and the writer, aged 16 yrs., 10 mos. Disease, complicated Typhoid fever. Occasion improved by the brethren, from Matt. 24: 44. "Therefore be ye also ready" &c., to the largest audience I ever saw on such occasions.

The subject of this notice was remarkable for intelligence and strong memory, and by few excelled in education for her age. Since the death of her father, 9 years ago, she was adopted into the family of the writer, being an obedient child, tender hearted, beloved by many, and much attached to her grand parents; the loss of her, casts a gloom over the whole neighborhood, and especially over our fireside, as her vacancy in our hearts can never be filled. 6 weeks of unremitting care on our part, and the skill of two eminent physicians were overruled by the fell-destroyer, through the intervening power from on high. It is the Lord, let him do as seemeth good in his sight. Thus ended the life of one, who was near and dear to many, and as was feared by the writer in the beginning of her disease, as he had a certain presentiment of her departure.

Dear Hannah! a few months was blooming in youth,
Now entombed with the dead attesting the truth;
That man has to die, whether old or in prime,
Strong warning from heaven, Oh, prepare all in time.

Her sweet voice in music no more we shall hear,
The loss in our family caused sorrow and tears;
May she in sweet anthems swell th' angelic choir,
Our loss gain associates with saints upon high.

Ye school-mates, remember, six weeks to the day,
She met you the last time, not thinking her stay;
On earth will be closed, in just such a short time,
Beware and prepare, for you may have less time.

LEONARD FURRY.

(Visitor please copy.)

PFALTZGRAFF.—In the Codorus Church York county, Pa., Jan. 7, 1873, brother Geo. Pfaltzgraff, aged 64 years, 8 mos and 2 days. Funeral services from Matt. 24: 44, by Andrew Miller and Thomas Gray.

Bro. Pfaltzgraff came to his death by a fall. He came out of his house, descended two steps from his porch, slipped and fell with his side on the edge of a step, broke in a rib, and bruised him inside, which caused a gathering of blood and ended his life in a few days. hope the people will take warning from the text, "Therefore be ye also ready, &c. CHRIST. NESS.

FREDERICK.—In the Owlecek Church, Knox co., Ohio, Dec. 21, 1872, our beloved brother Jacob Frederick, aged 70 yrs. 1 mo. and 19 days

This brother leaves quite a number of friends to mourn their loss. 9 children and 41 grand children, 14 great-grand children, and an aged widow who is beloved by all. This old brother and sister faced many a storm, being members of the church about 40 years and lived together 58 years. It seemed hard for the dear old sister to give him up She went along to the funeral which took place on the 22d He had quite a desire to depart this life. Just before he died, he said he would like to go to sleep and never wake up again in this world. Funeral discourse by the writer from Isaiah 38th chap. "Set thine house in order for thou shalt die and not live." D. N. W.

GREENAWALT.—Jan. 12, 1873, in the James Creek Church, Huntingdon co., Pa., Elmer, son of bro. Samuel and sister Nannie Greenawalt, of croup and bronchitis combined; aged 2 yrs. 1 mo. and 28 days. Funeral services by the editors.

The subject of this notice was rather a remarkable child, exhibiting more than an ordinary degree of mental powers. Although he was deprived of the power of speech by the affects of the terrible disease with which he died, yet his gestures and movements were that of a man rather than a child. But the time for his transplanting had come and he passed over the dark and dreaded scene of death with less suffering than was expected, but his removal has left an aching and painful void in the family and in the loving hearts of the parents and grand parents, which nothing on earth can fill.

Another plant removed from the family nursery to the fair climes of Heaven, another angel added to the happy throng, another glorified spirit joined to the celestial choir. Cease to mourn ye disconsolate ones. Let the sweet melody vibrate into your drooping souls; look up and hopefully follow on, and e'er long you shall meet on that beautiful shore in that sweet by and by. G. B.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

JAMES CREEK, PA., Jan. 21st, 1873.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office at plainly as possible.

HARD TIMES.

There is much said about hard times and there may be some truth in it as money seems a little scarce and hard to get in places, but this should not affect the circulation of the Pilgrim, and we believe that it would not by any means was its worth duly appreciated. Hard times may curtail the buying of farms and making investments for speculation, but when it comes down to the small consideration of $1.50 for the Pilgrim which brings its weekly portion of the bread of life to the hungry soul, it should not be taken into consideration, and is not by those who are not willing to live by bread alone, as we could abundantly show from a large number of letters like the following:

"Dear Brethren:—By this I inform you that I felt sorry on the receipt of the last Pilgrim, especially so, when I read that it would be the last number for the year. Oh, it seems to me as if I could do with a little less bread, rather than do without the weekly visits of the Pilgrim. Enclosed find $1.50, for which please send it on," &c. Such, brethren and sisters are the feelings, expression, and work of the poor, and how unlike it is from the grumbling that we sometimes see from the pens of brethren who count their wealth by thousands. Of course we do not mean that all of our wealthy members are uncharitable, not by any means, as some have done nobly in sending the Pilgrim to the poor, but as a rule there cannot be as much pure and vital religion found among the rich as there can among the poor, not the same thirsting after righteousness and religious reading. When we get as hungry for religious reading as the above writer, hard times will not stand in the way. Since we have commenced publishing the Pilgrim we have learned to place a much higher estimate on the zeal and integrity of the poor, and for their benefit especially have accepted in part, the credit system. Talk about losing by trusting our members! We would be ashamed to think that we have a brother or sister in the church that would deliberately cheat us out of our hard earned dues. No, brethren and sisters we will not believe that we have such among us until we are forced to the conclusion by actual experience. Therefore we continue to invite all of our members, no matter how poor, to take and read the Pilgrim. If you have not got the money now send us your names, and you can easily earn $1.50 within the next six months. Try it.

ARE WE GROWING?

In all enterprises it is encouraging to the patrons to know that there is a growth or increase in usefulness. At first our circulation was confined to some 8 or 10 States. At present we have an actual circulation in the following States and Territories:

Pennsylvania	California
Ohio	Oregon
Indiana	Virginia
Illinois	Maryland
Iowa	Tennessee
Missouri	W. Virginia
Kansas	N. Carolina
Nebraska	New Jersey
Michigan	Kentuckey
Wisconsin	Massachusetts
Minesota	Maine
Decotah	New York

We also send one copy to Derbyshire, England, and almost daily they are coming in from places where our church was never before known. This fact alone should put our contributors on their guard as to what they send us for publication, as whatever is published in the Pilgrim is set upon a hill and cannot be hid. Let us cease grinding our petty little differences and set our Zion forth in its most beautiful robes. It is true, her outside garments may appear a little uncomely, but to know her aright is eternal life.

Now, brethren and sisters, if you are desirous of having our borders enlarged help us. We have done our part by letting the world know that there is a Pilgrim waiting for a call. Will not some of you give that call? If any of you have friends in Europe, Asia, Africa or anywhere else, send them a copy of the Pilgrim a year and you may accomplish a good work and be blessed in the deed. Any sending outside of the United States should send 20 cents extra to prepay postage.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

We feel truly grateful to the many who are supplying us with copy, but we hope that none will feel slighted on account of the non-appearance of their productions We are trying to use such as will get out of season by being delayed, but still some of our correspondence is getting behind time, notwithstanding we are giving more than the usual space to this kind of matter. There is a variety of tastes in regard to this class of reading, some say not enough, and others, too much. We shall try to please both parties by keeping between the two extremes. We do not wish any to stop writing because we are a little flush just now. When we once get a little leisure, we shall boil some of it down and give only the substance.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

It is reported that Merle d'Aubigne has left two nearly completed volumes on the Reformation, carrying his record to the death of Luther.

The library of the Escurial, which so narrowly escaped destruction a month or two since, contains over fourteen thousand MSS. in Hebrew, Arabic and and other languages.

The recent wonderful success of the French loan proves the French peasantry the wealthiest in Europe; the secret is economy, universal industry of women as well as men, and contentment with little.

Two Japanese priests have come to Berlin to obtain information about the Christian religion, and the Rev. Dr. Lisco is engaged in explaining to them the distinguishing features of the various Christian creeds.

A remarkable fog prevailed over New York last Friday. On the rivers navigation was suspended, and the ferry boats crossed slowly and irregularly. On the North River two boats collided, but happily without fatal results.

A gentleman in Iowa claims to have made the discovery that tea can be grown in Crawford county, in that State. The experiment has been tried, and it is said that 700 pounds of tea have actually been raised on one acre of land.

Arrangements have been completed for the organization of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The capital is to be subscribed among the Canadians, who seem anxious lest their undertaking pass into the hands of foreign and rival corporations.

FLORIDA.—The lumber business of Florida is increasing with rapid strides, and is an important source of revenue to the people of the State. The Lake country, at the head of the Ocklawaha river, is rapidly filling up with an intelligent and thrifty population. This section presents a fine opening for the cultivation of the orange, cotton and sugar.

THE CARELESS WORD.

'Twas but a word, a careless word,
As thistle-down it seemed as light!
It paused a moment on the air,
Then onward winged its flight.

Another lip caught up the word,
And breathed it with a haughty sneer;
It gathered weight as on it sped—
That careless word in its career.

Then rumor caught the flying word,
And busy gossip gave it weight,
Until that little word became
A vehicle of angry hate.

And then that word was winged with fire
Its mission was a thing of pain;
For soon it fell like lava-drops
Upon a wildly tortured brain.

And then another page of life
With burning, scalding tears were blurred;
A load of care was heavier made—
Its added weight, that careless word.

That careless word, oh! how it scorched
A fainting, bleeding, quivering heart!
'Twas like a hungry fire that scorched
Through every tender, vital part.

How wildly throbbed that aching heart!
Deep agony its fountain stirred;
It calmed, but bitter ashes mark
The pathway of that careless word.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN GAMALIEL AND NICODEMUS.

Concluded.

thus obtained must be kept in the family from which it is inherited." This is the explanation which Luke gave.

Nic. Well that is perfectly satisfactory respecting the genealogy of Joseph. You further stated that you knew Jesus when He was a boy.

Gam. He used to come with His parents to the passover every year, and the last I heard of Him till of late, was when he was about twelve years old. On that occasion he remained with the learned teachers of our law about three days, conversing with them on the divine law; asking and answering questions. He was the best informed, and the most comprehensive lad that I ever met with: there was not a single question connected with the teachings of the sacred rolls, which He could not accurately answer.

Nic. Have you ever seen him since that time?

Gam. All I learned of him is that about six months after that time his father died, and then he remained with his mother in Nazareth.

Nic. Do you remember when and where Jesus was born?

Gam. He was born in the city of Bethlehem, near the beginning of the seventh month (Sept.) or about seven months before the death of Herod the great.

Nic. What became of the estate which Heli left to his daughter Mary?

Gam. The estate left by Heli merely consisted of a dwelling house and necessary outbuildings, on a small tract of ground near Bethlehem. In this town Jesus was born, about the time Cyrenius * was governor of Syria. Mary and Joseph went there to be enrolled according to the decree of Cesar Augustus and when the child was born angels made their appearance to some Shepherds who were watching their flocks by night in an adjoining field, praising the glory of the new born child. This circumstance prompted Joseph and Mary to conclude that they ought to make Bethlehem their home; as soon as they gained possession of their little residence they prepared to remain in this place.

Nic. Was this not the child that your good old father Simeon took in his arms and blessed, when he was brought to the temple to be presented to the Lord?

Gam. Yes, the same one, and also the same that the prophetess Anna thanked the Lord for the pleasure of seeing:—But then I have not finished my story of their property. About the time of the birth of the child a supernatural star appeared to some of the wise men beyond Babylon, and they immediately followed it to Jerusalem after a journey of about four months. On their arrival here, they enquired of Herod for the new born king of the Jews. Herod, finally, after consulting the chief priests and scribes, sent them to Bethlehem, requesting them when they found the child, to return and apprise him of his whereabouts. The wise men after paying homage to Jesus in the house at Bethlehem, returned to their own country by another way. When Herod saw that he was mocked of the wise men, he sent and slew all the children in and near Bethlehem. But the night previous to the slaughter of these infants, Joseph took the young child and his mother and went into the land of Egypt.

Nic. And left all their property in Bethlehem?

Gam. Yes, and during the tumult it was partly destroyed, and the remainder soon fell to ruin. They never realized anything for it.

Nic. If they went to Egypt, how came they in Nazareth?

Gam. They remained in Egypt 'till they heard of the death of Herod, when they returned to Israel, but on hearing that Archelaus did reign in his fathers' stead in the government of Judea, they feared their residing in Bethlehem would prove unsafe, and returned to their former home in Nazareth, where they remained.

Nic. And surely do you think this person to be more remarkable than John in the wilderness?

Gam. On that subject it is difficult to properly fix my mind. My father was in full faith of him one day being the strong arm who would redeem Israel.

Nic. And is he really older than John?

Gam. No, he is six months younger, he will not be thirty till about the first of the seventh month, and John, I learn, is at this time about thirty.

Nic. Surely I would be pleased to become acquainted with him, and perhaps when we visit John near the Jordan we will learn something more of Jesus.

Gam. Yes I will be happy to once more see the one my father so much loved and respected. When do you think the road to Jericho will be safe?

Nic. I think of trying it in a few days, and when I learn that the road is cleared of these Arabs I will inform you and we will be pleased to go.

Gam. Thank you, I will be pleased to do so.

* The learned reader will notice that we retain King James' translation of Luke II, 2, The Greek is rendered thus by Wilson: "This was the first Registry of Quirinus (Cyrenius) Governor of Syria." Facts teach us that King James' translation is incorrect, as Cyrenius was not governor of Syria till ten years after the Registry, but he executed the work, and was afterwards governor of Syria.

TO MY RELATIVES IN KENTUCKY.

Dear brother George:—You wrote me in your last letter that you did not enjoy yourself as well attending meeting in Kentucky as you did when you used to go to my meetings in Virginia, and you give as your reason, that there is too much pride. Thank the Lord, you are thus getting your eyes open to this fashionable religion which is becoming so prevalent in this our day, and it is in the hope that I may induce you and my uncles, aunts and cousins in that and the surrounding vicinity, to unyoke yourselves from the popular tide and seek consolation with the blessed hope of a future immortality in the wounds of an humble and loving Savior, I address you through the medium of the PILGRIM, the sweet white winged messenger, whose motto is "Remove not the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set."

I will now call your attention to the language of the beloved apostle, when he says "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us and truly our fellowship is with his Son Jesus Christ." The first Epistle general of John 1st chapter 3d verse. What we want is apostolic or primitive religion, and the way to gain this is to take heed to the apostolic doctrine as from them flows forth the living stream as it gushed from its fountain, the Son of God. They, that is the apostles, stand as living witnesses to direct our feet in the channel of truth, being ordained by the Savior Himself, for this very purpose that we could read their testimony and not be deceived. John, the author of the language under consideration, was one of the number that was thus ordained, and when he wrote this language he endeavered to fix our minds upon the entire code of Heaven, for He called to the stand the entire cloud of witnesses, when He makes use of the plural we, for, says John, "that which we have seen and heard." In contemplating upon this language, we will notice 1st, The things that the Apostle saw. 2nd, The things that he heard; 3d, The solemn importance of taking heed thereto, as it is the only way that we can unite ourselves in fellowship with the Son of God and with those that will sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

Man was created pure and holy, but fell from his holy state through the subtility of a wicked enemy, Gen. 3d chapter, and God in pronouncing judgment upon unhappy man, made a proviso for his future happiness in the "promised seed" of the woman. See same chapter. But notwithstanding this, man sank deeper and deeper into the horrible pit of wickedness, until all of God's uncreated spiritual light seemed to be extinguished. But God in His love, would cause the light to spring up, as was plainly portrayed in the person of Able. When this light sprang up, subtility still existed. He blew upon the vital spark and made the earth to drink deep of its life giving principle, thus thinking that he would forever obliterate the name of the living God, but as time passed away and wickedness expanded, the tempter found that his plans had not altogether been successful, for in the days of Enos, men, in the place of a man, began to call upon the name of the Lord. The tempter seeing that all his former plans failed, began to invest new ones, so he induces the sons of God to take them wives from among the daughters of men, and as they thus married and were given in marriage, wickedness multiplied until the patience of God was tried, and his wrath revealed in the overthrow of the antidiluvian world, which was alive with human forms, and God's light only penetrating and shining through the avenues of one single family, namely, that of Noah's. Noah was righteous and stood as a living monument to warn the people. But it availed nothing, and God gave him the dimensions of an ark of safety which, if strictly followed, would bear him across the torrents of the mighty deep in which he could rest upon the face of the waters until his feet could stand in safety upon the pavilion of the new earth. This was strictly followed and it was so. What was so? Wickedness was annihilated, and a new era of things now exist upon the broad face of the earth. There is only eight souls that people it, and they are those that had found favor in the sight of God. One might think that in them and their posterity, that light and wisdom would spring up all around, but not so. The arch enemy, the prince of the power of sin appears. The seed of discord is sown, and soon its fruit begins to ripen into rebellion against God and His law. Time goes on, Peleg is born, the earth is divided and nations are made. Now begins war, commotion and bloodshed until God makes known the power of his vengeance by the overthrow of the cities of Sodom and Gomorroh. Even this, as terrible as it was, seemed not to stay the bilious tide that was then raging among the new born nations of the earth. This was the state of things when Abram the son of Heber, who was the progenitor of the Hebrew nation, appeared. Abraham was a man full of righteousness, had a perfect knowledge of the Great Deity, that made the Heaven and the earth, and so zealous was he in the cause, that he espoused that God was called the God of Abram, who was by the special appointment of God called Abraham, and God made a covenant with Abraham, giving him the seal of circumcision and the promise that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

Again, a new era was ushered in, but it was not yet fully developed, the nations were still in darkness, the promised seed of Abraham were led into bondage. After the expiration of 200 years, God visits them through the medium of his servant Moses. Moses was a prophet, and God wrought great wonders by his hands which you can read at your pleasure. They are recorded in the book of Exodus. The new era that had been ushered in 200 years previous to this time, began now to develop itself. The commandments of God were given from Mount Sinai, and they were for the express purpose of instructing this peculiar organized body that they should not fall after the example of there progenitors. God's dealings with His people were very wonderful. His love and his patience were both exhibited. He committed unto them His oracles. He raised up unto them prophets, who would warn them of their wicked ways and foretell them of the glorious events that should and would happen, that a deliverer would come and turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Notwithstanding all of this host of heavenly witnesses and the still greater extension of Heavenly light, the human mind was so depraved, and its tendency so much downward, that high places were built up, God's teachers suffered martyrdom, and gods made of gold and silver, wood and stone were erected, but some, such as priests, scribes, Levites, Sadducees and Pharisees, still held to the law but they interpreted them wrong, giving out that this mighty Deliverer would come in the person of a mighty conqueror who would set upon the throne of David and rule as a mighty prince, bringing under his dominion all of the surrounding nations and thus according to the future covenant, they would be blessed. And while the people stood in high expectation, through tradition and the influence of these false teachers, there was a wonderful event took place. For behold it was written in the prophets, "I will send my messenger before thy face to prepare thy way before thee." The angels warn the shepherds by bringing good news unto men. The star appears, the wise men start and follow its course, king Herod is troubled, and the empire of Cæsar begins to tremble. Upon the lonely banks of the Jordan, stands one dressed in camel's hair whose meat was locusts and wild honey, and he spoke, saying, "Think not within yourselves that ye have Abraham to your father, for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up seed unto Abraham, and now behold the axe is laid unto the root of the trees, every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire" Matt. 3d chapter. This my beloved, is some of the things that the apostle John saw, of them he saw as they stood upon the statute rocks, and some he saw with his own eyes, and they all stand connected with the things that he saw and heard. But he saw things that were still greater than they, for he was present when the last named prophet, John the Baptist, uttered the language, "Behold the Son of God that taketh away the sin of the world." He was present when the Son of God was made manifest by the descension of the Holy Ghost. He was present and witnessed the scene when the Son of God committed himself into the hands of his forerunner John, and was buried beneath the waves of the river Jordan. He was present and heard the voice from Heaven proclaiming; "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." He was ordained by that acknowledged Son of God and witnessed his three years mission upon the earth. He witnessed the mighty powers that was in him, when he turned the water into wine, delivered his sermon on the Mount, and when he made the blind to see, the lame to walk, the lepers cleansed, and he heard His voice when it penetrated the dark recesses of the cavern, saying 'Lazarus, come forth.' He was present at the memorable scene when the pall bearers of the last son of the widow of Nain, was conveying him to his grave. He witnessed the joyous acclamations of the multitude when the Son of God stopped the bier, reanimated the dead and delivered him to his weeping mother alive. He heard him utter the language; "I am the resurrection and the life, if any man believe in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live again." He saw and heard Him say; "I am the way, the truth and the life, and no man cometh unto the Father but by me." He heard him make his urgent appeals to the people, to come to a reformation of life in order that they might stand as living monuments of God's mercy, and enjoy the blessedness that is in reserve for them in the city of the living God, and also when he said unto the people, "Except ye repent ye shall all in like manner perish," that is, perish just as those Jews did whose blood Pilate mingled with the Jews sacrifices to be burned up with fire, and many other things the apostles saw which is too tedious to mention. They were with him when he was betrayed by Judas, when he healed the servants ear, and also when he was taken by the soldiers, taken from tribunal to tribunal, when he was insulted, scoffed at and spit upon, when his temples were pierced with thorns, when judgment was given against him and he going forth bearing the burden of his own cross. O, the dreadful scene that follows! He is marched to the top of Calvary's mountain, the Cross is erected, his flesh is pierced by the iron nails, Heaven and earth vails themselves from the sight, for the sun darkened, the rocks rend and the vail of the temple is rent in twain from the bottom to the top, and the prosecutor is made to exclaim, "Truly this is the Son of God." His life is taken from him, He is taken from the cross, his body deposited in the sepulcher, the stone is rolled at the door and sealed with the signature of Pilate, a cohort of soldiers is given, to stand as sentinels around the tomb, with the instructions that if the body was taken, death would be their doom. But blessed be the name of God, for Jesus was not to be confined to the narrow limits of the grave, for says He, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it again." The third day came, the angel was dispatched, the sentinels trembled and became as dead men; the stone rolled away and the Savior was resurrected. He broke the bands of death, led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men.

This all happened to prove His power, to make reconciliation for the sin of Adam and to make a way possible that we, the posterity of Adam, might be restored to friendship and favor with God, and have the blessed hope within us that by following in the footsteps of our glorious Exampler that we too might attain to the resurrection of the dead.

After Jesus had been condemned to death and the sentence put into execution, those whom he had chosen and ordained for witnesses had their confidence shaken to that degree that they forsook their high calling and went back to their old occupations, but the Savior recalled them and when the twelve reassembled, the Savior appears unto them, and assured them that he had obtained all power in Heaven and in earth, and for this cause they are to go forth and "Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo! I with you alway even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28; 18-19-20. We notice that this language, beginning at the word teach, ending with the pronoun you in the 20th verse, bears out the idea of a repetition of action all through. We notice in the first place that the Savior says teach, after this, baptize in the name of the Father, then baptize in the name of the Son, then baptize in the name of the Holy Ghost, then comes the teaching them to observe all thing whatsoever He had commanded them, then the promise is annexed, of a continuation of His presence to the full consummation of time.

Now we will rehearse, "Go ye therefore," or for this reason, for what reason? Why for the reason that he had obtained all power. Where were they to go? Why to the nations of the earth. What were they to do? They were to teach them. What? Teach them that the promise annexed to the penalty in the Garden of Eden was realized, that the covenant made with Abraham had been made sure, that the promised seed that was to bless the nations had come, for he saith not, "and to seeds as of many, but as one, and to thy seed which is Christ." Gal. 3d chap. Christ had proven his power by raising the dead, Luke 8th chapter, by stilling the tempest and casting out a legion of devils. He had also suffered according to the Scriptures, John 19th chapter. His blood rested upon us. After these things have been fully made known unto us and we imbibe faith to believe it and thus see our deplorable condition, we must repent, "every one of us," Acts 2 36. What next? We must be baptized for the remission of sins, Acts 2; 33. This qualifies us for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Why was this baptism of water and the gift of the Holy Ghost necessary? "Except a man is born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." John 3; 3. "In the like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us." 1st Peter, 3; 21.

I will now notice the mode of baptism. The sacrament is performed by going into the water, Mark 1st chapter, and Acts 8th chapter and 38th verse, and after we are in the water we must then be buried under under the water, Romans 6th chapter, and this must be performed by a face forward movement, for we must be baptized and planted together "in the likeness of his death." When Christ died, he bowed his head and gave up the Ghost John 19; 30.

The Savior, in the Commission, makes use of the singular name and not of the plural names, hence when we are baptized in the name of the Father it does not necessarily baptize us in the name of the Son, and when we are baptized in the name of the Son, we are not, by that action, baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost. We must first be baptized in the name of the Father, then be baptized in the name of the Son, and then in the name of the Holy Ghost. The commission is a compound sentence, which is made up of suppressed sentences, the sentences being suppressed by the use of an ellipsis, when we are baptized in the name of the Father the copulative conjunction, and, is introduced which means add to or fill up. Now when we complete the sentence we must make a pattern of the first, which is a complete sentence, hence we must insert the word, baptize, as that is the word which is understood, and so with the third sentence. Then we will read, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and baptizing them in the name of the Son and baptizing them in the name of the Holy Ghost. This is all essentially necessary to introduce us into the Church Militant. We must now do the commandments in order that we can enter the Church triumphant, for "not every one that sayeth unto me Lord, Lord, can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven."

This brings us to the 3d division of the Commission, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." He commanded them to wash one anothers feet, with the penalty, "If I wash you not thou hast no part with me." John 13 chap. We are commanded five times, in the writings of the apostles, to salute one another with a holy kiss. The Scriptures also testify that if we are lovers of the world we are the enemies of God. We must be modest in our conversation. All of our talk must be coupled with fear. Our adorning must not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair and wearing of gold or putting on of apparel, but it must be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptable, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God, of great price."

In conclusion, I would say unto you my relatives, who may read this, if I have made any impression upon your mind, O, do not let them slip. If you need more instruction, which in all probability you will, send for the PILGRIM. Remit $1.50 to the editors, for one copy one year, and you will never regret it, or take it in clubs and it will come cheaper. Let us all prepare for Heaven and immortal glory. We may never see one another in this life, but if we only prepare for death, we will meet on the other side of Jordan. Your brother, JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

Bealington, W. Va.

SALVATION.

Salvation is a word frequently used in the Gospel and is full of meaning; was and spoken for the benefit of the human race. The reason it was placed on record, was because there was need of something to elevate the condition of the human race, they had need of being elevated because they had fallen from their high and lofty position, which they once held, and which God designed them to occupy when they were created and placed in the garden of Eden, but sorry to say, that memorable command of God to them, "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," has entailed the curse upon the human family, and gave cause to say there is need of some plan for the salvation of the human race to bring them out of the dire calamity into which they have fallen, because of their disobedience of God's command to them given in the garden of Eden. Whether God was disappointed or not in the way things turned out, we will not now discuss, but surely man had now fallen from his high and holy estate, and in the great wisdom displayed by the Creator, in placing the cherubims and flaming sword to keep the way of the tree of life so man would not reach forth and also partake of it, and live forever in this fallen condition, but after living out his period of existence he would moulder to dust again from whence he was taken, but this was not enough to satisfy that benevolent Creator, this only pertained to the sufferings of the body.

Now from what we learn from the Holy Scriptures, man was composed of more than one part, for it is said that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Again, it is said the body moulders back to dust, but the spirit goes to God who gave it, and it is very clearly set forth in the word of God, that the injury sustained reached higher than the body alone, for the spirit was also affected by the transgression, and the plan of salvation was more particularly for the benefit of that inner principle which lives forever.

O think of the wisdom displayed by the triune God; had to devise some plan to bring man out of this calamity which he brought himself into; think of the disinterested love displayed; the pain and suffering of the Son of God, so that the plan might be carried into effect which cost nothing less than the blood of a crucified Redeemer, which was shed on Calvary's bloody summit; think of the dying groans when he said, "if it be possible, let this cup pass from me nevertheless not my will, but thine be done."

Paul in writing to the Hebrews, 2d chapter, says, "If the word spoken by angels is steadfast, and every transgression received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto us by them that heard them." Here it is called by Paul a great salvation, and truly it is great, for when we contemplate what it cost and without its being carried into effect we never could have been brought to that standard of virtue to which we are brought through its merits.

Salvation means preservation from destruction or eternal death, then according to the defination of the term, the destiny of man was fixed, destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power which he brought upon himself by transgression, and had not God interfered man would have remained in that condition, but God preserved him from this awful calamity by bringing salvation to bear upon them, to save them from the impending danger they were standing in. At that time, the Apostle says "by grace are ye saved, through faith and that not of yourselves it is the gift of God." Grace means favor, and it was given, but not merited, not earned, but bestowed. Thanks be to God for the favor, let us one and all make use of the means which has so richly been bestowed upon us that we may be again, reinstated into the favor of God.

Now what are the means? Answer, Repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, are among the first principles by which we may attain the benefits intended, and it requires an effort on our part rest assured, and sometimes no small one to extricate ourselves from the

ANOTHER WAIL FROM THE CAMP.

In the Baptist Record published at Charleston, W. Va., of the date of Dec. 5th, 1872, we notice a "strike" at "Mourners Bench Religion Examined," over the initials 'M. E.' and under the caption "The 'Death Blow' Averted." If we were to look behind the veil "M. E." wears to hide his person we should not be surprised to see no less a character than Eld. M. Ellison the author of that stale and dead work called "Dunkerism Examined." The Eld. seems to have an aversion to "Dunkers" in general and myself in particular. From knowledge of the past I was prepared for almost anything from our opponent but was a little surprised to learn he had made a personal assault upon me under cover of a mask. Of all cowardice is there anything like stabbing at an opponent in the dark? If a "death blow" is worth resisting let it be done face to face or over the full signature. Such a medley of misquotations, misrepresentations and errors as are to be found in the article above mentioned we seldom see. We shall notice a few.

Among the first quotations he makes, or purports to have made, he has the following as our language: "wishes his right hand may be palsied, and his pen move no further, if any other motive prompts him than the welfare of souls." "M. E." is jubilant over this which he claims is a quotation from my tract; when the truth of the matter is there is no such quotation in the tract. What he says therefore relative to it amounts to nothing so far as it has reference to the tract. Again he says: "he (I) repudiates a person unless he has "been born of the water three times.'" The words "born of the water three times," "M. E." has set forth as a quotation when it is evident no such a sentence is found in the tract he was examining, neither has such an idea ever went forth from our lips as an idea we claim, or from any other person so far as I know. In the name of common sense when will that long since exploded and thread bare argument of "three births,' 'three baptisms' &c., be laid aside. Does not every sensible person (free from bigotry and prejudice), know that in performing the ordinance of water baptism as commanded by Jesus Christ, there is but one going in and one coming out—but once commencing to perform the ordinances of that "one baptism" and but once completing the work of that "one baptism," and that in performing the work that belongs to the said ordinance, there are three special acts expressive of our faith in the triune God and obedience to the command of our Lord; yet some persist in calling it "three baptisms," or "three births," and such like inappropriate terms, all of which comes with a bad grace from those who believe in the Divine trinity.

"M. E." says: "To tell an inquirer to believe in Christ and he shall be saved, Mr. F. assumes not to be God's promise, but man's." Now I "assumed" no such thing! I know, as is plainly "assumed" in that tract, that "whosoever believeth in him (Christ) shall receive remission of sins." I also know and assume that we are not saved or justified by faith alone. But if we believe in Christ unto obedience to his word, we shall receive the remission of sins. God's promise is "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Man's promise is "believe," and your sins are pardoned and you are saved without baptism. My assumption is in harmony with God's word and no other way will I "assume."

Again we quote "As the bitten Israelites looked upon the brazen serpent and was healed, so the anxious sinner believes in Christ and is saved. This is substantially what Elder Flory condemns." Instead of condemning I "substantially," in the tract as elsewhere, endorse the sum and substance of that text. The Israelites obeyed and lived. They were commanded to look and when they done so they lived. The sinner is commanded to "repent" after he believes in Christ and then "be baptized" in the name of the Lord Jesus "for the remission of sins" and then he shall live. But to tell the sinner to look with only an assenting faith, to Jesus and he shall be saved, "Is substantially what Eld. Flory condemns."

"M. E." refers (as usual) to the organization af the Brethren in a church capacity in Germany in 1708. For a man who lives "in a glass house to throw stones" so regardless of consequences is suicidal to say the least of it. The missiles he aims at the "Dunkers' have the effect to demolish his own "coveted retreat" so badly that it is "shivered to atoms" more than one hundred years this side of the "Dunkers" organization in Germany. And even if "M. E." would claim he is yet in the 'old hive' he has but little to boast of! All the evidence necessary to know whether we are in the line of 'Apostolic succession,' is this: Do we practice what they did as touching the doctrines of the Gospel. To know whether we are members of the Church of Christ we must 'examine ourselves to see whether we be in the faith' or not—in that faith that was delivered to the saints.

"M. E." further says "A large majority of these persons whose change dates from these meetings, would doubtless be accepted by Mr. F. as good Dunkers upon three immersions, without additional pious qualities." We would accept of them upon their confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, evidence of their repentance toward God, and an expressed willingness to obey the gospel, trusting in a Saviour's love. A very exemplary member of the church was first "convicted" at a dance party, but we would by no means encourage dance parties as a suitable place to bring about the conviction of sinners. Neither can we recommend the mourner's bench as a necessary means to a genuine conversion.

In his concluding remarks 'M. E.' says "I am not blind to the fact that the 'anxious bench' as Mr. F. styles it may be imprudently used, but this abuse is no just argument against its prudent use, but the 'death blow is aimed at revival meetings in general." Why my dear sir! I never said one word against its "prudent" use, it was the "imprudent" use I was aiming the 'death blow' at. I endeavored to show how 'imprudent' it was used. I did not even attempt to lay a finger in the way of all that God may be doing in way of blessing such means to the good of souls, neither shall I. Now the question is how far may we go with the "mourner's bench" before it is "imprudently used." Well we will take the "law and testimony" to decide the matter. That decides it is not in the gospel, therefore not in the church. Then it follows the 'prudent use' of that auxillery to conversion stops just OUTSIDE the Church. There I am willing to leave it for nominal professors to lounge on!

"M. E." concludes by saying my "blow is lost in the air." And I prove "nothing" I promise to do. Passing strange that the blow is lost in the air and yet it hit somebody! Such nervousness as is perceptible in "The 'Death Blow' Averted" did not originate without a cause. And if it takes over two and a-half columns in a medium sized journal for "M. E." to disprove 'nothing,' how much space would he occupy to disprove something? That the 'blow' is lost in the air is simply a bare assertion, consequently worth nothing. I, as well as others, have evidence it has not been a blow struck in vain but to God be all the honor and glory ascribed for sending the 'shaft' from the "bow that was drawn at a venture" home to the heart of many who have awoke to the fact there is danger all around while reclining at ease in the chambers of Babylon. They have heard the voice, "Come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." J. S. FLORY.

Unwonted care is the creature of useless indulgence, or wanton extravagance; the really needful in life can be obtained without it.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON THE LAND-MARKS.

of the Holy City, and from the things which are written in this book." I do not wish to set myself up as a judge, but I do sometimes fear there is a little of that removing disposition manifested, when brethren will speak so lightly, and disrespectfully of those decisions, when after much perplexing labor they are the very best that could be done for the time; or when brethren will not assent to the order of, or in fact to hear the church unless they are allowed to make the proviso. "If the order or demand is in accordance with the Gospel," this certainly is claiming what the Savior never granted, and is giving a key to every member whereby to open a door, the keeping of which He entrusted exclusively to the church.

And also, something of that spirit is manifested when brethren will say, such are only the decision of District or Annual Meeting, and hence only traditional. I appeal to our better judgment to decide who is in the right; those insubordinate members, or Christ the head of the body, or church. He virtually says, hear the church, but they say you need not submit to all the decisions of District and A. M. If the Savior had said, if he neglect to hear the Gospel, it would materially change the matter; but as it is the church that is to be heard the inference is plainly drawn, that the church has full authority to dispose of difficulties between members, even to the disowning of those that neglect to hear decisions, although there may be neither precept nor example found in the Gospel on which to base her decisions. The power vested in her hands is amply sufficient. It is not claimed that the church or any part, independent of its HEAD is infallible, but the pledges given her by her supreme Head are claimed for by promise, not only till now, but, "Even unto the end of the world." These truths are taught by the faithful preacher of the cross. The true convert not only believes in Jesus as the only Savior, and in the Gospel as the only means or power of God unto salvation, or in His church as the only orginization where the means of salvation are administered and carried out, but he also believes the promises alluded to above.

"Where two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them." "Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

These, and many more, are the pledges given by her great Head, and believed by all her faithful children. Earth may shake to its center; kingdoms rise and fall, divide and subdivide, but the church, built on the "Chief corner stone" has stood, and will stand, unshaken, undaunted and undivided, through all the floods that the dragon may cast after her. Then stand to the "Ancient Landmarks" and you will stand right in the church, and be surrounded by an impregnable fortress, the promises of God to the Church, viz: "Though a mother may forget the child she bare, yet will not I forget thee O Zion!" The church cannot be divided, never! NO NEVER!

MAKE YOUR MOTHER HAPPY.

Children, make your mother happy;
Make her sing instead of sigh;
For the mournful hour of parting
May be very, very nigh.

Children, make your mother happy;
Many griefs she has to bear;
And she wearies 'neath her burdens—
Can you not those burdens share?

Children, make your mother happy;
Prompt obedience cheers the heart;
While a wilful disobedience
Pierces like a poisoned dart.

Children, make your mother happy;
On her brow the lines of care
Deepen daily—don't you see them?
While your own are smooth and fair.

Children, make your mother happy;
For beneath the coffin lid
All too soon her face so saint-like,
Shall forever more be hid.

Bitter tears and self upbraidings
Cannot bring her back again;
And remorseful memories
Are a legacy of pain.

Oh, begin to-day, dear children,
Listen when your mother speaks;
Render quick and sweet obedience,
For your highest good she seeks.

Loves you better than all others—
For your sake herself denies;
She is patient, prayerful, tender,
Gentle, thoughtful, true and wise.

Never, while you live dear children,
Though you search the rounded earth
Will you find a friend more faithful
Than the one who gave you birth.

NOBLE CHILDREN.

We hear so often of noble men and women, that I thought it no more than just, I should tell a few of the noble aerions of little children.

A few years ago, an aged couple were wandering along the streets of Nebraska City; they were in search of a certain doctor's office, but how were they to find him? The old man was blind, and the old lady did not know where he lived.

After wandering for some time, they met a number of little boys on their way to school. "Can you tell us where Dr. H. lives?" inquired the aged lady.

"Yes ma'am," answered one of the little boys. "Come, I'll show you where he lives." "You'd better come on to school; you'll be tardy and miss your perfect mark," called out one of the others.

"Go on, boys: I'll come directly," he called to his companions. Then taking hold of the blind man's hand he led them down the street, across it, then down the opposite side for some distance, when a man coming up the street, called; "Where are you going, Charlie?

"Why pa, this old man is blind, and they wanted to go to Dr. H.'s and didn't know the way. I'm taking them there" said the little fellow timidly.

"Well, I'll take them there; you may run back to school now," said the gentleman, kindly. Then he took them to the doctor's, and the little boy ran back to school. Children, don't you think he acted nobly? I do not know whether he missed his "perfect mark," or not; but I am pretty sure God put down a mark for him, worth more than all the "perfect marks" in the world.

One day a friend stopped at a little girl's house, on her way to a neighbor's, and wanted this little girl, whom I will call Edie, and her sister to go with her; but Edie's ma said one of them must stay to rock baby. Now, Edie wished her to say which should stay, but she said they better decide between themselves.

Here was a struggle; both wished so much to go. For a time neither spoke, but finally Edie said smilingly and cheerily,—

"You may go, sister. I'll stay and rock baby," and took her place at baby's cradle. She could hardly keep back the tears, but she smiled all over her face, and gave up sweetly to her sister. Now wasn't she a noble little girl? Could we give up our fondest delights and pleasures without a murmur, and as cheerfully as did this dear little girl?

In a school in a village in the East, was a poor girl subject to severe fits, and consequently, she would talk and act very strangely sometimes. One day I was standing at the schoolroom window, watching the girls, who were playing "ring," in the yard below. Poor Josephine went up and asked to play with them. "No! no" answered some of the girls. "Don't let her in, she's crazy!" "She shan't have hold of my hand!" "Nor mine, she's crazy!" Josephine burst into tears and turned away.

"Come back, come back, Josie, you can have hold of my hand!" cried Jennie W., running after her.

Jennie coaxed her to come back; and on seeing this some of the other girls relented,—for they all loved Jennie. Thus, the poor girl was allowed to play with the rest.

Poor Josephine is dead now; but she remembered kind Jennie to her dying day; and I think God will remember her, too.—Young Folk's Rural.

TRUTH.

Dear Pilgrim:—It is said that "truth is mighty and will prevail." How important then that we, at all times, speak the truth in all our actions and dealings. It is also said that "actions speak louder than words." How careful and watchful then should we be, that by our actions we do not speak an untruth. A falsehood or untruth may be acted out in many different ways, such as giving short weight, short measurement &c. Or suppose a man sells his produc to his neighbor for more than market value, the neighbor not being posted in regard to market prices, is he not taking advantage of his neighbor and acting out an untruth by taking more than lawfully belongs to him? Or for instance, a publisher says his paper is published weekly at $ — per year, when in fact he only publishes 50 numbers which do not make a year, neither does he publish his paper every week when he only publishes 50 numbers. Is he not then acting out an untruth? With the same propriety might the publisher of a monthly journal publish 11 numbers and call it a year. Let us all be consistent and make our words good and be honest, truthful and upright in all our dealings, not only in a temporal but also in a spiritual point of view, that we all speak the same thing.

A LOVER OF TRUTH.

Although this was not intended to be personal, yet as it may seem to touch our case, it makes it proper that we should make an explanation. In our business transactions it is generally acceded that custom makes law. According to our present labor system, laborers are hired at so much per day, when in reality they only labor ten hours, some eight and some less as the contract may be, yet they all labor for so much per day and by so doing, act out no untruth. Again teachers are hired for a certain compensation per month, but in that month they labor only twenty days, and six hours constitute their days labor. Their contracts are considered honorably fulfilled without acting any untruth. Just so, it has become a custom among a large number of publishers to issue fifty papers for a year. They agree with their patrons to publish a weekly paper at $—per year with the understanding that the year is to consist of fifty weeks or fifty issues. It occurs to us that such transactions are perfectly honest and that we act out no untruths in carrying them out.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, PA., Nov. 5th, 1872.

Bros. Brumbaugh:

We have again received another letter from our much-loved sister Hollowbush and by her request send it for publication. Perhaps some of the brethren and sisters may appreciate its contents as well as we.

E. R. STIFLER.

Dearly Beloved Sister:—The PILGRIM and your letter came in due season, for which I feel to thank you with a greatful heart. They came like gentle refreshing showers on the new mown grass. I love the Brethren's periodicals, they are so very encouraging. I have abundance of time to read and meditate, and death, the stern monarch of the grave, and eternity, seems to be the topic of my meditation. You will not wonder why it is when I tell you that he has visited our household four times in four years (one month more) and claimed four of its inmates for his victims. The first was a grand daughter three years old; the second was a grand son eight months old; the third was our son, the father of the little boy. He died with the full assurance that he was going to obtain an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fadeth not away. The fourth was my dear husband. One year ago last night he was at your place, (I saw it in his diary.) Then he was full of life and love, and had an ardent desire to do his Heavenly Master's Will O, how sad two-thirds of the year has been to me! and what a loss! But I know it is his eternal gain. I am now sitting in the chamber where three of my dear departed ones breathed their last precious breath. I have much to think of that transpired during their sickness; to think of their prayers, and their last words of admonition. How oft my husband prayed that we might be one unbroken family in heaven. O, may his prayers prevail! Methinks they will, for "The fervent effectual prayer of the righteous man availeth much." It appears I have a heavy cross to bear, but I want to strive to bow with humble submission to the Divine Will of Him who tempers the blast to the shorn lamb. O, dear sister, I ought not complain of crosses or trials, for I am surrounded with many brethren, sisters and kind neighbors that are members of other denominations that seem to have great sympathy for me, and attend to my wants. I sometimes feel lonely, but Christins need not be lonely. They have the promise of the best of company if they will only accept of it. They have the company of Him who spake as never man spoke; and who is chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely. We have the promise of the Comforter, who will come and abide with us forever. The Christian's privileges are great. He does not appreciate them as he ought, neither can he comprehend them.

On the 12th of October, we held our Lovefeast. We had a very happy time, and a large congregation The members were nearly all present to partake of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our blessed Lord and Master, whom we are trying to serve. The same day there was one added to the church by being buried with Christ by baptism, beneath the sparkling waves. Please tell Bro. G. Myers that it was Bro. Stern's daughter; tell him that the old grandmother who had her limb dislocated, when he was here, is perfectly well again. This afternoon our Sabbath school closed for this season. We had quite a serious time. Bro. Conner addressed the children very touchingly. He advised them to abstain from every appearance of evil; that they should never use the filthy weed nor utter profane language, but keep their mouths clean that they may praise God with their lips, for God is a God of purity, and as such we should worship Him. I cannot relate all he said, but it was true. Sister you wrote that your nephew was the first link broken from the chain of your family circle. I can greatly sympathize with you, for my near relations are nearly all gone. My parents are dead although they lived to a good age. They were both in their eighty-first year. I had but one brother, and he was killed while blasting rocks. I had six little grand-children, that were taken away by the hand of death. Two of them were accidentally killed, but I have full faith to believe that they are now chanting the songs of redeeming love in the very innermost courts of Heaven, for they never came under the power of the original sin, and of such is the kingdom of Heaven.

Then let us forbear to complain,
Since they have gone from our sight.
For we all may behold them again,
With new and redoubled delight.

My health is not as good as it was some time ago, yet I can still attend church for which I feel very thankful, but am fearful that when Winter comes, I may be confined to the house again. I am still striving to fulfill the last promise I made to my dear husband, that I would love the Lord for his sake. And I say to you press onward, yes press onward, dear sister, the prize is in view. There's a crown of bright glory awaiting for you. I will yet say that I have but one sister in the flesh and she is a worthy sister in the Lord. Her name is Susan Sidle. Perhaps you have seen her name in the C. F. C. I will now close and retire to rest hoping that goodness and mercy may follow us all our days, and that we may dwell in the house of the Lord forever. HANNAH HOLLOWBUSH.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE BRETURLN IN MIDDLLTOWN VALLEY, MD.

Dear brethren:—A short time ago, I read in the PILGRIM a brief history of the brethren of Shenandoah Valley, Va., which was interesting to me, and no doubt to others. I will therefore give a similar account of our church, as it has existed in Middletown Valley, Frederick Co. Md., at least as far as I can recollect, and from what I have learned from others older than myself.

Among the first of the brethren who came to this state, at least in the vicinity where the writer resides, was John Slifer, the writers grandfatner, who from the best date, emigrated here from Bucks Co., Pa., about the year 1780. I saw, in the year 1833 the very house in which he was born, and, also lodged there one night. Its location is near a village called Fryburg, Lehigh Co. Pa. With him, my grandfather, came his wife, her brother, whose name was Gaver, and a sister who had married a man by the name of Peter Miller. All those named except John Slifer were natives of New Jersey. All were members of the church. I never learned what part of New Jersey they came from, but presume it was across the Deleware river from Doylstown, as I understand there is a congregation of the brethren there yet. About the same time, there were several families also, in this Valley, yet north of this place some distance, by the name of Leatherman, Grosnickle, and Harshman.

When they organized a church I cannot tell. About the year 1810, their preachers were, Leatherman and Furguson; the latter was the first English preacher in this section, of the Brethren, or indeed any other denomination. I have been told that he always had large congregations to hear him.

About the year 1820 their preachers were Jacob Leatherman, Christian Hershman and John Holler, all of whom are dead. Then followed Daniel Brown and Christian Hershman who are also dead.

In 1840 Henry Koontz and Geo. Bear were elected. The latter died about a year ago. Bro. Koontz having moved out of the district, the writer was elected in his place in 1847. Since the latter period, the circuit in which the brethren named officiate, embracing the entire Valley of Middletown, has been divided, the National Turnpike being the dividing line. North of the turnpike the ministering brethren are Jonathan Baker and Geo. Leatherman, and the congregation is best known as the Grosnickle Church. South of said pike the congregation is known as the Brownsville Church. Brownsville is in Washington Co., Md. Those who minister in Holy things, in that congregation, are Cornelius Castle, Eli Yourtee and the writer.

With regard to the prosperity (spiritual) of these congregations, I presume it will compare favorably with others of our churches, as none of us are without our difficulties. But I think I may now say, for both divisions, that it is our purpose to endeavor to grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, He being our Foundation and chief corner stone. It therefore behooves us to be careful as to the material we use in building thereon. Let it be that which is described by the apostle Paul as being superior to all the rest,—gold. There are other materials that are inferior, silver, precious stone, wood, hay, stubble. The best material possesses dross, showing that there is a necessity for the interceding prayers of our Saviour in our behalf,—having gone to prepare a mansion for us. Let us glorify His name.

Dear Pilgrim:—Find enclosed a few lines to show how we are getting along out here. As for the brethren they are yet few in number, but we hope that in the future it will be better. We wish to inform your readers that we have a healthy and fruitful country, plenty of chances for home-seekers from the East; homesteads and wild land at low prices. If any of the brethren, let them be where they may, wish to emigrate to Nebraska to seek homes, call off at Fremont, Neb. before looking elsewhere, (especially laboring brethren.) I have traveled around over considerable of Neb. and finally located in Cedar Creek Valley, Boon Co., where I took a homestead of 160 acres of land, close to good water and mill power. There is yet plenty of good land to be had as homesteads, but is being taken up rapidly.

The land in Cedar Valley is level, very fertile and produces good crops of every kind. Those wishing to come out here had better not delay, as there is yet homes for many. For further information, write to Daniel Fouts, or Isaac P. Shively, Fremont, Nebraska.

CAN'T DO WITHOUT THE PILGRIM.

On account of money being a little scarce, some of our former readers thought they would do without the PILGRIM, but when the time came for its usual visit there was an important visitor missing. The expression of such is' "Send on the PILGRIM again, we can't do without it." We are glad of this for several reasons. First, it shows us that the PILGRIM fills an important place in the home circle and it does us good to know that it is missed. Secondly, we are made glad because we believe that we are doing a good work and that it will be a real benefit to such as are striving to gain the great reward, and lastly, because we need the aid and encouragement of all to make our work a success.

We sometimes feel like giving extracts from our numerous letters, showing to what degree the PILGRIM is appreciated by some of its readers. One says, "I have been a reader of your worthy paper for the last year, and have become so attached to its weekly visits that I cannot think of having it stopped, I am not a member of the Church, but think the time will not be long until I shall be numbered with the pilgrim band." Another is a poor widow who lives far from the places of meeting, and has no conveyance and therefore seldom gets to meeting. She says; "The dear PILGRIM comes almost like an angel visit, and when, in my lonely hours, I read from its pages the productions of my dear brethren and sisters and hear of the welfare of Zion, my heart overflows with gratitude. May God bless your labors that the welcome messenger may continue to go forth filling many precious souls with the bread of Life," &c.

Others have sons and daughters residing in the far West, who are out of Christ. To them the PILGRIM must be sent with the fond hope that it may be the means of their return to God. Another wants it sent to a friend who is no member, but thinks he will be after reading the PILGRIM a year. It truly makes our souls to rejoice when we have the assurance that our work goes forth on its weekly mission accompanied with the prayers of fond parents that it may be the means of converting their children and others that are yet out of Christ.

Brethren and sisters, have you the welfare of precious souls at stake? If so, improve the golden opportunity that is presented. Do not feel that you have done your duty until you have supplied every son and daughter, whether in or out of Christ, with the PILGRIM. It may be the means, in the hands of God, to save their souls, which is of more importance than if you were to give them great riches. The greatest good you can do in this life, is to labor for the salvation of your children and the world. Think of this and make use of the means that God has blessed to accomplish this end.

ARE WE LABORING FOR THE WELFARE OF ZION?

Had we not this blessed assurance, the oil of our lamp would not be consumed in the midnight hour. Even now while the busy millions are wrapped in the deep slumber of night, we are still at our post. Daily, we feel the weight of our position growing upon us, and we are made to think if our dear readers could experience the care that is bearing us down, least we should do or say something that might mar the peace or good of Zion, they would make every allowance for our failures.

We may have failed in carrying out our designs fully, and especially at this time as our labors are so great that we have not been able to give our contributors the attention they should have and in consequence, we may admit some papers that should have been modified, and left others out that should be admitted, but we have such faith in our brethren that we believe that all are laboring for the welfare of Zion and in this hope we excuse our neglect. That our work is greatly blessed seems evident from the general expression of our readers, and that still greater blessings may rest upon it is the burden of our prayer. We are deeply concerned for the welfare of sinners and the upbuilding of the Church and have determined to spend and be spent in laboring for the Lord and the cause of righteousness. Brethren and sisters, aid us by laboring for us in increasing our list of subscribers and enlarging our borders.

J. S, F. Your requests will be attended to. We cannot well send the PILGRIM every other week, but will send it every week for the amount named. What we give to the poor we hope will not be lost.

A CORRECTION. In No. 2 there was a blunder committed in a marriage notice, which we cannot account for. We have it Geo. Shathower and Sarah Springer, by David Goodyear, where it should be Geo. W. Slathower and Sarah E. Springer, by Eld. Moses Miller. The parties will please pardon, as it was done through a mistake.

ALMANACS. The complaint is, "we do not receive our ALMANACS." We do this business in such a way that we are sure they are sent. The trouble is most certainly with the mail and post masters. We have good evidence, to suspect some for detaining them in the office. We design that every subscriber shall have an ALMANAC, and therefore, are sending them the second time to such as did not get them.

ODD NO. WANTED.—Will some good brother, sister or friend who is not preserving the file, please send to my address, the PILGRIM bearing date May 21st 1872? Bro. B. does not have any, and I failed to get the No. It will confer quite a favor upon me, as I wish to have them bound

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Sidney Rigdon, author of the Mormon Bible, is dead.

The earthquake shocks of Dec. 14, on the northwestern coast, are said to have been the first ever felt so far north. They do not appear to have been very severe, and caused but little damage. In Portland, Oregon, chandeliers vibrated and clocks were stopped.

Many of the Episcopal clergy in the Pittsburgh diocese, at a recent convention, advocated an abandonment of the Sunday School as an agency of spiritual instruction, and a return to the ancient method of making parents responsible for the work now committed to Sunday School teachers.

A well known clergyman was recently asked his opinion of a young lady much afflicted with the "Grecian bend." He replied that she reminded him of the woman mentioned in the Scripture, "who had a spirit of infirmity, and could in no wise lift up herself."

Sunflowers are raised in Watonwan Co., Minn for fuel. The oily seed in the flowers is found to make a hot fire, and the woody stock, when dried, furnishes a good substitute for timber, which is very scarce in that region. It is estimated that two acres will produce enough to last an ordinary family through a long winter.

The Phœnix tells us that phosphate digging in South Carolina is rapidly increasing. One company mined 15,000 tons during the last year, and the production from river deposits alone amounted to 40,000 tons in the last twelve months. It is thought that the entire products of the State will be increased not less than 40 per cent. during the present year.

A Long Bridge.—The river Tay, in Scotland, is to be spanned by a bridge that will be the longest in the world. The Victoria bridge at Montreal, which has heretofore been the longest is 9,191 feet; that now being constructed over the Tay will be 10,321 feet. It lacks but eighty yards of being two miles in length. The work is to be finished in three years from May 1871. The greatest height of the structure will be eighty-eight feet above highwater mark.

THE ALTAR AT HOME.

Oh well I remember a long time ago,
While a stranger now lonely I roam;
The scenes of my childhood, the friends of my youth,
And the hallowed altar at home.

Where a mothers' devotion at evening with ours
Went up through the star-lighted dome;
And we knelt with a father to worship in prayer,
Round the hallowed altar at home.

At morn, our hymns with the songs of the birds,
Thrilled out on the soft balmy air;
And we knelt ere we went to the toils of the day,
Round that hallowed altar of prayer.

But the home of my childhood is desolate now—
We were gathered away one by one;
The light faded out from those beautiful scenes,
And the altar is broken and gone.

Yet faith to my rapturous vision unfolds,
A home in a city afar;
When I kneel on my journey to worship alone,
At my altar now everywhere.

And I know they are there at that happier home,
And that free from all sorrow and pain,
I soon shall be called from my altar below,
To join them in worship again.

Then let the glad years of eternity roll,
No anguish nor penitent prayer;
Or a desolate one with the cross all alone,
Will be heard at the altar up there.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

"THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?"

BY ELD. B. F. MOOMAW.

We noticed the fact in our former communication, that many of the impostors of our times were attempted to be palmed upon an honest and unsuspecting populace, by pretending for it divine authority, or at least divine sanction, and it is remarkable indeed that an intelligent public is so easily imposed upon, but strange as it is, it is not more strange than true. The critical student of the human character however, very soon discovers that the children of men are generally, if not universally either too credulous or too incredulous, too ready to beleive and adopt a theory of human invention, and too slow to accept and embrace a divine institution, ready, as it appears to endorse, and associate themselves with the institutions of men, upon the mere pretext of divine sanction with the slightest shade of testimony from the Book of God. Such testimony indeed, as to the careful and prudent observer would be no testimony at all, as is clearly exhibited in the argumeots used in support of the different human institutions. The ingenuous partisan in these efforts with the pious inquirer invariably makes quotations from the Bible, which by the unwary is accepted as conclusive authority, when in fact there is no relevancy whatever, and which cannot, by any fair interpretation, have any application to the matter in question, and which, doubtless, never entered the mind as a basis for the foundation of these institutions, but a necessary after thought conceived and produced for them, while on the other hand, we demand the most demonstrative evidence in order to the exercise of faith in, and acceptation of a divine institution. This is clearly seen in the history of the advent of Jesus Christ into the world, and the introduction of His holy religion, as well as in all his subordinate institutions, not to speak of the many similar circumstances under former dispensations, yea, notwithstanding the undoubted evidence that he has given to the world of his divine origin and attributes the clearness in which he has communicated his Father's will, and his positive declarations as to the advantage or disadvantage of believing, respecting and obeying or not obeying it, a large proportion of the intelligent world gives this all important subject little or no attention, while another large and respectable class, profess to believe, but treat it with utter indifferance and disrespect, at least many of his commands and ordinances.

God in all his intercourse with men, well knowing the skeptical turn of the human mind, in things pertaining to godliness and designing the salvation and happiness of the human family, and that we should on our part be left without excuse, delivered His will in the most clear and unmistakable language, neither obscure nor ambiguous. Therefore, we conclude that what God designed that we should do, is clearly indicated in His word, and that for which we have no precept nor example in His word, He did not intend that we should engage in, however plausible it might appear. This idea, as it appears to me, furnishes us a safe rule by which we may determine upon the introduction or recommendation of any theory, from whence it is, whether it be of God or of men.

Concluded.

Dear Editors:—Reformation is very desirable, and indeed from the appearance of things at present it is much needed. But as long as people entertain a good opinion of themselves, and have an idea that there is a great deal of religion and righteousness in the earth, it cannot be expected they will become any better. Christ has said, "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," and it is certain that people will act according to this maxim, however sick they may be, if they imagine they are well. Many might have become good had they not judged themselves to be so while they were otherwise, hence, it follows that people must first see they are not right before they will seek after amendment, and while they are in a dark and bewildered state, the most glaring evils and inconsistencies are not easily perceived by them, and it is often a very difficult task to convince them of their impropriety. Indeed it is impossible to do this if they have so refused to receive the truth in the love of it, that God has sent them strong delusions to believe a lie. It requires no great degree of learning to prove that the Christian world is now in a very fallen and degenerated state, and that the number of those who possess true piety, is very few. And yet we find that the generality of professing Christians have an idea that religion is in a very prosperous condition, while some are almost ready to conclude that the Millennial state of the Church is about to take place. But I would candidly ask, do we see anything characteristic of the true kingdom of God, which consists in righteousness and peace? Is not every man' shand, comparatively, against his neighbor, and was there ever a time when cheating, dishonesty and injustice was so general as at the present day? It is true, we now and then hear it said by one and another, that there is a great revival at such or such a place. If, by this, it is meant that people are becoming proselytes to some sect, I am willing to admit of its being correct, but at the same time I must remark, for people to come forward and unite themselves to some society is no proof that the world is getting any better, or that the persons themselves have become any better, for we seldom see them more humble or more inclined to do what is right than they were before, and in some instances they appear only to be worse. Now had the tree been made good the fruit would be good also.

It is clearly to be seen that even those few societies that were once zealous for the truth and bore a faithful testimony against the corruptions and evils in the Christian world, are fallen into decay, and many things which they have highly approved in their founders, they now condemn in others. Where is that regard for righteousness and that firmness in rebuking iniquity which we discover in the first preachers among them? These pious men have, no doubt, gone to receive the reward of their faithfulness, but little did many of them imagine that their labors in clearing away the rubbish and planting the good seed of the Kingdom, would be so soon lost, and briars and thorns spring up in the vineyard to choke the plants of righteousness.

These honest men, for so many of them were, began in the spirit, but their numerous followers are likely to end in the flesh. The friendship of the world which they have been led to embrace, is enmity with God, and it will be well for them to remember from whence they are fallen and repent and do their first works lest the candlestick be wholly removed out of its place.

No reformation can be expected as long as people suffer themselves to be led by blind guides and teachers, and they are looked upon as patterns to imitate, for I appeal to the impartial and candid observer, if there is not a greater degree of pride and outward grandure exhibited in the lives of the generality of those called ministers, in this day, than there is in their hearers to whom they pretend to teach humility, and do they not, like the false prophet in old time, prophesy smooth things, and with feigned words make merchandise of them, assuming to themselves, at the same time, the sole right to the key of knowledge to lock and unlock as they think proper, and if a congregation of people are rich, and will pay them ibe all ,they will undertake to impart to them the knowledge of salvation, but if they are poor and cannot come up to their demands in pecuniary matters, they must remain ignorant. These things are but too true and until people come to exercise their own judgments, and examine for themselves in matters of religion, we shall see no change for the better. A PILGRIM.

SOBER THOUGHTS FOR HONEST PROFESSORS.—NO 1.

Heaven-aspiring souls, and all ye that truly have a desire to walk in the light of divine truth, permit me to present to you, for serious consideration, a few thoughts touching that subject which we believe is dear to your hearts, viz; Salvation through the merits of a crucified Redeemer.

First, conceive the idea that it is possible, in this age of fanaticism and error, to be honestly in the wrong, and that many a snare is being set to entrap the unwary, and that we are all exposed to the cunning craftiness of Satans' agencies. Many unsuspecting persons unwittingly step into line with those that are rushing on in the tide of popular religion, and join hands with those who by learned criticisms mystify "the way,the truth and life" as it is in the gospel. The dark and muddy waters of allegorical exegeses are rapidly overflowing the prominent points of literal interpretation. The unreal is held forth for the real, imaginary things instead of the faithful promises of God. And thus the popular theology of the nineteenth century would sink into insignificance the "faith once delivered to the saints."

The world has really "gone mad" on the subject of religion, and amid the Babel confusion we hear one say, "here is Christ," another "lo here he is," and another "here, here" and so it is all through the streets of "Babylon." From amid this confusion of tongues, there is but one way of escape for those who feel they are not in the peaceful Kingdom of Jesus. Dear friends, let me implore you for the sake of your eternal interest to take the glass of the gospel and "examine yourselves whether you be in the faith or not." That will give naught but a true reflection. In that you will see in glowing colors of God's own painting, the characteristics of that religion exemplified by Jesus, to consist of love without dissimulation, humility without pride, gentleness without fierceness, faithfulness without deceit, hope without fear and steadfastness without wavering. Compare the simplicity of the gospel along side of popular religion, and Oh! what a contrast. The cross lies trailing in the dust, and pomp and pride hides from view the rugged brow of Calvary. Exaltation, and the desire to have the "chief seats in the synagogues" have put in the back ground a kneeling praying Jesus in Gethsemane, and paved with "roses" the paths in which the apostles trod. The love of gold has made such a merchandise of the gospel that devils might well stand amazed. Pious gambling (!) has turned the gaudy temples of worship into "dens of thieves." Pastors lounge at ease with folded hands, unless gold paves the way to congregated sinners. Fashions' votaries sing of "Jesus crucified" and with jewel-adorned fingers take the symbolic emblems of the broken body and shed blood of a meek and humble Savior. The commands of Jesus are ignorance, the spirit of the gospel hooted at, the power of the gospel denied, liberality of the conscience defended, the lust of the eye and pride of life the rule of government, that which is highly esteemed among men the idol of acceptance, and the world the theatre of pleasure. In the name of the holy religion of the Son of life and glory "come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her sins." It is no crime, but commendable, to conscientiously change from error to truth. When new light and candid investigation of God's truths have opened our eyes it is our duty to come to "the light" No one can stand justified before God who clings to an erroneous doctrine, after it is known to be such, and it is our province to know it. Though to renounce it is like cutting off a hand, or plucking out an eye it must be done, or Heaven will be lost to us. Seek the approbation of God only, and now and now only is the time to investigate this important matter. The Word of God—the gospel—will a "tale unfold" to every candid inquirer that will sound to the believing heart like heavenly manna, and feed the hungry soul with manna from on High. Hear it, oh, ye sons and daughters, hear the Bible truths, and to them alone take heed and then you will never stand rejected at the bar of God, never hear the denunciation, "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity I never knew you." Oh! what a vast multitude will, it is feared, claim admittance that will be rejected because strangers to the Lord. Strangers from the fact they did not get in the "narrow way" with Jesus here, did not "learn" of Him who is "meek and lowly in heart," did not attain to friendship with the Lord, by doing whatsoever He commanded. Strangers to His cross, strangers to His spirit of humility and self-denial, and strangers to the "straight gate" and "narrow way." It is no marvel why Jesus will not know such. Dear reader, of all things that concern you there is nothing half so important as this of knowing whether "you are in the faith or not." Be assured somebody is in error, in matters of religion at the present day, it is utterly impossible for a thousand theories so widely differing one from another to all be right, touching a subject that admits of no variation whatever. While salvation through Jesus spreads her wings of glory to enfold the whole human family in her loving embrace, there is but one way,—absolutely but one way—of coming to God and securing the salvation of the soul through the merits of Christ. That way is God's own appointed way, opened up by His Son, and now it is indispensibly necessary that all must enter by Christ who is the "door" "the way, the truth and the life." Christ "has become the author of salvation to all them that OBEY Him."

In our next we shall endeavor to say something with a more direct reference to the means of salvation.

J. S. FLORY.

SHOULD IT BE HID?

"Now I praise you, Brethren, that you remember me in all things," &c.—Paul

It is very pleasant and agreeable, when we hear or read anything of our brethren that is praiseworthy; yet on the other hand it fills every true heart with sadness, and sometimes with grief, when the opposite is heard or read. Well might our beloved brother M. M. say, "Tell it not in Gath, &c." I have no doubt he expressed the sentiment of many brethren and sisters. And I would not disprove or speak disparagingly of this sentiment, for the spirit of criticism and faults-finding, is but too prevalent in every breast. And to throw the mantle of charity and forbearance, over the weakness of our fellow-men, is but carrying out the injunction, "Speak evil of no man."

I have no doubt every one that read the article of the old brother, that was ridiculed in the ears, by the two would be gentlemen, and he giving them lodging, and treating them as he did, was highly pleased and gratified; yet the actions of some rameless persons were exposed, and as that case represents hundreds of a like nature, let every one that reads the same, look into it as a mirror and make the application.

Whether it be right or wrong to present matters, that are true in the main, as the writer with the "Lantern" did, let the history of the Bible decide.

There are instances in our beloved brotherhood of unedifying proceedings, will not say of wrongs for Charity's sake, that cannot be remedied by the course proposed by M. M., and as there are many cases that need reformation, would it not be well to purge out the old leaven, like the Jews do, to the present day, taking a light and light it in every nook and corner of the house, holding a wing of a fowl in one hand with which they gather every impurity and burn it with fire outside of their premises? I would think it not wrong for the brother with the "lantern," though as for himself he would have to say, "I am not worthy to be called a brother, if he would bring everything to light that is in a measure hid; and if he would have to say, "In this I praise you not that ye come together, not for the better but for the worse."

As for not exposing our weaknesses, the time was when the whole number, about 70, could be together in an upper room to hold big meeting as it then was termed, well might the Church have kept everything among themselves, but the times have changed and many things with it. Everything we now do, as a body, is done as if from the housetop instead of the secret chamber. The church is no longer hid. The war has compelled her to be known. Everywhere, people make it their business to find out and publish what they knew, and as they found things. Therefore it becomes the more necessary to take hold and purge out, or in other words to reform, and unless we know what is wanting, we cannot amend the wrongs. And as for the propriety of putting our faults in print, the whole Bible doth the same from Genesis to the final Amen of Revelation. Every good man that is spoken of in the Old Testament has his bad deeds also recorded and have been read by all generations and when we come to the record of the New, not only individual faults and transgressions are set forth to their shame and our warning; but whole churches are reproved, warned and corrected. Even the epistles to the seven churches, dictated by the Holy Spirit and recorded by John, are an exposition of the condition of the same. It is true, as I said in the beginning, it is very grevious to have our faults exposed, but some of us cannot be cured without it. Hence I argue that anything that is for our humiliation, to make us more meek and at the same time more forbearing towards our fellow-men and especially toward our brother, is as the Psalmist said, like oil upon our head.

Thus I have written not for controversy, but for eliciting or calling forth the reasonings and reflections of my brethren, since everything hath at least two sides.. If my reasonings are faulty, it would do me no harm to correct the same. One thing, however, I have learned in living three score years and ten, that it goes very hard to change our mind, especially if we have given publicity to the same.

With the hope that our beloved fraternity may see the necessity of doubling their diligence. And if there is any praise, if there is any virtue, think of these things.

Your servant in love,

F. P. LEHR.

AFFLICTIONS.

Loving brethren and sisters, for encouragement and comfort to those, who, like us, have tribulation, sorrows and afflictions, I pen these lines. God in His moral government sees proper to send afflictions, in order to correct us when we go astray. This is an evidence of His love to us as His children, and God-fearing people in all ages bore them with patience and resignation, "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth," O how necessary these corrections, for we are so forgetful of our duty we owe to our God, and toward one another. Let us then profit thereby like a David, "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I have kept thy word. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." But amidst all these troubles and trials, the Lord promises to deliver us. "God hath seen my afflictions, and the labor of my hands, nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from Him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail." "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." Hear the Savior, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Our light afflictions are but a moment, then it worketh for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. LEONARD FURRY.

A NUT TO CRACK.

I will here present to those who think the "wise men" ought to understand the Scriptures, a "nut" for them to crack, and if they get any good out of it they are welcome to it.

Mr. Robert Dale Owen, who by the way is a Professor, says in a recent article that in order to get the correct age of the Patriarchs we must divide by twelve or that one of our months is as long as one of their years, therefore Adam was 77 years, 6 months instead of 930 years. Methusaleth 80 years and 9 months instead of 963 years, and so with all the rest. Now if the Professor is right, in the case of Shem, (Gen. 11 10) we have a father at 8 years and 4 months! A young father indeed! would like to know the age of his wife. And in same chapter 24th verse, we have Nahor a father at 2 years and 5 mos. and at the age of a little over 15 years he begat sons and daughters! If the learned professor is correct, that was truly a fast age, ours is no comparison to it.

It is quite likely said professor belongs to the same class of "worldly wise men" that tell us baptize means to sprinkle! and that Christ when baptized did not go into Jordan, but only went near by, and a great many other things wherein they "wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction." May the Lord deliver us from the theology of all such!

QUERY.

Dear Editors:—We want you or some other brethren to give us an explanation, through the PILGRIM, on Math. 11: 7-8. ISAAC ULERY.

Bro. Editor:—Please give an explanation on 1st. Cor. 14: 34 in regard to women keeping silent.

JOHN GAULT.

Bro. Flory's "Criticism" below will give you the desired information. Ed.

A CRITICISM AND QUERY.

"Let the women keep silent, with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." 1st. Tim. 2: 11-12.

The learned tell us that in the original it is gune—woman, a woman or the woman instead of "the women" as in our version. And also "in silence" in the original is en esukia meaning quietness, and not silence in an absolute term. This same word esukia in 2nd. Thess. 3: 12 is translated "quietness."

Where strict silence was required or intended the word sige is used as acts 21: 40, "there was made a great silence," also Rev. 8: 1, "there was silence in Heaven." If the translation above cited is correct, and we have no reason to doubt it, we would have the text to read "Let the woman (in the singular) learn in quietness with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man but to be in quietness" Such quietness as is opposed to turbulence, dictation, usurpation of rule, or the power of authoritative teaching. Such quietness as is meant in the Scripture "quiet and peaceable life," that is a life free from strife; and again, "a meek and quiet spirit," that is a spirit free from strife. Is it an error then, to understand Paul to mean that he suffered not a woman to teach authority over man or to usurp authority over him, but when she prays, prophesies, teaches or learns, let it be done in "obedience to man" that is in "quietness" or as being in subjection to her head? J. S. FLORY.

The Christian Observer in trying to show that when our Savior prayed "that they may be made perfect in one," had reference to a spiritual union and not external or the meeting of sects, gets off the following:

"It also ignores all the great evils that would certainly follow organic unity. It clamors for unity at all hazards. It has never considered that organic unity among Baptists, for example, would be a great blow to religion. If all Baptists were organically one, every Baptist pulpit would be open to the advocacy of trine immersion, and pledged not to oppose salvation through water, and other errors found among Dunkards, Mennonites and Campbellites. If this was not the case what would the organic unity be worth?

Why not say, If all Pedobaptists were organically one, every Pedobaptist pulpit would be open to the advocacy of salvation without water and other errors found among Presbyterians, &c. If advocating salvation through water is an error then is the scheme of redemption a vessel without bottom, and a cistern without water. It is declared that except a man be born of water * * * * he cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven. If a child can be born independent of a mother, then can a man be born again independent of water. The greater errorists are those who deny the "power of God unto salvation" by denying in part, the "Message" as delivered unto us. While we have no faith in this "lip union," we still detest the idea of forever condemning those who live humbly before God, and endeavor to walk in all His commandments and ordinances blameless. If our good brother of the Observer can get to Heaven without going through water, we have no objections to offer, for our part we prefer to be born of water, not at, or near it, but "buried with Christ in baptism."

SECRET SOCIETIES. The Alleghany Presbytery (United Presbyterian,) through a committee, to whom the subject was referred, has taken ground against secret societies which impose an oath of secrecy, including especially Odd Fellows and Masons, on the grounds that these orders are of pagan origin; that they selfishly confide their benevolences to themselves, instead of extending them to all men everywhere; that their oaths are administered by persons who have no right to do so, and are tendered and taken before the person swearing knows what he is about to swear; and that their religion is a false semblance, dishonoring the Savior. Pastors are requested to preach on the subject, sessions are required to enlighten the minds of the people as to their sin and inconsistency in belonging to these orders, and failing to do this, they are directed to proceed against such members as they would against any other violation of the church, and the laws of God."

LAY REPRESENTATION.—The Religious Telescope, organ of the United Brethren, believes that the next change in the direction of progress in the Church must be the admission of laymen into the Church councils. There is no opposition to such a change but that it will come, sooner or later, cannot be doubted.

The progress of Christianity in Madigascar is attracting attention. During the last year the increase to the Christian community was 63,000 persons, including 18,000 church members. In three years the total addition has been about two-hundred and fifty-eight thousand converts.

SALVATION.

Concluded from last week.

pollutions of sin which we have fallen into, and which was brought upon us by disobedience to God's word. We have many examples given of the horrors that has befallen men ever after the conditions of salvation were made manifest, and brought so near that we could reach them, and why? We ask in all candor why? Because we neglect so great salvation, and do not make use of the means to obtain. Repentance means a turning from sin.

"O turn ye poor sinner, why will you die,
For God in great mercy is coming so nigh."

Above, we have said repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, last but not least, is baptism, by which we are initiated into the family of God, for Paul says to the Galations 3d chap. "As many of you as have been baptized into Jesus Christ have put on Christ, there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ and have become Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Again Paul says, "though an angel from heaven preach to you any other Gospel than that which we have preached, let him be accursed," this is pretty strong language, nevertheless true, as written by the inspired apostle, and given to us for our edification. One reason perhaps why we do not strive more earnestly to enjoy the benefits of salvation is, the way is a little too narrow, the gate is a little too straight, and we are filled a little too full of the corruptions of the world, and the sinful pleasures therein, and if we are not very careful, our day of grace will pass away, and we will not be any the better for being in it. Now, dear reader think of this, there is so much said, and so much done in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, should your lot fall where the rich man is represented to be, that you would have to call to Lazarus for a drop of water to cool your tongue for the torment upon you, there is no possible hope of escape. Let that cause you to seriously reflect upon the great plan of salvation given for you.

Geo. Wonst.

CHRIST THE MERCY.

FLAVEL.

1-t. If Christ be the mercy of mercies, the medium of conveying all other mercies from God to men: then in vain do men hope for mercy out of Jesus Christ. I know many poor sinners comfort themselves with this when they come upon a bed of sickness, "I am sinful, but God is merciful. Plenteous in mercy; his mercy is great above the heavens, mercy pleaseth him, and all this they, that are in Christ shall find experimentally to their comfort and salvation. But what is all this to thee if thou art Christless? There is not one drop of saving mercy that comes in any other channel than Christ to the soul of any man. You may enjoy the riches, honors and pleasures of this world for a season, but there are two bars betwixt you and all spiritual mercies, namely: The guilt of sin and the pollution of sin; and nothing but your own union with Christ can remove these, and so open the passage for spiritual mercies to your soul. But I will repent of sin, strive to obey the commands of God, make restitution for the wrongs I have done, cry to God for mercy, bind my soul with vows and strong resolutions against sin for time to come; will not all this lay a ground-work for hope of mercy to my soul?" No, this will not, this cannot do it. All your sorrows and tears for sin cannot obtain mercy, could you shed as many tears for any sin you have committed, as all the children of Adam have shed since the creation of the world, they would not purchase the pardon of that one sin; for law requires full satisfaction, and will not discharge any soul without it. The repentance of the soul finds, through Christ, acceptance with God, but out of him it is nothing. All your strivings to obey the commands of God and live more strictly for time to come, your vows and engagements to God for time to come cannot obtain mercy, being made in your own strength, it is impossible you should keep them; and if you could, it is impossible they should obtain remission and mercy, should you never sin more for time to come, yet how shall God be satisfied for past sins? Justice must have satisfaction, or you can never have remission. Rom. 3: 25, 26; and no work wrought by man can satisfy divine justice.

2nd. Is Christ greater and more necessary than all other mercies? Let no inferior mercy satisfy you for your portion. God has mercies of all kinds to give, but Christ is the chief, the mercy of all mercies. O be not satisfied without that mercy. When Luther had a rich present sent him he protested that God should not put him off so, and David was of the same mind, Psa. 17: 14, 15. If the Lord should give you the desires of your heart in the good things of this life, let not that satisfy you while you are Christless; for what is there in these earthly enjoyments whereof the vilest men have not a greater fulness than you? Job. 21: 7–12; Psa. 17: 10; and 73: 3–12; What comfort can all these things give to a soul already condemned as thou art? John 2: 18; what sweetness can be in them whilst they are all unsanctified things to you? Enjoyment and sanctification are two distinct things. "A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked." Psa. 37: 16; Prov. 10: 22; Thousands of unsanctified enjoyments will not yield your soul one drop of solid spiritual comfort, and what pleasure can you take in these things of which death must shortly strip you naked? You must die, and whose then shall all those things be for which you have labored? Be not so foolish as to think of leaving a great name behind you; it is but a poor felicity, as Chrysostom well observes, to be tormented where thou art, and praised where thou art not.

WHAT IS LIFE?

Life may be compared to a river, beautiful in appearance and a smiling tender face, with sparkling eyes and rosy tints. Our course in youth, and maturity is along a wider and deeper flood, amid objects more lively and buoyant. Life bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat at first glides on down the narrow channel, through the playful murmuring of the little brook, and the winding of its grassy borders.

The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads. The flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our hands; we are happy in hope and we grasp eagerly at the enticements around us—the stream passes on and still our hands are empty. We are animated by the moving pictures of enjoyments, and all manner of sport so enticing. We are excited by some short-lived disappointment, and the stream bears us on, and our joys and our griefs are alike left behind.

Onward with a hurried step,
How smooth its dimpling waters wave:
The rocks beneath hath ever slept,
When the swan is want to lave.

Winding through the forest trees,
With tangling thorns and waving grass
Watering fowls and honey bees,
Without the aid of pitcher or glass.

Life is alone in a wilderness,
Like the river through wood and grove,
Innocent, murmuring and gentleness,
Like the cooing of the lonely dove.

What is life, Oh can you tell me?
What it is, and whence it came,
Why it is thus passing by me
The world is passing just the same.

Life is truth, we must confess it
Reality in its perfect state;
As it is none can undo it,
The ending may be soon or late.

The river 'mid its bubbling waves,
And confusion of its traveling;
Is firm and true, though lively joys,
Are mingling with its gabbling.

The moon looks down in calmness,
Into the mirror crystaline;
And the stars in all their sternness,
Are in splendor to be seen.

Tributaries of this wandering stream,
Are friendly and true-hearted;
And good and kind, but shun extreme,
Where all vanity first started.

The dense words are filled with mirth,
So high above the shining brook,
'Tis nature for this mother earth,
To seek and wonder and to look

The quivering blasts have chilled thy blood,
The storms of winter threaten thee;
The sleet hath covered field and wood,
The icicles hang o'er shrub and tree.

This life is chilling just the same,
And threatened by the winter blast;
We're hastening toward the icy frame,
With steady step and eager grasp.

WINTER.

Stern winter has again approached with cold, snows and storms, and as we look around us and behold the barren appearance of the earth, at this season, it sometimes reminds us of the state we are liable to be in, spiritually, if we are not constantly on our guard as we should be.

There are many ways in which we may become careless or negligent of our duties toward our Maker, and thus become cold and indifferent.

We may begin to neglect our duties, and at first it will not be noticed by our brethren and neighbors, perhaps, but the longer we persist in such a course the further we will get from the true way, and the less desire we will have to hear or do anything concerning our eternal state. And if we persist in such a course, it will soon be seen and talked about by the world; they will see that we do not attend meeting as we formerly did, and the Church will observe that we absent ourselves from them when they assemble to worship our Father in Heaven; and if we were formerly instrumental members in the Church, we will now be a hindrance to the cause, and will not show by our fruits any good, but will appear as barren as the earth does at this time of the year.

Our desire for reading the Scriptures will become less, and we will perhaps begin to love to read novels or continued stories, and thereby lose the desire we once had for reading the Bible, the will of God.

Brethren and sisters, we cannot be too careful in this matter, for we can read, 2nd Peter 2: 20-21-22, the condition of those who have once turned their faces Zionward, and afterward become entangled in the pollutions of the world. I think if we are only willing to learn, and to know God's will all we can, and perform our duty as well as we know how, there would need be no fears of us becoming cold or negligent in this matter.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

Go forth to the battle of Life my boy,
  Go while it is called to-day:
For the years go out, and the years come in,
Regardless of those who may lose or win
  Of those who may work or play.

And the troops march steadily on my boy,
  To the army gone before;
You may hear the sound of their falling feet,
Going down to the river where the two worlds meet;
  They go to return no more.

There is room for you in the ranks my boy,
  And duty, too assigned;
Step into the front with a cheerful grace,
Be quick, or another may take your place,
  And you may be left behind.

There is work to do by the way, my boy,
  That you never can tread again,
Work for the loftiest, lowliest men—
Work for the plow, adze, spindle and pen
  Work for the hands and the brain.

The serpent will follow your steps my boy,
  To lay for your feet a snare;
And pleasure sits in her fairy bowers,
With garlands of poppies and lotus flowers
  Enwreathing her golden hair.

Temptations will wait by the way, my boy,
  Temptations without and within;
And spirits of evil, in robes as fair
As the holiest angels in Heaven wear.
  Will lure you to deadly sin

Then put on the armor of God, my boy,
  In the beautiful days of youth;
Put on the helmet, breastplate and shield,
And the sword that the feeblest arm may wield
  In the cause of Right and Truth.

And go to the battle of life, my boy,
  With the peace of the gospel shod,
And before high heaven, do the best you can
For the great reward, for the good of man
  For the kingdom and crown of God.

—Little Sower.

TO THE YOUNG.

Our blessed Savior said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." I suppose we all know, that all those who die in their infancy will be received up into Heaven. I need not therefore talk to those the Savior had reference to, but to you who have left your infantile state, and have gone out into this sinful world.

Dear young reader let me warn you of some of the many dangers you are subject to. I would first try to impress upon your mind the great evil of intemperance. As you are starting out into this wide world of sin, intemperance will be about the first thing that may present itself before you. Let me warn you of the great sin of intemperance. It is one of the devil's best agents to lead the youth away from God; as he can draw you step by step by telling you there is no harm in taking a glass of strong drink, but let me tell you, kind reader, you may be led step by step, (which thousands are), down to degredation; down to a drunkard's grave; down to the confines of hell. Oh what an awful thought; be banished from the presence of God and all his holy angels forever, just for the sake of a few drops of poison to satisfy the craving appetite. Let me say to you dear young reader, whenever the temptation presents itself before you, always say, "Never a drop," and my word for it, you will never regret it when you grow up to man and womanhood.

Intemperance leads to the gambling saloon, to the many murders that are perpetrated now in our day. There are many other evils which the young, if not very careful, may be led into before they are aware of it. I would just here take occasion to say that the ball room, the festivals which are so common in our day and also the fairs and horse races which professors of religion take an active part in, and say there is no harm in it, but I would warn all young persons to stay away from such places, as they are an abomination in the sight of God. Then you may become useful men and women in this world, useful in the church, and finally reach the haven of rest.

Young readers, perhaps some of you have a little brother or sister in Heaven, whom you fondly loved. Would you not like to meet them there? Yes, I think you would. What a happy time that will be to meet our little brothers and sisters, fathers and mothers that have long gone before? They are inviting all to come and join them in that happy land where parting shall be no more forever.

We have but once to travel through this world, we should therefore make sure work, for if we miss Heaven we cannot retrace our steps. Then it will be too late, the door will be shut, then we will hear that awful sound, "depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Then let me say to you, "remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth before the evil days draw nigh."

There is another evil which I would wish to impress upon your minds, namely: pride (or fashion.) Dear young reader, I believe that pride is dragging thousands upon thousands down to a premature grave, yes, I will say down, down to the regions of dark despair, which were not prepared for boys and girls, neither for men and women, but for the devil and his angels. Be careful then that you are not debarred from the presence of God on account of decorating your body with all manner of foolishness, as it is an abomination in the sight of Almighty God.

In the last place, let me tell you how you can avoid all those things. Draw nigh to God and he has promised that he will draw nigh to you. Repent of your sins, before you have so many to repent of, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and be baptized for the remission of your sins. Then you have the promise to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Let your light so shine before men, that others may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven. The grace of God be with you all.

LITTLE GEORGE'S TROUBLES.

Aunt Libby patted me on the head the other day and said, "George, my boy, this is the happiest part of your life."

I guess aunt Libby don't know much. I guess she never worked a week to make a kite, and the first time she went to fly it, got the tail hitched in a tall tree, whose owner would'nt let her climb up to disentangle it.

I guess she never broke one of the runners of her sled some Saturday afternoon when it was prime coasting. I guess she never had to give her biggest marbles to a great liberly boy, because he would thrash her if she did'nt.

I guess she never had him twitch off her best cap, and toss it into a mud-puddle. I guess she never had to give her humming top to quiet the baby, and have the paint all sucked off.

I guess she never saved all her pennies a whole Winter to buy a trumpet, and then was told she must not blow it, because it would make a noise! No; Aunt Libby don't know much. How should she? She never was a boy!—Fanny Fern

TOBACCO—A SPEECH FOR BOYS.

I go against tobacco, because it goes against me. I eschew it. I will not chew it. I will tell you why. 1st. I do not like the taste of it; it tastes worse than any medicine you can put to your lips, it is such sickening stuff. 2nd. I don't like the looks of it; when I see the tobacco I pity the mouth that chews it; and when I see the mouth that chews it I pity the tobacco; it is of a dirty dirt-color. 3d. I don't like the effects of its use; it makes the teeth yellow and brown when they should be white; it makes the breath offensive when it should be sweet; it injures the voice so that those who chew cannot sing and speak to advantage. The voice breaks, and the chorister croaks like a raven when he should sing like a bobolink; the orator merely barks, and a tobacco bark is very disagreeable. 4th. I fear tobacco creates an appetite for liquor; it lights a fire in the throat which water may not put out.—Bright Side.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me, all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Dear Pilgrim:—I would inform your readers that our series of meetings ended on the 20th. Brethren Daniel F. Good and Jacob Trostle were our ministers from a distance, and Brethren Wm. How and Archy Vandyke of Lewistown were also with us. They all labored faithfully as embassadors in Christ's stead, inviting sinners to turn to God and earnestly warning those who had covenanted with God to fear lest a promise being left them they might fall short.

The result of their labor was four precious souls were added to the Church by baptism, on last Sabbath, and many good impressions were made, so that some two or three more have made known their desire to be initiated into the Church militant. May the good Lord bless their labors with many souls for their hire. I would also add that Brother Trostle and Wm. How addressed the children in the Orphan's School at McAlisterville, giving them many wholesome instructions, such as were applicable to their age.

MICHAEL. BESHOAR, SR.

CALTERSVILLE, Cumb. Co., Va., }
Dec. 30th, 1872. }

Dear Pilgrim:—On the 14th of next February, it will be two years since we landed in this part of the country, and were the only brethren that ever had been in or through this part of Virginia. Now there are seven of us here. Next month two more expect to come, and some thirty or forty have visited this country during this time. All seemed to be well pleased, and they all acknowledged that there is as good or the best chance for brethren to colonize that they have ever saw. We had eleven meetings in nine months time. The people seemed to be well pleased with the preaching and general character of the Brethren. Yours in love,

WM. MALLORY.

Dear Pilgrim:—As there has nothing appeared in your columns from our district, I wish to say a few words that may be of some interest to your many readers.

Our Church, I think, is in a good and prosperous condition. A dozen or more were added to the Church during the last year.

On Saturday before Christmas we held a choice for a speaker at the house of Bro. and sister Hoff who have our thanks for kindness shown to all present. Eld. Jacob Berkey and two speakers from other districts were with us. Bros. Joseph Weaver and Joseph Eby were advanced to the second degree, and Bro. Benj. Fryfogle called to the ministry.

Yours in truth. F. B.

Springfield District, Ind.

The follow we extract from a letter received from Eld. Geo. Wolf of Lathrop, Cal:

"Up to this date, January 20th, 1873, we have had the finest winter that I have seen in 16 years, since I have been in Cal. The mercury ranges at about 55 degrees above Zero, there was a few days in December at the coldest point, that the mercury fell to 16 degrees above Zero. The grass and grain-fields are green, stock does well, rain has fallen to wet the ground in the San Joaquin Valley two feet deep, a sufficient guarantee that we will have, (with our usual Spring rains) a bountiful harvest. Our seasons are more correctly named dry and wet, than summer and winter. We, like the Jews of Palestine, designate our rainy season by the early and latter rains. When the San Joaquin river overflows its banks by the 15th of February, it is a cause of rejoicing to us as well as it was to the Jews when their Jordan overflowed, as we will have a plentiful harvest.

Dear Pilgrim:—We are glad you are making your weekly visit to us again at the commencement of this year, and we also think you are very much improved, but how are you getting along in the way of getting your pay. Your Editors have been very generous and promise to wait those that have not the money at present, but is it right for those of us who could pay now just as well as at the end of the year, to take advantage of their generosity? They are at a heavy expense; their material has to be paid for, and their hands must be paid, and if they can't get money to meet expenses I fear you will have to stop, which we would regret very much, it is true, we sometimes see things in your columns that some of us think might as well be left out, but who of us could edit a paper and not make some mistakes, so we attribute the errors only to the head and not to the heart of the editors, and then it is also putting the agents to some trouble and inconvenience. The agent may receive two, three or five dollars which he will have to hold for a time, or ride probably 8 or 10 miles to get a check or postal order, and to send two dollars by postal order costs just as much as to send $20. Now friendly readers, what I have written I have written to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.

AGENT.

WHITER—In the Jonathan's Creek Church, Ohio, some time in Febuary 1872 friend Thomas, husband of sister Catharine Whiter, of cancer in the stomach.

He suffered much, but like many others, put off his return to God and passed away, leaving a kind and affectionate wife and eight daughters, with other friends to mourn their loss. Funeral service by the writer.

HELSER.—Also in the same place, of spinal affection, on the 21st of April 1872, Hattie, youngest daughter of brother Levi and sister Catharine Helsor, aged 7 years, 5 months and 5 days. She leaves father, mother, three sisters and three brothers behind, with many other friends to mourn their loss. Funeral service by the writer.

SNIDER.—Also in the same place, of old age, July 14th 1872, sister Elizabeth, wife of our old brother, elder Daniel Snider, aged 81 years, 4 months and 3 days.

She was afflicted a long time, but bore it with patience. Just one week before she died my wife and self went to visit her and other old persons were dying around her, and she made this remark, "Well that is the way it is, others can go, and I must still stay here. Oh well, perhaps my time will come too after while." Just one week from that day she died, and she died as she had lived, a consistent sister and very zealous. She was the mother of 8 children, 3 dead and 5 yet living, 38 grandchildren and upwards of 20 great-grand-children. Though she is dead her example still lives among us. Funeral service by the writer.

HORN.—Also in the same Church, 13th of September 1872, Emma Jane, daughter of brother Daniel and sister Martha Horn, aged two years, 8 months and 21 days.

PLANK—Also in the same Church, Oct. 12th, '72, sister Mary, wife of our old friend Adam Plank who fell dead some years ago, aged 73 years 9 mos. and 26 days.

She died at her son-in-laws, Bro. Peter Helser, where she had lived ever since her husband died. She had entirely lost her mind before she died. She leaves 3 brothers, 3 sisters, 4 sons and 3 daughters behind, besides many other friends. Funeral service by the writer.

LECKRONE.—Also in the same Church, Dec. 4th, 1872, brother Abraham Leckrone, aged 40 years, 10 months and 24 days, leaving an affectionate wife and one daughter, mother, brothers and sisters, and many friends and relatives to mourn his untimely departure.

The subject of this notice was confined to his bed for some months and suffered immensely, but bore it with Christian fortitude. He was a kind husband and father, a regular attendant at Church and a good neighbor. Funeral service by the writer.

COVER.—Also in the same Church and on the same day, our old and well known brother Samuel Cover, aged 71 years, 5 months and 26 days,

Brother Cover was always in a good humor and in good spirits. He was a very healthy man, but when disease took hold upon him, like many more, was compelled to go. I was sent for on the 5th of Dec., I went and stayed all night with him and in the morning, wrote his will and talked with him about his future prospects. He said he was ready and willing to go, that the Lord's will was his will in that as well as in all other matters. He leaves behind him a feeble but affectionate wife, a sister, one daughter, one grand-son and one great grand-son, all the family that is left.

VICKERS.—In the same Church on the 3d day of January '72, Joseph F., son of Bro. E. L. and sister Sarah Vickers, aged 11 months and 11 days. Funeral service by the writer.

Little Joseph thou art gone to rest,
While thy face we'll see no more;
Thy melodious voice is mingling with the blest,
On the farther shore.

WM. ARNOLD.

(Visitor, please copy the above obituaries.)

CARTER.—November 19th, 1872, in Union township, Sanjoaquin Co., Cal. Benjamin Carter, aged 64 years. Funeral discourse by the writer from Matt. 24-44.

Friend Carter's remains lies in the Oak Grove Church Cemetery. Should his friends in the State of Wisconsin, see this notice, they can have the consolation of knowing that their friend and neighbor was highly respected here in Cal, and kindly cared for in a Christian-like manner, buried by his sons and neighbors. But kindness from relatives and friends cannot save us from the grave, for death hath all seasons and ages for his own.

REYNOLDS.—Also on the 28th day of December, 1872, Adaline, wife of Eldridge Reynolds, bid farewell, here below, to her husband, children and frieads.

Her body sleeps in, and is the first lain in the new Cemetery, Union District, Sanjoaquin Co., California. Funeral discourse by the writer from 1st Cor., 15; 21-22-23.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office at plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1873, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

LET US BE REPRESENTED.

We have been making an effort to have the field of the Pilgrim enlarged and we are glad to learn that we are meeting with considerable success.

In addition to the list of States represented in No. 3, we now add New Hampshire and Washington Territory. The Pilgrim is now acknowledged by the religious press to be a first-class paper and is receiving favor from the same by way of "notices" for which we feel humbly grateful. The local press is also favoring us and we are especially indebted to the West Carolina Record for the favor conferred. This is a new paper published by Clendennin & Carpenter at Rutherfordton, N. C., at $2.00 per annum. Any of our readers interested in that part of the South, should read it.

The following States are not represented: Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas and Vermont. These we want represented by actual subscribers and we call upon our readers to help us. We have no doubt but what some of our readers have friends residing in all these States that would be benefitted by reading the Pilgrim a year. For this purpose it is sent for $1.25. Who shall we hear from first? We hope that in a short time, we can report a full representation. $1.25 is a small mite, yet for it, the Pilgrim can be sent and may be the means of opening new fields wherein much good may be accomplished. Our Church is getting alive to this way of introducing the truth and it is being blessed with good results. Let not your efforts be confined to the unrepresented States alone, but wherever there may be a door opened, let the Pilgrim go in.

OUR POOR LIST.

This list is so small that we almost forgot to publish it. Paper, ink and labor costs us money, and we cannot afford to give it away a particle better than the farmer can his corn and wheat, or the merchant his goods, yet we almost daily receive the names of such as are too poor to pay anything. Now brethren and sisters, what would you do? We have booked every name that has been sent in and are sending the Pilgrim just the same as if paid for. We do this first, because we cannot think of depriving the poor of the pleasure it affords them in reading it, and secondly, with the hope that some of our open-hearted brethren and sisters will assist us by donating a small amount for that purpose. The following was sent in for that purpose. This does not include those who sent in $1.25 to have it sent to their friends or such poor as they named themselves.

PERSONAL.

Jacob Mohler. You are right.

M. B. Hymnbooks sent by mail $4. 50.

Jno. Plank. You did not send Sarah Lahmer's name. It is now booked and will come all right.

Israel Roop. We have been sending the Pilgrim to Geo. Dickey, Omor P. O. Seneca Co. Ohio. If that is not right, let us know.

Jno. S. Newcomer. Your name was overlooked in entering the new books It is now entered and marked paid to No. 12. Is that right The tracts are sent again—had been sent before.

Wm. A. Murray.—Your last list is received and the Pilgrims are sent—The Tune Book is sent.

Correction.—At the end of Eld. B. F. Moomaw's article of this week the word "concluded" was placed instead of "continued," and part of the issue run off before it was noticed. We have now another paper on hands for next week and will still be continued.

D. W. Shank. We received $1. 25. Please notice the Pilgrim is $1. 50 The Almanac is sent.

Eld. Jno. Nicholson informs us that while cutting wood his ax glanced and cut his foot so badly that he will not be able to attend to his appointments for some time.

Your list and contribution did not reach us.

Bro. John W. Gish of Troutville Va. says; "We are having some very rough weather and considerable sickness, especially among the aged, among whom there has been a number of deaths. We are still well-pleased with the Pilgrim and hope it may continue to improve as it certainly has been since its commencement."

Lewis Workman. You say you sent us $7. 00 and gave us only three names that you say have paid, who is the $2. 50 for? Please inform us as it is important that we should know. In sending money always inform to whom it is to be credited.

Bro. D. D. Shively informs us that the brethren of Oak Haw church Ill., on the 25th of Dec. held a choice for deacon which resulted in the election of Bro. John Arnold to that office.

Also on the 27th. of the same month the brethren of Millmine Church held a choice for the same purpose, and brethren Daniel Mohler and Solomon S. Miller were chosen.

All Subscriptions must commence with the beginning of the year as long as we have back Nos. and Almanacs to supply the demand. We cannot afford to send the Almanac unless the Pilgrim is taken for a full year. We can still supply a goodly number with full Nos. Send along the new subscribers by the scores and by the help of God we will make the Pilgrim a power in the church and the world for good.

TO ALL WHO ARE CONCERNED.

We do, through this medium, inform the brethren and churches comprising the first dirtrict of Virginia, that Friday and Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April, is the time appointed for the holding of the Annual District Meeting, and will be held at that time no preventive providence, at the Valley Meeting-house in Botetourt Co., one mile south of Amsterdam. A full attendance is desirable. B. F. Moomaw.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Potter's Complete Bible Encyclopedia.—We are in receipt of a specimen Leaf of this recent and valuable work. If the "specimen" represents the work which it no doubt does, it will be a magnificent volume and will be a great addition to our religious literature. It is published by John G. Potter &Co. 917 Sansom St. Philada.

Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles.—The first edition of this instructive and interesting work is exhausted and a copy of the 2nd. edition is on our table. The author, J. H. Moore informs us that he now has on hand a large supply and is prepared to fill all orders. This is a good work and should be circulated by the thousands. For price &c., see advertisement on last page.

The Scieno of Health though only a short time before the public, has gained a world-wide reputation, which it richly deserves. For the mass, it is the leading health journal of the United States, having for its motto, Nature's remedial agencies are light, air, temperature' electricity, diet. bathing, sleep, exercise and rest. All those wishing to enjoy long life and good health should read it. Published by S. R. Wells 389, Broadway, New York, at $2. 00 per annum.

Phrenological Journal for February is on our table, which, as usual, is fully up to its standard, and contains so many good things that we have not the space to enumerate all of them. There is no other publication comes to our office that we prize so highly. Each number contains from 70 to 80 pages of information for everybody. We notice that the publisher offers a premium of a new Chromo to new subscribers who send 30 cts. extra for postage and mounting. Published by S. R. Wells,389 Broadway, N. Y., at $3.00 per annum.

We have made arrangements to send the Pilgrim and the Phrenological Journal together for $3.50. Those who have sent us $1.50 for the Pilgrim can have the Journal by sending $2.00 more. Sample copies sent on the receipt of stamp to pay postage.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1873.—The Guide is now published quarterly. 25 cents pays for the year, four numbers, which is not half the cost. Those who afterwards send money to the amount of one dollar or more for seeds may also order 25 cts. worth extra—the price paid for the Guide.

The January number is beautiful, giving plans for making Rural Homes designs for Dining Table Decorations, Window Gardens, &c,, and containing a mass of information invaluable to the lover of flowers.—One Hundred and fifty pages, on fine tinted paper, some five hundred engravings and a superb colored plate and Chromo cover.—The first edition of 200,000 just printed in English and German, and ready to send out.

James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

HOW MUCH.

There is sufficient quantity of fermented and distilled liquors used in the United States, in one year, to fill a canal four feet deep, fourteen feet wide, and one hundred and twenty miles in length. The places where intoxicating drinks are made and sold in this country, if placed in rows, in direct lines, would make a street one hundred miles in length. If the victims of the rum traffic were there also we should see a suicide at every mile, and a thousand funerals a day. If the drunkards of America could be placed in a procession, five abreast, they would make an army one hundred miles in length. What an army of victims! Every hour in the night, the heavens are lighted with the incendiary torch of the drunken. Every hour in the day, the earth is stained with the blood shed by drunken assassins. See the great army of inebriates, more than a million strong, marching on to sure and swift destruction—filing off rapidly into the poor-houses and prisons, and on to the scaffold; and yet the ranks are constantly filled by the moderate drinker. Who can compute the fortunes squandered, the hopes crushed, the hearts broken, and the homes made desolate by drunkenness?—Christian at work.

THE LICENSE QUESTION.

The act passed by the last Legislature, and signed by Gov. Geary, prescribed that once every three years the citizens of the various counties shall vote upon the question of "license" or "no license." If, upon counting the votes, the majority in any county are in favor of no license then it shall not be lawful for the court of said county to grant any license for the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquor during those three years. The first vote upon this question is to be taken at the Spring election ensuing. It will be noticed that the law does not call for a vote by election districts, as some suppose, but that the whole county is to be consulted whether or not liquor shall be sold within its limits. Which will we do, vote in favor of these hell houses, where our children are made drunkards, by staying at home, or go and vote it down? The issue is at stake and the decision will be made. Taverns or no taverns, that is the question.

How the momentary feelings called "Experimental religion" are brought about, and then concludes by giving that form of doctrine as taught by Jesus Christ and recorded by his faithful witnesses.

Trine Immersion
TRACED
TO THE APOSTLES.

Being a collection of historical quotations from modern and ancient authors, proving that a THREE-FOLD Immersion was the only method of baptizing ever practiced by the Apostles and their immediate successors. The author, after proving Trine Immersion to have been the prevailing practice, in baptism, the first 1500 years of the Christian era, commences with the fifth century, and traces a Three-fold Immersion, to within 33 years of the apostle John's death, and then proves it to have been the Apostolic method of baptizing, while Single Immersion was invented not less than 326 years after the death of Christ.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, postpaid, on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, $1.10; Ten copies, $2.00.

THE CHRISTIANS FATHERLAND.

BY DEAN STANLEY.

Where is the Christian's Fatherland?
Is it the Holy Hebrew Land?
In Nazareth's vale, on Zion's steep,
Or by the Galilean deep?
Where pilgrim hosts have rushed to lave
Their stains of sin in Jordan's wave,
Or sought to win by brand or blade,
The tomb wherein their Lord was laid?

Where is the Christian's Fatherland?
Is it the haunted Grecian strand,
Where Apostolic wanderer's first
The yoke of Jewish bondage burst?
Or where, on many a mystic page,
Byzantine prelate, Coptic sage,
Fondly essayed to intertwine
Earth's shadows with the light Divine?

Or is the Christian's Fatherland
Where, with crowned head and croziered hand,
The Ghost of Empire proudly flits
And on the grave of Cæsar sits?
Oh! by those world-embracing walls,
Oh! in those vast and pictured halls,
Oh! underneath that soaring dome,
Shall this not be the Christian's home?

Where is the Christian's Fatherland?
He still looks on from land to land—
Is it where German conscience woke
When Luther's lips of thunder spoke?
Or where, by Zurich's shore, was heard
The calm Helvetian's earnest word?
Or where, beside the rushing Thone,
Stern Calvin reared his unseen throne?
Or where, from Swedens snows came forth
The stainless hero of the north?

Or is there yet a closer band—
Our own, our native Fatherland?
Where Law and Freedom, side by side,
In Heaven's behalf have gladly vied?
Where prayer and praise for years have rung
In Shakspeare's accents, Milton's tongue,
Blessing with cadence sweet and grave,
The fireside nook, the ocean wave,
And o'er the broad Atlantic hurled,
Wakening to life another world?

No, Christian! no—not even there,
By Christmas hearth or churchyard dear;
Nor yet on distant shore brought nigh.
Nor Western Pontiff's lordly name,
Nor eastern Patriarch's hoary fame—
Nor e'en where shone sweet Bethlehem's star;
Thy Fatherland is wider far.

Thy native home is wheresoe'er
Christ's Spirit breathes a holier air;
Where Christ-like faith is keen to seek
What Truth or Conscience freely speak;
Where Christ-like Love delights to span
The rents that sever man from man;
Where, round God's throne, His just ones stand—
There, Christian, is thy Fatherland.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

"THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?"

BY B. F. MOOMAW.

In support of the position that we have taken, and for the establishment of the principle contained therein, we next propose to present from the Bible, facts and circumstances there delineated.

First, we will briefly notice the command to Adam in Eden, setting forth his privileges and restrictions, thus commanding and saying to the man, "of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, except the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. 2:16-17. There was no possibility of being mistaken as to Divine authority of this command, as to the tendency and terrible consequences that would result from the want of a proper regard of this divine injunction, terrible consequences indeed! His expulsion from the lovely garden with all its comforts and luxuries; the withdrawal of God's presence; the cessation of those interviews in the dawn of the morning and in the twilight of the evening; the earth cursed for his sake; exiled to combat the thistles and thorns, to struggle for a subsistance until the seeds of death should be developed in the production of its legitimate fruits and he return to the earth, only to be succeeded by following generations, who in their turn, witness in sorrow and pain, the incalculable miseries that have been, now are, and shall be endured by poor fallen and suffering humanity in this world and by the impenitent in the world to come. All this because of yielding to the insidious temptation of the enemy and becoming dissatisfied with the ways and means of God—presumed to depart from them, and devise measures of his own. Oh fearful responsibility! awful presumption, and yet we have not profited by his sad experience, but as in very many instances, upon the presentation of theories of men, human origin, adopt them, without, as it appears, stopping to enquire "whence they are, of God or of men."

Secondly, We propose to examine the institution of the Sabbath, to see if we can arrive to any safe conclusion as to "from whence it is," then "to the law and to the testimony" In the history of the world's creation we learn, that on the seventh day, God ended His work which He had made, and rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it He had rested from all His work which He had created and made. Gen. 2:3 4. From this expression "sanctified it" which, in one sense means to set apart, we understand that God designed, as He had rested from His work, it should be consecrated to some special purpose and observed differently from the other six days; this conclusion is fully warranted by the many references and commands subsequently given relative to it, which we proceed to notice. See Ex. 16:4-5. The Lord promised that for the children of Israel "He would rain bread from Heaven," and the people should go out and gather a certain rate every day, that He might prove them, whether they would walk in His law or not, and that on the sixth day they should gather twice as much as upon other days, doubtless for the reason that there should be no gatherings on the Sabbath 22 verse. And he said unto them, this is that which the Lord hath said, Tomorrow is the rest of the Holy Sabbath unto the Lord. And Moses said, eat that to-day, for to day is a Sabbath unto the Lord, to day ye shall not find it in the field. Six days ye shall gather it, but on the seventh which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger within thy gates, for in six days the Lord made Heaven and earth, the sea and all things that in them is, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." Exodus 50; 9-11. The same law reiterates 23:12, see also 31:12-17 the same law enjoined, accompanied with terrible denunciations, (refer to the passage as it too lengthy for insertion here.) See also Levit. 19:30 "Ye shall keep my Sabbaths and reverence my sanctuary, I am the Lord." "And the Lord spake unto Moses saying speak unto the children of Israel and say unto them concerning the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts. Six days shall work be done, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest an holy convocation, ye shall do no work therein, it is the Sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings." Levit. 23: 1-3. The Lord having so positively commanded the observance of this institution and so frequently called the attention of his people to it, that it was impossible that they could misunderstand it, or be mistaken as to "from whence it came;" that it was the height of presumption to neglect or violate it. Hence when one was found in the camp of Israel, picking up sticks on the Sabbath, the Lord visited upon him summary punishment, and in order that their memories should be constantly refreshed commanded that a fringe should be put upon their garment, with a ribbon of blue, that they might look upon it and remember all the commandments of the Lord and do them, that they should not seek after their own heart and their own eyes. "That ye may remember and do all my commandments, and be holy unto your God. I am the Lord your God which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God, I am the Lord your God." Num. 15: 37-41. For further testimony as to the obligation of keeping, and the awful consequences of neglecting it, we refer to Neh. 13: 16-18; Jer. 17: 25, and Ezek. 20: 16, 17.

We are thus particular in adduc-

ing testimonies so copiously, to impress the mind with the leading idea designed by this effort, that God's requirements of His intelligent creatures are clearly, definitely and fully expressed, that every thing that we are authorized to do is so plain that we may easily know from whence it is, whether it be of God or of men."

THE DESIGN OF BAPTISM.

Baptism is a command of the New Testament, and one of the many given as a means for our reconciliation with God. It is acknowledged by all professors of religion as far as I know that we are in an unreconciled state, those at least who are grown to a mature age, and know good from evil, and have transgressed the Law of God. We admit that, through the death of Christ we were reconciled from under the curse of a broken Law, so that the redemption held good on the infantile part of the human family. They shall be saved through the merits of a crucified Redeemer, but for those who have grown to adult age and stepped out from under its protection, they will not be benefited by the redemption. There is, however, a code of Laws given for such that, by a proper use of the faculty and a strict adherence to the letter of the law, may again enjoy the benefits and the glory God intended them to enjoy. And in order that we should be without excuse in the matter, he was very emphatic, thus clearly setting forth our obligations to him and no one need be deceived that desires the true knowledge of God, for it was given in plain simple language, so that high and low, rich and poor could all have the benefit of it. In proof of this, we need only show that it was given to poor humble fisherman at first for them to sow broadcast in the world. That there is a great principle involved in this, you may easily see, for had he given it to the high and opulent, the lowly not having such advantages or means of learning, they would not had any equal chance, and more than this, they would have been despised and looked down upon and perhaps thrust out of the synagogue as unworthy of being members of the family of God.

By reading the scriptures, you see among the great and noble, a disposition of pride manifested almost always. The all-wise God well knew that the evil nature in man would cause him to drift in that direction and hence the course which he pursued is undoubtedly the best, and even under this state of things, how often do we read, "Humble yourselves," and how both we are to do it.

That item in the great code of laws which we have under consideration at present, called baptism, we want to know what it was designed for. Above we have said, that the law was given in emphatic language. Then, can we not understand it? Surely we can, if we feel so disposed. Why then is there such a controversy about it? While one says it is only a cloak thrown around the economy of grace, another says it signifies something it does not. I hope now to reveal fear the light of the gospel which God has been pleased to give us. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." God saw that man had not the means to purchase eternal life, therefore he sent his Son to present it to us as a gift. Now will we accept it as he gave it or will we try to make amendments to better suit our peculiar fancy? The form was drawn up in the Court of Heaven. The legislators of Heaven are the law-making power and, reader, let me assure you, you cannot alter or amend it, and the Savior has said, "not one jot or tittle of the law shall fail until all be fulfilled. Now that law was entrusted to trust-worthy men. Although humble fishermen, they were inspired, which empowered them to fulfill the design, and they were sent out to preach, that is, to tell the people what this law consisted of, and in what relation they stood the remnio, and those that believed, to them gave he the power to become the sons of God. Then faith in the word preached, is the first great principle, for if we will come to God we must first believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. This will bring us to the second step, which is repentance, and the third step is baptism. In obeying that command we promise God before men, that we will be faithful until death, and receive the promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit. By these three great and first principles in the economy of grace, we are initiated into the visible Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth. Now we ask, is this the order of the organic law of the Lord? Let us examine the inspired penman and see. Upon their testimony, we can build our hope with safety, and upon no other, for Paul says: "Though an angel from Heaven preach any other gospel than that which we have preached let him be accursed." The force of this language should be apparent to all.

After the resurrection of Jesus Christ he gave his commission to his disciples and said, "Go into all the world, teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world." This commission was the most important ever given to man, and for the faithful discharge of their duty he says again: "tarry at Jerusalem until you be indued with power from on high." They did not have to wait very long for that extra gift, and what did that bring to our view? There was a great, wonderful and magnificent scene—about an hundred and twenty disciples gathered together in one place, demonstrations from Heaven appeared, a rushing mighty wind which filled the house where they were sitting, and cloven tongues as of fire sat upon each of them and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other toogues as the spirit gave them utterance."

When this curious phenomenon became noised abroad the multitude came together, and so the wonderful works of God began. But some mocked and said, "these men are full of new wine, but Peter stood up with the eleven and said, these are not drunken as ye suppose for it is only the third hour of the day; but is that which is spoken of by the prophet Joel." It is an outpearing of the spirit. He preached to them with power, clearly showing them that that Jesus whom they crucified had become both Lord and Christ, and on that account, these things were demonstrated before them and for their good. Their eyes were opened and they said to Peter and to the rest of the Apostles, "men and brethren what shall we do," an important question which required an answer, a direct answer, and in such language that they could understand. "Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," for the promise is to such. The promise of what? If you repent and be baptized you shall obtain the forgiveness of your sins, and according to Paul to the Gallations 3d chapter, "put on Christ" For he says: "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

This is one of the many texts given for our instruction, showing us what the design of baptism is and what it will accomplish when done in the name of the Lord, with a full purpose of heart which can be testified to by many living witnesses and gives us the answer of a good conscience toward God.

FIFTY YEARS AGO AND NOW.

Our sons and daughters are dressed as the sons and daughters of the world, and it does not stop here but we see it among the members. Why has all this come upon us? The only thing I see is we done it ourselves. We dressed our children after the world's vain fashion as long as we had the dressing of them, and they know no better than to keep on dressing fashionable when they have to dress themselves, and when they become members of the Church, the cross is too heavy for them to bear, that was not the case fifty years ago. They were brought up bearing the cross, and the burden was light. Is there any one especially to blame for all this? No, some commenced it and the rest of us let them go on in it until church members are unknown by their plain apparel. Sisters have on their heads the fashionable bonnet or hat instead of the plain cap, brethren also have on, fashionable coats, overcoats, hats, &c. Now dear brethren and sisters, have we not got too far from the meek and lowly Savior? If we have not got the spirit of fashionable dressing and pride, and really have the spirit of the meek and humble Jesus in our hearts, let us take down our signs that indicate pride and fashion. We all know when we pass through a city we judge the houses by the signs that we see posted above the doors, and so we may be judged by our signs of not living up to what we profess, and for fear of being judged wrong in this matter, let us take down the old man's sign, and put up the one that belongs to the Kingdom of Jesus. We need a reformation in this very thing, and how to do it without all are willing to reform I know not, unless we are willing to forsake the rudiments of the world and return to our first love by becoming more humble, and walking after the pattern as given by Jesus and exemplified by our forefathers. To accomplish this we must strive to keep in the spirit, and glory in the cross of Christ, and the God of our salvation, and not care about the outward adorning of our bodies, but more for the hidden man of the heart. How can we take the yoke of Christ upon us and instead of learning of Him, learn of the world, and instead of following our blessed Master, follow all the vain and sinful fashions of the world? I once felt sorry for a sister in the church, who raised five or six daughters, dressing them in height of fashion from little girls up to womanhood. The burden of her grief was that they went and joined a fashionable church that would require no change in dress. She said to me, "Bro. Andrew, I am so distressed I do not know what to do, three of my daughters have joined the ———, and father said, "I know there is no good there as there is nothing put pride and fashion in that church," O, brother Andrew, pray for my children." There I learned a lesson. If that good sister and brother had prayed for their daughters, and taught them to pray for themselves, and had not brought them up in the sinful fashion of the world and in pride, it might have been quite different. They trained them up to be the very subjects to become members of just such a church. They done all themselves. It is as easy to raise and train our children to become good members of the true church of Christ, as a fashionable one and much easier. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." That is the way with us, the most of our troubles are brought on us by ourselves, by wanting our children to look like other people's children, and how very often keep on looking and doing like other people. But to see if ever we can get back to our primitive purity again, is what those brethren wished to know. In the first place, we must get right ourselves and then keep the little ones right, in the cradle, and after they get out of it, train them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, which is the only way that is right. Pray with our children and teach them that good and acceptable way of the Lord. In that way we may get back again into the old land-marks which our fathers have set up by the help of the Lord. But I never expect to see it, for I believe that the time of the coming of Christ is approaching, for as it was in the days of Noah so shall it be when the Son of man shall come. He also asked the question "When the Son of man comes, shall he find faith on the earth," a living faith of the righteous, the salt that preserves the earth? May our God enable us all to strive to enter in at the strait gate.

GERMAN PAMPHLET.

The following is the Title and Preface of a little Pamphlet, written in the German language fifty years ago by a worthy brother in Virginia, supposed to be Ben. B.—who for the sake of delicacy, withheld his name. It is in my possesion, and as I believe few to be found; and as we see the truth verified, fifty years hence, of that part, at least, as regards the establishment of Christ's Kingdom by men, the undersigned would like to see it reprinted.

How much was accomplished in that period, towards a union of Christian denominations, and what success had men in bringing about universal peace upon earth? Experience will answer. Have we not seen, in these fifty years, denominations divided and sub-divided again and again, nations in commotion, kingdoms rent and others formed, subjects rebell against their leaders and government, causing the earth to be deluged with human blood? Now as the German is so little used among the Fraternity, the undersigned proposes through the Pilgrim to translate this work into the English language and have it printed, provided the brethren desire it, and are willing to help to bear the burden. It contains fifty small pages. Let us hear through the Pilgrim what you have to say, brethren. The work is worthy to be reprinted. Let us hear soon from every part of the brotherhood. A few words will do, for instance; approved or disapproved.

Yours in the bonds of Christian Union. Leonard Furry.

TITLE.

A short and simple representation from the word of God, of the apostacy in the last time—and of the great tribulation under the beast of Antichrist—and ingatherings of the Elect to the Great Supper—of the conversion of the Jews—and of the general Judgment. Written by a lover of the Truth divine. Presented for consideration to all who seek their salvation. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." "Abstain from all appearance of evil." 1st Thess 5:21-22.

PREFACE.

The reason of this little work is only as a warning to those who seek their salvation; since we have come into perilous times; sin, which is a lofty spirit of pre-eminence, has arisen, whose object is to unite and subdue all men under one head, as the beginning of the Millennial Reign of Christ, which is in opposition to the humble mind of Christ, and against the Holy Scriptures as this little tract shows. And yet there are many drawn from the Truth and thereby deceived, for Christ, through His own power without any human help shall establish This Kingdom. Therefore it is a deception and every effort of men shall fall. For this reason ought every one, prove the spirits, for Christ saith, "By the fruit ye shall know the tree."

Written in the year of the Lord 1823.

For the Pilgrim.

ASHAMED OF JESUS.

Shall we poor mortals, ever be ashamed of one who is far our superior, who holds the brittle cord of our existence, and on whom all our hopes of Heaven depend? But oh! how slow are we to yield submission to His holy word. What love He has shown toward us. He is ever willing to stand by us, to pardon our shortcomings, and how many of them we have. Have any of us such a forgiving spirit? I am afraid not, but let us try to have: let not the sun go down on our wrath toward any one. When the woes of life overtake us and all hopes begin to fail, when all seems one dark cloud before us, there is one whose love never fails, always ready to comfort us. Let us never from His precepts depart, but strive every day with renewed energy to walk nearer to God—be this our highest aim.

I often wonder how many of us will be able to stand that judgment which awaits us at the last day. Could it then our glory be that Christ be not ashamed of us. Every day brings us closer to our eternal home than ever we have been before: yet how seldom do we think of it. We are swiftly sailing o'er lifes ocean and soon may we reach that eternal shore. Many changes have taken place during the last year; many loved ones have gone who at the beginning of the year, had as good prospects for a long life as you or I, but they are gone. Their gentle voice is stilled. May they be so fortunate as to obtain the heirship, that awaits the faithful. Let us wherever we go, show to the world by our conversation and dress, that we are not of the world, but that our calling is of a nobler one, and that we have set out to win the prize. God's promises are sure, His word shall stand when Heaven and earth shall pass away. How careful ought we to live. Are we letting our light shine that others may see our good works? Much is required of us. We have enlisted in a great warfare. Jesus is our caption and we are all soldiers under Him. Let us have our lamps well trimmed and full of oil, that we be not as the foolish virgins, who took no oil with them, and came and said, Lord open unto us, but the door was shut. He answered and said, "Verily I say unto you I know you not," but that it may be said, "Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Happy thought!

THE LICENSE QUESTION

Dear Pilgrim:—I noticed in the Companion, a communication written by Eld. M. Miller in regard to the License Law which meets my approbation. This law has, for a long time been agitated in the state of Pa. on account of the evils of intemperance or the excessive of spirituous liquors and the great evils resulting therefrom and finally has been passed by the Legislature of 1872 in favor of Local Option or that each county, or its citizens, shall have the privilege of voting for license or no license. This privilege will be granted on the 21st day of March, 1873. The issue is a plain one for good or evil, but I do not intend to write much on the subject wishing merely to call the attention of the brethren in Pa. to this important matter. Perhaps many others, like myself, have not done as much for the cause as we should and as this seems to be an opportunity for us all to do good, it becomes us to give our influence in favor of that which may result in the moral and spiritual good of of the citizens of our state.

Viewing it in this light, dear brethren; would it not be well to give all timely notice of this chance to do good, if good there be in it, which I have no doubt there will if we cast our vote for good. Would it not be wisdom in the church of Pa. at their council meetings or otherwise to inform their members of this election, the design of it, and the beneficial results that are expected to be realized therefrom, so that all may be properly informed and thus enabled to vote intelligently and in favor of temperance?

May the Lord guide us to do his will in this as well as everything else we do.

Yours in love,

Samuel Myers, Sr.

BYESIDE THOUGHTS.

An ounce of cheerfulness is worth a pound of sadness to serve God with.—Fuller.

What gift has Providence bestowed on man that is so dear to him as his children?—Cicero.

The Scriptores teach us the best way of living, the noblest way of suffering and the most comfortable way of dying.—Flavel.

A man that exhausts his energies endeavoring to pull down the enterprise, and destroy the character of his brother, will have nothing left to build up his own.—Blastus.

A man is the architect of His own future, so he is the author of all his "miseries," and men should not complain because they have dyspepsia and suffer, so long as they persist in using tobacco and grumbling.—Burton.

Our best hours are those we spend to our best interest, and the more of them we spend thus, the greater will be our future inheritance. If we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh, reap corruption, but if to the spirit, eternal life. Let us spend our hours in sowing to the spirit and enjoy our inheritance in reaping life eternal.—Howe.

Moments.—Moments well spent are the golden sands of life made bright and valuable, and when cemented together, in the crucible of God's love, by the blood of a crucified Redeemer, make a treasure, safely laid up in heaven, of value a thousand times more precious than all the diamonds or gold of earth.

Moments unimproved are so many atoms of rust, that on a dying bed produce that terrible canker—remorse of conscience, which shall fire the soul with the burnings of hell!—J. S. Flory.

CHRIST THE MERCY.

FLAVEL.

3. Is Christ the mercy of mercies infinitely better than all other mercies? Then let all that are in Christ be contented and well satisfied, whatever other mercies the wisdom of God sees fit to deny them, you have Benjamin's portion, a plentiful inheritance in Christ; will you yet complain? Others have splendid houses upon earth, but you have "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. 5: 1. Others are clothed with rich and costly apparel; your souls are clothed with the white pure robes of Christ's righteousness. "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for He hath clothed me with the garment of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels." Isa. 61: 10. Let those that have full tables, heavy purses, rich lands, but no Christ, be rather objects of your pity than envy. God has not a better mercy to give than Christ, thy portion; in Him all necessary mercies are secured to thee, and thy wants and straits sanctified to thy good. O, therefore never open thy mouth to complain against the bountiful God.

4. Is Christ the mercy, in whom are all the tender mercies of God towards poor sinners? Then let none be discouraged in going to Christ by reason of their sin and unworthiness, His very name is mercy, poor, drooping sinner, encourage thyself in the way of faith; the Savior to whom thou art going is mercy itself to broken-hearted sinners moving towards Him. Jesus Christ is so merciful to poor souls that come to Him, that He has received and pardoned the chiefest of sinners—men that stood as remote from mercy as any in the world Tim. 1: 15; 1 Cor. 6: 11. Those that shed the blood of Christ have yet been washed in that blood from their sin. Acts 2: 36, 37. Mercy receives sinners without exception of great and heinous ones. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." Gospel invitations run in general terms to all sinners that are heavy laden. Math. 11: 28. When Mr. Bilney the martyr heard a minister preaching in this manner: "O, thou old sinner, who hast been serving the devil these fifty or sixty years, dost thou think that Christ will receive thee now?" O, said he, what a preaching of Christ is here; had Christ been thus preached to me in the day of my trouble for sin what glad tidings had it been: blessed be God. There is a sufficiency both of merit and mercy in Jesus Christ for all sinners, for the vilest among them whose hearts shall be made willing to come unto Him. So merciful is the Lord Jesus Christ that he moves first, Isa. 61: 1. 2; So merciful that he upbraids none. Ezek. 18: 22. So merciful that he will not despise the weakest desires of souls if sincere. Isa. 12: 3; So merciful that nothing more grieves him than our unwillingness to come unto Him for mercy. John 5: 40; So merciful that he waiteth to the last upon sinners to show them mercy, Rom. 10: 21; Math. 23: 37; in a word, so merciful that it is his greatest joy when sinners come unto Him that He may show them mercy. Luke 15 5: 22.

Objection. But it cannot enter into my thoughts that I should obtain mercy.

Answer. You measure God by yourself; "If a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away?" 1 Sam 24: 19. Man will not, but the merciful God will upon the submission of His enemies to Him, besides you are discouraged because you have not tried. Go to Jesus Christ, poor, distressed sinner; try Him, and then report what a Savior thou hast found Him to be.

Object. But I have neglected the time of mercy, and now it is too late.

Ans. How know you that? Have you seen the book of life, or turned over the records of eternity? Or are you unwarrantably intruding into the secrets of God which belong not to you? Besides if the treaty were at an end, how is it that thy heart is now distressed for sin and solicitous after deliverance from it?

Object. But I have waited long, and yet see no mercy for me.

Ans. May not mercy be coming and you not see it? Or have you not waited at the wrong door? If you wait for the mercy of God through Christ in the way of humiliation, repentance and faith, assuredly mercy shall come to you.

5. Has God performed the mercy promised to the fathers, Jesus Christ? Then let no man distrust God for the performance of lesser mercies contained in any promise of scripture. The performance of this mercy secures the performance of all other mercies to us; for Christ is a greater mercy than any which yet remains to be given. Rom. 8: 32. This mercy virtually comprehends all other mercies. 1 Cor. 3: 21–23; and the promises that contain all other mercies are ratified and confirmed to believers in Christ. 2 Cor. 1: 20; Has God given thee Christ? He will give thee bread to eat, raiment to put on, support in troubles, and whatsoever else thy soul or body shall need. The great mercy Christ, makes way for all other mercies to the souls of believers.

6. How mad are they that part with Christ, the best of mercies, to secure and preserve any temporal mercies to themselves? Thus Demas and Judas gave up Christ to gain a little of the world. O, soul undoing bargain, how dear do they pay for the world that purchase it with the loss of Christ and their own peace.

Blessed be God for Jesus Christ the mercy of mercies.

METHOD OF GRACE.

THE MENNONITES IN PRUSSIA.

In Prussia there are also a number of Mennonites who are discussing the subject of emigrating to America, since there also, as many of our readers are aware, they are no longer exempted from military duty. There are however in Prussia only a few of the churches that are not willing to submit to the new military law. So far as is known to us, of the nineteen churches there, there are only two, the church in Heubuden and upper Nassau, which have steadily refused to accept the order requiring them to perform military service. Even in the last named churches there are a considerable number of members who are ready to forsake their old principles of non-resistance, and submit themselves to the service of the government. There are those also, however, in all the churches, whose adherence to the principles of non-resistance, is as it has ever been, a matter of conscience, and these are they, who now think of emigrating.

It appears that this matter has occasioned considerable trouble in the churches in Prussia, inasmuch as some of the leading bishops have consented to an unconditional submission to the law requiring military service of them; while on the other hand, there are others who will not allow any participation whatever in the practice of war.

There are at least three of the bishops who have, as the Mennonitischen Blætter informs us, resigned their office because their churches have declared themselves in favor of accepting the requirements of the new law; their consciences not permitting them to serve a church rejecting the principles of non-resistance. In other churches, it is said that even schisms have taken place on this account.

With feelings of the deepest sympathy and sincere pity, we look upon this whole matter which has caused our brethren in the faith in Prussia so much trouble to the detriment of the church.

It is, however, our most unquestionable privilege to inquire, Why is it, that in this civilized and highly enlightened nineteenth century, in which war is generally looked upon from other standpoints as a matter entirely inconsistent with the progress of the civilization of the times, and of christianity, that the privilege of exemption from military duty, which our brethren have so long enjoyed, should be taken from them? Is it not, perhaps, that the Mennonites generally did not understand properly to value this time-honored privilege, and that they did not feel sufficiently grateful to God for it? And may it not perhaps be the case, that the German government discovered, that among the Mennonites themselves, there are many to whom military duty is no longer a matter of conscience? Why then should the government hesitate any longer to require military duty of the Mennonites, when some of their own leading men express themselves in favor of it, in which preacher Manhardt has done in two articles in No. 6, 1872, of the Mennonitische Blætter? Such declarations do certainly not show an adherence to the old principles, as our fathers compiled and established them from the word of God; and they do not tend to cause the government to deal mildly with those who notwithstanding the unfaithfulness of others, still continue conscientiously, to hold fast to the old, and long accepted doctrines of the church.—Friedensbote.

FOR THE LAST TIME.

There is a touch of pathos about doing even the simplest thing "for the last time." It is not alone kissing the lips of the dead that gives you such a strange pain. You feel when you look your last upon some scene which you have loved—when you stand in some quiet city street, where you know that you will never stand again, unless indeed, you come back, some day to the "old haunts," and wander among them an unwelcome guest. The actor playing his part for the last time, that singer whose voice is cracked hopelessly, and who after this once will never stand again before the eyes of upturned faces disputing the plaudits with fresher voices and fairer forms, the minister who has preached his last sermon—these all know the hidden bitterness of the two words "never again." How they come to us on birth-days, as we grow older. Never again young—always nearer and nearer to the very last—the end which is univesal, the "last thing" which follow all the other last things, are turn them, let us hope from pains to joys. We put away our boyish toys, with an old headache. We are too old to walk any longer on our stilts—too tall to play marbles on the side-walks. Yet there was a pang when we thought we had played with our merry mates for the last time, and life's serious grown-up was waiting for us. Now we do not want the lost toys back. Life has other and larger playthings for us. May it not be these, too, shall seem in the light of some far off day as the boyish games seem to our manhood, and we shall learn that death is but the opening of a gate into the new land of promise?

GOOD NIGHT.

Good night, dear child, good night,
Sleep in thy little bed,
So soft, so lily white,
Beneath thy golden head.
Good night.

Like sunshine on a flower,
Thy tresses stray adown
The pillow in a shower,
And gild thy snowy gown.
Good night.

Feet, restless as the rain,
Your patter dies away
Till morning wakes again,
And calls you out to play.
Good night.

Good night, dear child, good night,
Breathed is thy evening prayer;
Thy watch of angels bright,
Comes through the silent air.
Good night.

We yield thee to their care
Until the shadows flee,
Content that they should share
In our felicity.
Good night.

MY LITTLE FRIEND.

I have a little friend living a few hundred miles from here, whose name I will call Annie, though that is not her real name. I call her by this name because it is a very pretty one, and one that I always loved.

Annie used to be one of my little scholars, when I lived in Ohio. She was not so very much better than most Annies, that I speak to the little readers of the PILGRIM of her, but she was so happy that I often think of her. But what was it that made her so happy? She didn't dress any finer than most of her school-mates, nor ride in a finer carriage, but she was happy, because she was good. And are all good children happy? Indeed they are. Annie's bright eyes and cheeks that beamed with rosy brightness, told that she was lovely, good and kind, and they must tell that she was happy. There was only a few times during the school that Annie seemed unhappy. A few times she happened to have poor lessons, not because she had not studied, but because the lessons were too hard for her. Then she did not look happy. Her bright eyes were made dim with tears, partly because she hadn't a good lesson, and partly because she feared she had offended her teacher by not studying harder.

Annie was careful not to offend any one; she spoke kindly to all. I never heard her speak one cross word, and she was so very gentle too. I have often thought, if the angels away up in that happy world, don't want her so much as not to let her live away from them and the good children there, she will one day become a good and useful woman. How many of our little readers will imitate Annie's good example? Would you always be happy, don't forget to be good and kind. Never let an angry word escape your lips. Be gentle; do all you can to make others happy, and then you will be happy too. We may call round sometime to see those little Annie's, Mary's and Minnie's, and we want to see them as happy as the little singing birds. Until then we will bid you a kind farewell, unless the PILGRIM will open the door of the Youths Department soon again for your friend,

ACTING A LIE.

Ralph Royster ventured one day to toss his ball into the parlor. He knew it was wrong, but he wanted to do it, and did. Presently the ball fell on the table, and smashed a delicate glass that covered a beautiful collection of leaves.

"Oh," cried Ralph, "what shall I do now?"

After looking at the fragments with a rueful face for a few moments, he left the room feeling as if his heart was sinking down to his heels with a heavy load of guilt and fear, with which his disobedient act had loaded it. As he passed into the hall the cat rubbed against his leg. A bad thought arose in his breast, and putting the cat into the parlor, he shut her in and said:

"Stay there, Tabby! Mamma will think you broke that glass, and I shall escape a scolding. Hurrah for you, old Tabby! You are good for getting a fellow out of a scrape, if for nothing else."

At the tea table that afternoon, Mrs. Royster said to her husband:

"Pa, you must send Tabby away. I found her in the parlor to-day, and she had been on the table and broken the glass which covered those skeleton leaves."

Ralph blushed from his chin to the roots of his hair. His heart beat very quickly. The voice within whispered, "Be manly, be true. Confess that you broke it."

But Ralph was stubbornly silent. The poor cat was drowned for his misdeed, and he escaped a scolding by acting a lie.

I CAN PLOD—I CAN PERSEVERE.

When Rev. Dr. Carey, the great pioneer of mission-work in India, first proposed his plans to his father, he said: "William, you are mad!" And ministers and Christians replied to his proposition, "If the Lord should make windows in Heaven, then this thing might be."

His discouragements in first entering upon his work in India were appalling. When he found himself without a roof to cover his head, without bread for his sickly wife and four children, he made up his mind to build a hut in the wilderness, and live as the natives did around him. "There are many serpents and tigers, but Christ has said that His followers shall take up serpents," said this undaunted man.

God did not call him to this sacrifice, but to others, which required wonderful courage and persistance, before he achieved his final success which has made him famous the world over.

What was the secret that enabled the shoemaker's apprentice to become one of the most distinguished men of the age? What brilliant gift raised him from an obscure position to one of honor and fame, as the author of grammars and dictionaries, translations of the Bible and other books? He either translated or assisted in the completion of twenty-seven versions of Scripture, requiring a knowledge of as many languages or dialects,

He betrays the secret. In giving an estimate of his own character, he speaks of himself with Christian humility, but with full consciousness of the honor put upon him in the wonderful results he had been permitted to achieve. While not laying claim to brilliant gifts or genius, he says: "I can plod—I can persevere."

He does not say, as we hear too often now a days, "I could always manage to get along, and keep up with my class in some way, without much study. I could jump at the meaning of my lessons; or I can catch up a trade without years of hard labor, "but I can persevere."

Plodding boys hold up your heads! You may seem to be left behind in the race by your so-called "smart" companions. Plod on. "The race is not always to the swift."

POLL AND THE CROWS.

One morning Mr. Herbert went out into the field near his house and shot at some crows that were pulling up his corn. He killed two of them, and when he went to pick them up, lo! on the ground he beheld Poll with a broken wing and leg. He had got out and had got into the company of the crows, and was walking about among them very grandly at the moment Mr. Herbert, while trying to kill the crows, shot and wounded him. When he carried the crows to the house, the children all said:

"But how is this, father! Here is poor Poll, (the parrot) all covered with blood and nearly dead!"

"Ah, yes," said Mr Herbert; bad company has got poor Poll into trouble. If he had not been between the thievish crows, he would not have got hurt."

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert bandaged up the limbs of poor Poll, and it was weeks before he got well.

"What hurt you, Poll?"

"Bad company," he would reply in solemn tones. And if he ever heard the children quarreling, or too noisy and ill-tempered in their sports, he would scream out, "Bad company!" and instantly good temper would prevail. Let children remember that almost always, evil occurs from going into bad company.—Kind Words

NOTES.

BY J. S. FLORY.

December 28th, in company with brother A. Evans (deacon) went by Railroad to Charleston, the capital of our State. At the home of brother J. Starkey met with a number of the brethren and sisters with whom we had a season of prayer, praise and church council and administration, after which we went afoot about 2 miles to friend W. Williards, where we had an appointment for preaching at night, found a waiting congregation who were attentive to the word preached. Next day, Sunday, meeting at Lynn S. H., after which we proceeded to the water side, and after having the ice cut which was about five inches thick, one willing soul entered and was baptized. Meeting at night again at the S H, two more applicants for baptism, and others we were satisfied were almost persuaded to be Christians. Home to brother Starkey's in Charleston. Next day spent in visiting the members, and at night meeting at friend Frames; had a meeting and season of interest. Next day at 12 o'clock took the train "homeward bound;" all night at Bro. D. Harshberger's. Next day, New Years day, united together in the holy state of matrimony, sister Elizabeth Harshberger and a Mr. Wilson. Home in the evening, found all well, thank the Lord. During the past season in the bounds of our district, there has been 20 additions to the Church, about one fourth from the Missionary Baptists. To God the Father, and Jesus Christ the Son be all the glory now and forever.

Dear Pilgrim:—The Brethren of Maple Grove Ashland Co., Ohio, held a series of meetings that commenced on the evening of the 4th of January and was well attended by laboring brethren from a distance. The first sermon was preached by Wm. A. Murray from 1 Cor. 2; 1-7; 2d by John Nicholson, Eph. 2; 14; 3d by E. L. Yoder, Gen. 6; 3, followed by P. J. Brown; 4th by Murray, Titus 2: 11, 12; 5th by Nicholson and Brown, Isa 3: 11, 12; 6th by Christian Wise and Nicholson, Col. 1; 7th by P. J. Brown and Nicholson, 1 Tim. 3; 16; 8th by James McMullen, Rom. 6: 23; 9th by Yoder, Brown and Murray, Math. 22: 1,15; 10th by George Worst, Math. 7: 21, followed by Murray; 11th by Murray, Rom. 1; 14, 17, by P. J. Brown and McMullen; 12th by Yoder and Murray, Heb. 6: 1, 3; 13th by Worst, Mark 1: 14, 15, followed by Yoder; 14th by Murray and Worst, Heb. 10 34, 39; 15th by Worst and Murray, Acts 28: 30, 31; 16th by Murray, Acts 3: 22, followed by avid Witmer, and the 17th by Murray from Luke 17: 26. 20.

All these meetings were well attended, considering part of the time it was quite cold. Quite an interest was manifested by the brethren and sisters in attending and bringing their children and others; some sleds would convey as many as 17 persons at a time, and nearly all paid good attention to the word spoken. The zeal of the laborers, the interest taken by members and the power of God's word made good impressions on the congregation, and on Friday the 13th, two young women confessed that they were not ashamed to follow Jesus and were added to the church by baptism. While the congregation stood on the shore shivering and cold, they came out of the water rejoicing that their sins were washed away, and the great query among the people is, "How can they endure the coldness of the water?" the ice being about 18 inches thick. While they are in trouble or perplexed about the wonders of baptism in the winter, may they be led to think of the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace. How did they endure it? Daniel in the lions' den &c. But to the unbelieving, this will always be a mystery, and the virtue unrealized until they are willing to say "Lord thy will be done," and his love is shed abroad in their hearts. In comparison, it is like a cup of pure water. It contains the properties that will slake thirst, but as long as not partaken of, the thirsty remain thirsty still, so those in the spirit feast of the spirit.

As many good impressions were made, may they be watered by the dew-drops from on High, that satan may be defeated so as not to be able to take all that has been sown by the faithful laborers in the Vineyard of the Lord, for I know that many cannot say they did not hear the words of eternal Truth, and if they do not practice the same in this life, in the judgment these things will condemn them. I feel very thankful to all my co-laborers and brethren and sisters that met with us. Other laborers were present from adjoining churches that did not labor, as they wished to hear others more distant, but all were willing to join in if needed. At one meeting there were twelve ministers present. May the blessing of God attend all, and if we meet no more on earth, may we strive to meet above.

DRY VALLEY AND LOST CREEK MEETINGS.

Dear Editors:—On the 2nd of January, according to previous arrangements, I met with the brethren of Dry Valley, Mifflin Co., Pa., to help to preach the word of God to the anxious inquiring people of that place. By Saturday we were joined in the work by Elder J. D. Trostle of Md., and Elder P. S. Myers of Spring Run, also on Monday by our dear old brother Joseph Hanawalt of the same place. Under the supervision of elder and bishop Jacob Mohler, with his co-laborers, Wm. Howe, Archy Vandyke, Andrew Spanogle, G. S. Myers, J. Price and S. J. Swigart, the meetings were surely made pleasant, interesting, and we trust profitable. On the 9th, it seemed good to the brethren and the Lord, to take Bro. J. D. Trostle, accompanied by Bro. A. Vandyke, to Lost Creek, to help the brethren there to open their meeting, which was in connection with the Dry Valley. The meeting continued at Dry Valley until the evening of the 12th. The morning of the 13th, in company with Bro. William Howe and daughter, we repaired to Lost Creek, Free Spring Meeting-house, where we found brethren Trostle and Vandyke prosecuting their Master's business faithfully. The ministering brethren who stand by the side of their aged Elder to vindicate the cause of Christ, are Elder Solomon Sieber, Ezra Smith, Isaac Barto, A. Bashore. ——Landis and J. Cauffman, who seem fully efficient to the task and charge.

Brother Trostle left for home on the 16th. Brethren Howe and Vandyke also left the latter part of the same week, I remained with the brethren until the morning of the 20th. The meetings were all well attended; much interest manifested upon the part of the brethren, sisters and friends. A number were added to the Church, and many expressed a desire to be with, and for Christ very soon. While making this trip, I had the pleasure of visiting many of the brethren's families, besides enjoying their kind hospitalities, we shared with them in their private devotion around their altars. The pleasant social enjoyment of the rich feast, will be the source of many pleasant remembrances.

Our brethren's neighbors and their children are praiseworthy for their attention, their kindness and the interest they seemed to take in the preached word, and we fondly hope they may accept it and glorify the Lord with us.

To our dear brethren and sisters, we feel like saying yet, keep close to the 'ancient landmarks,' the gospel, that you may prove to the world that it is the right way of God to life eternal. Live the faith of Jesus practically, take it with you through all the routine of life, and it will "keep you through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last times."

D. F. GOOD.

Bros. Brumbaugh:—As church news seem to be desirable I will give a short report of the Richland Church, Richland County, Ohio.

We have a snug little church house 30 by 40 about seven miles North-west of Mansfield. This church is composed of about eighty-five members, and as far as I know, at present, is in a prosperous condition, under the care of our beloved Elder Christian Wise, who has labored here in the ministry for twenty six years. During the year 1872 there were fifteen added to the church and one restored. We just closed our series of meetings, which continued one week, and we can truly say we had a good meeting. At the close we had two applicants for baptism, and we think good impressions were made on others, which we hope will not be lost. We have five speakers named as follows: Elder Christian Wise, Isaac Wisler, Israel Wisler, Peter Helphen and the writer. Brethren pray for us that we may all obtain that rest that is prepared for the people of God.

Dear Editors:—The PILGRIM No. 3, this volume was received last evening, and before the evening hours were spent its contents was well perused. I was so well pleased that I remarked to my companion, I thought the PILGRIM had greatly improved since the commencement of the present volume, and I cannot see why some brethren are still opposed to the Brethren's periodicals.

I felt this morning to write a few thoughts, and if considered worthy you can insert, if not, I am just as well satisfied, as I think it very important that nothing should be published by the Brethren but what is consistent with our faith.

I have not been well for several weeks past and unable to go out, but as I sat in my chair this Sabbath morning and the fingers of the clock marked 10, I thought of the many places the brethren have now gathered together to worship here in Ill. My mind also wandered back to Pa., where we left nearly two years ago, where the brethren commenced to worship about one hour earlier, and before service closes here in Illinois, the brethren in California and the Pacific coasts will be ready to commence their service, and raise their songs of praises to the great Creator, and until their forenoon meetings close, the brethren in the East commence their afternoon service, so that nearly the whole of the Sabbath, songs of praise are offered to God by the Church. Would not that be enough to overflow our hearts with enraptures and joys if we could be so located as to hear it all? It appears to me we would hardly be able to contain it in our limited minds, yet we believe it is all heard and taken into account by Him that sitteth on the right hand of the majesty on High. After trying to measure the capacity of the Church in its praises to God, we are led to think of what the Revelator heard. We think in the vision, were not only the present generation, but he heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. There is where we believe all the faithful subjects of Christ's Kingdom will be present and lend their voices to swell the songs of everlasting praises, even unto the voice of thunderings, unto that great Creator. Who would not desire to be present there, and to help to raise that song and enjoy that full happiness? We think every human being. And to those that fully desire to be there, we would say we are all invited, and upon very easy terms. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

LITERARY NOTICES.

AN EXCELLENT PEN.—We have been favored with a sample card of the celebrated Spencerian Steel Pens, and after trying them quite thoroughly are convinced of their superior merit. These pens are comprised in fifteen numbers, each differing in flexibility and fineness of point, so that the most fastidious penman cannot fail to find among the fifteen just such a pen as suits him. The Spencerian Pens are famous for their elasticity of movement, smoothness of point and great durability, and are a nearer approximation to the real Swan Quill Pen than any thing hitherto made. They are manufactured in England under the supervision of the original inventor of Steel Pens, the venerable Josiah Mason, and Joseph Gillott—the latter making a few of the numbers after the models of the late P. R. Spencer, the famous penman. They are used very largely in the common schools of the United States, in all the principal commercial colleges, in the government offices at Washington, and in the banks and commercial offices throughout the country, the sale reaching an enormous quantity annually. For the convenience of those who wish to try them, a sample card of the Spencerian Pens may be had by mail by enclosing 25 cents to Messrs. Ivision, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., 128 and 140 Grand Street, N. Y., or the pens may be bought at almost any store where pens are sold.

OUR MOTTO.

Our "Motto" has been so variously understood, defined and interpolated that it may puzzle the minds of some to know how to understand it, notwithstanding we have at different times, explained how we understand it. If others wish to give it different interpretations it matters not to us as long as they give it as their opinion, but we are not anxious to have others tell us how we are to understand it, neither do we suppose that any wish to do this, at the same time, the opinions of others, admitted, may seem to infer our assent.

Eld. D. M. Holsinger in No's 3 and 4, give a very good exposition of the original design of the text, and while we assent to the application in the main, there is a part from which we feel to dissent when accepted as our motto.

That we should publish the PILGRIM in defiance of such decisions as were made by the Brethren in the absence of direct scripture would be a small work and not worthy of the sacrifice. To do this would be equivalent to a knitting that there was a single period of time in which the Brethren had reached perfection and that since then the great tendency is to diverge from that perfect period and its decisions. While we honor and respect the zeal and wisdom of our forefathers, we beg leave to honor and respect still more the "landmarks" as set by Jesus Christ and his Apostles. Advocating and upholding the decision and councils of man has been the great curse of the Christian Church, in all ages and with great reluctance would we advocate anything not based upon the "Word." When brethren say they are willing to accept the decisions of the church as far as they are founded upon the truth, we say, amen, as no brethren, or set of brethren, are invested with any authority to make any others. Our Law, as given by Christ is a perfect law and meets every case. If there be cases for which we have no direct example or precept, the spirit of those examples and precepts will reach them indirectly, for instance, we have no direct scripture for sisters to wear the cap, but in the injunction of Paul we have it indirectly. So in all other cases. Independent of the scriptures we advocate nothing. It has been well said; "Search the scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life and they are they which testify of me." We have ever been strong advocates of the Brethren and are yet, but we wish to have it understood that we do not stand in defence of such decisions as have neither example nor precept in the scriptures as a basis, neither do we believe that the Brethren make such decisions, but such things may happen through fallibility and for us to accept them as the laws of the Medes and Persians would be a great error and heap upon us a code of laws which might well be called "the traditions of men." Our forefathers were fallible men just as we. All the light they had they received from the scriptures. We have the same scriptures to-day with greater facilities of understanding them, and we believe we have now, just as wise, as holy and pious men in the Church as there ever were, therefore, why look back? The divine injunction is "forward" and "upward." With the chart of salvation, which contains all of our landmarks, in our hands and the spirit as a lamp for our feet, let us go onward with the blessed assurance that we shall reap if we faint not. The PILGRIM will labor in defense of the "landmarks" as set by Jesus Christ and revealed unto us by his chosen witnesses which "landmarks" we believe are carefully observed and held forth by the Brethren.

OUR MEETINGS.

During last Fall the brethren of James Creek built a Church, some five miles south of the James Creek Church, and notwithstanding the early and severe Winter, got it completed, and on the first day of February commenced a series of meetings in it which were both interesting and we hope profitable. On account of of a negligence on our part we had not as much ministerial aid as we perhaps would have had, had we published it according to orders. Though our help was small in number, yet it was quite efficient. Brethren Stephen Hilderbrand and J. S. Burkhart, of Conemaugh were with us, also J. S. Snowberger of Clover Creek.

On account of sickness in the family, we had not the pleasure of attending a number of the appointments, but those who were present say the meetings were well attended, interesting, and that the brethren labored with much zeal for our Master's cause, for which they have our gratefol thanks.

Bros. Hildebrand and Burkhart, were with us in the PILGRIM Office where we made their acquaintance which was quite agreeable, and we hope, will not soon be forgotten. They expressed themselves much pleased with the membership of James Creek, and we are sure that the members were quite well pleased with the ministerial aid, so that we hope both parties may soon have the pleasure of again enjoying each others society. Our meetings closed on Tuesday evening for want of help, and on account of the break in the weather.

Brethren, in making their ministerial visits, will please not forget James Creek.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Seventy-five members of the Ecumenical Council have died since it was opened in Rome, in December, 1869.

Deaths in 1872: Chicago, 10,000; St. Louis, 7,927; Cincinnati, 5,472; New York, 32941; Philadelphia, 20,-554; Baltimore, 8,703.

INTENSE COLD.—This winter has been marked by an unusual amount of intensely cold weather. On the 18th inst., the temperature at Sparta, Wis., was 45 degrees below zero; Lacrosse, Wis,, 31; St. Paul 31; Minneapolis, 34 below; Milwaukee, 8 above.

BEST TIME FOR PAINTING HOUSES. The best time for painting the exterior of buildings is late in autumn or during the winter. Paint then employed will endure twice as long as when applied in early summer or hot weather. In the former it dries slowly and becomes hard, like a glazed surface, not easily affected afterward by the weather, or worn off by the beating of storms. But in hot weather the oil in the paint soaks into the wood at once, as into a sponge, leaving the lead nearly dry and nearly ready to crumble off. This last difficulty, however, might be guarded against, though at an increased expense, by first going over the surface with raw oil. By painting in cold weather, one annoyance might certainly be escaped, namely, the collection of small flies in the fresh paint.

POETRY.

SEND ME.

BY REV. DANIEL MARCH, D. D.

Hark, the voice of Jesus crying,
Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white and harvests waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?
Loud and long the Master calleth,
Rich reward He offers free;
Who will answer, gladly saying,
"Here am I, send me, send me?"

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And the heathen lands explore,
You can find the heathen nearer,
You can help them at your door.
If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite,
And the least you give for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say He died for all.
If you cannot rouse the wicked,
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead the little children
To the Savior's waiting arms.

Let none hear you idly saying,
"There is nothing I can do,"
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let His work your pleasure be:
Answer quickly when He calleth:
"Here I am; send me, send me."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

SOBER THOUGHTS FOR HONEST PROFESSORS.—NO 2.

J. S. FLORY.

Paul says the Gospel " is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." From this we evidently learn that the Gospel is all sufficient to govern us in matters of salvation--we need not look elsewhere for light to illumine our pathway, other than that which is vouchsafed unto us from God as a blessing, the result consequent upon our faith in and obedience to the Gospel. Salvation is the one thing of all others needful for our present and eternal happiness. Believing the query to be in the minds of our readers, "what shall I do to be saved," we purpose to present a few practical illustrations, drawn from the New Testament Scriptures, applicable to the premises under consideration.

First, we introduce the case of the Philippian jailor, Acts 16, as one who, probably never had heard of salvation, through Jesus,—fearful that he must die, he inquired of Paul and Silas what he should do to be saved. As an answer, relative to eternal salvation he was told to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Faith was necessary to salvation because "without faith it is impossible to please God." The apostles spoke unto him and his household the word of the Lord and we learn baptism followed. In this instance, we see baptism belongs to the "word of the Lord"—evidently it was water baptism for he went where there was water. Never for a moment be deluded with the idea that this man was baptized in his house, for it is evident he was not, because after his baptism he "brought them into his house, which he could not have done, had he not gone out of his house,, for he was in when the apostle "spake to him and all that were in his house." In the case of the Ethiopian Eunuch, Acts 8, we have also one who when He learned of Jesus it was required of him that he should believe. When Philip preached unto him "Jesus" he preached water baptism, and believing, he, the Eunuch was, baptized in water.

Next, we will call attention to those on the day of Pentecost Acts 2, who when they believed,—believed that Jesus was the Christ and they had crucified him &c., asked what they should do. Peter did not tell them to believe, for it was evident they were already believers, but he told them to "Repent and be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Having believed, it was now necessary to take another step, and that was repent and then be baptized--that is suffer yourselves to be baptized in water as the Lord had commanded, "and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost,"—shall receive it from God, who it is that baptizes with the Holy Spirit as He had promised He would.

Now we wish to call attention to the case of Paul Acts 9: 22. Owing to his miraculous conversion he was made to believe, and believing he became a penitent man for "behold he prayeth." After he received his sight he "arose and was baptized" and Ananias said unto him, why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Now here we have a character that had believed and no doubt repented and yet had not his sins washed away. Why? the answer is plain, because he had not yet been baptized. "Be baptized" here, as well as elsewhere, undoubtedly means submit to the ordinance of water baptism. Mark you it does not say arise and ye shall receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost as some would have us to believe it ought to read. No, no, it is just as it should be, and as in other cases water baptism was necessary that he might receive remission of sins. From these cases we have presented, we are forced to conclude that faith, in a certain measure, is the first step, repentance the second, and water baptism the third. By a faithful compliance with those prerequisites we have the promise of the washing away of sins through the merits of Christ and cleansing efficacy of His blood, and THEN ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. The adopting principles of the Gospel in all its primary bearings beautifully harmonizes with the above conclusions. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Except a man be born of water and the spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God." "Saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3 : 5. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father even so we also should walk in newness of life; for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection." Rom. 6 : 45. "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God. In these positive scriptural truths we have salvation following baptism —born of the spirit after born of the water,—the renewing of the Holy Ghost after the washing of regeneration,—are in the likeness of His resurrection after having been planted in the likeness of his death,—walk in newness of life after having been buried with Him by baptism into death,—are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God after we have been buried with Him in baptism,—and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost after having been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ,—be baptized for the remission of sins. In the face of all these incontrovertible facts, hundreds and thousands teach differently, and we are pained to the heart to see so many honest unsuspecting ones led astray thereby. That my candid and unprejudiced readers may see the inconsistency of erroneous views along side the truth, we will make an exposition of a few points. The tenet of faith of some of our popular religionists claim the reception of the Holy Spirit before baptism,—the remission of sins before baptism—born of the spirit before being born of water—the renewing of the Holy Spirit before the washing of regeneration—are in the likeness of His resurrection before being planted in the likeness of His death—walk in newness of life before having been buried with Him by baptism into death—are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God before having been buried with Him in baptism. And that baptism is because of the remission of sins. That we are saved by faith alone, when James says "ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and NOT by faith alone." And we are told that Jesus saves all who come to Him by faith, while Paul says "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him." However we will admit that all who come to Christ with that faith that is of a living, saving nature and prompts the professer to obey the commands of God, will be saved. To expect salvation short of the promises of God is hazardous in the extreme. Does not the Gospel plainly teach that the doctrine of salvation is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ "as the Scriptures hath said;" thoroughly repent of sin, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and then the Holy Spirit shall be received? Now the Lord has plainly specified the conditions upon which He will become reconciled to man and "Remember their iniquities no more." He "was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself," and now we have the promise of the pardon of our sins through the same Jesus upon conditions we meet God at the point He has designated. He would have the material man buried in a material element—water—an outward washing significant of that inward cleansing He is willing and promised shall take place through the atoning blood of Jesus, that was shed "once for all," and as the seal of His covenant and promise, the soul—the immaterial principle of man is baptized with an immaterial gift, nothing less than the Holy Spirit or Holy life and are thus truly regenerated,—recreated after the image of God—and is recognized as a son of God—a new creature in Christ Jesus, and, therefore, must walk in newness of life. Thus in this great work of regeneration, the sinner "comes to God"—meets God at the point His mercy called him, and then Jesus meets the sinner, and oh! what a meeting! Contrition on the part of the sinner, love, grace, mercy and pardon through His Son's atoning blood on the part of God. Now the adopted child of God becomes a "fellow citizen with the saints of the household of God" and running the race set before, forgets not to learn of Jesus that he may know how to run and keep the commandments of his Lord and Master, having the spirit of his Heavenly teacher, he will be "meek and lowly in heart," will not aspire to high things but condescend to men of low estate,—will never cavil about the commands of Jesus, but bow submissively to the all things knowing that after having done all he is but an unprofitable servant, yet has the promise of glory, honor and and immortality through the free grace of God. Oh that we might all look well to our ways and fear lest a promise being left us we should come short of it, knowing "there is a way that seemeth right unto man but the end thereof is death." Let us get in the way that is right, which is the Gospel way. Come all ye that love the Lord and let us walk that way together, and we will soon all be at home in Heaven.

FOR THE READERS OF THE PILGRIM.

I herein present a query for every sincere soul to solve for their own benefit, and if any lack wisdom, let them ask of God who giveth liberally to all men and upbraideth not, and it shall be given them. The Savior said, "Seek first the Kingdom of God," and again "Whosoever loveth anything more than me is not worthy of me." Paul says, "I beseech you therefore, Brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice holy acceptable unto God which is your reasonable service, and be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, acceptable and perfect will of God." From the foregoing texts, we ask whether it is not our duty to cut off every unnecessary thought, desire and action? We do admit that sincerity and perfection are two things, yet we think we cannot be Christians without the first, and we do not comprehend how we can possess the first without desiring the latter. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled," hence a continual uneasiness and warfare, but blessed be God, it is not without a promise. And now by way of solving the query, I would ask, how much unnecessary expense and time is lost by chewing tobacco, smoking, snuffing, extra tending at tables in serving up the luxuries and unnecessaries of life, and I ask how much of it is in conformity to this world? Yea, I would understand it to be an obstacle in our way of knowing the perfect will of God. My idea is that all that is done to gratify the lust of the eye and the pride of life, is sinful unless it is as Paul said, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do let it be done to promote God's glory and our eternal welfare."

Now, as our highest obligations is to love God supremely and our neighbor as ourselves, if by cutting off the luxuries of life we can do good to suffering humanity, are we not under obligations to do it? Christ undoubtedly was rich, and might have been happy without us, but for our sakes He became poor, took upon Himself suffering and shame. If we are His we have His spirit, and will we not deny ourselves of the superfluities of life for those whom we are to love as ourselves? If we but cut off and dispense with those things that are calculated to destroy our constitutions rather than make them healthful and vigorous, those things which do us no real good but the gratifying of the carnal mind which is enmity to God and is as the poet says:

"How vain are all things here below,
How transient and how fair;
Each pleasure hath, its poison too
And every sweet a snare."

Yea, if we would do away all vanity, and live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, and appropriate our surplus to the cause of Christ and His Brethren, what a vast amount of good might be done in our own fraternity, besides the world at large? And how much more would we be as lights to the world and salt to the earth, and our Heavenly Father be glorified thereby and we at the end would hear the happy applaud of "Well done good and faithful servant," &c., whereas I fear many of us will be charged not with using and not abusing the world, but with abusing and wasting the Master's goods, and many will be speechless not having the wedding garment on. Therefore love, (charity) should be the main spring of all our actions, and in all we do we should have an eye single to the glory of God, to the promotion of His Kingdom here on earth and to the edification of immortal souls. Thus when we come together in our assemblies for worship we ought to meet quietly, as near the appointed time as possible, and as much as convenient, meet and greet each other quietly with an unfeigned salutation, remembering that it required Aaron and Hurr to stay up the hands of Moses so that Joshua could prevail, and ascend our supplications Heavenward in behalf of our ministering brethren that they may divide the word of Truth aright, and draw from the sacred records things old and new, to the glory of God and to the benefit of the church. And when we meet upon Communion occasions, we ought to be very solemnly impressed and pay strict attention to the examination admonitions, and at the supper, or feast of charity, look forward with a happy anticipation of a glorious feast with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and the saints of old, when Jesus Himself will serve, which by way of illustration, perhaps might be termed the Millenium feast, and when we partake of the bread and wine in remembrance of Jesus' dying love, we should look back with profound and august solemnity to the crucifixion of the Son of God. And as I believe the design and intention was and still is to impress the mind anew of the sufferings of that immaculate Lamb of God, profound silence would be better calculated to promote the cause and bring about the end than singing, and when the commandments of the Redeemer have been observed in silence, truth and sincerity, we might to the glory of God and our encouragement sing with the spirit and understanding:

Rejoice, the Lord is King,
Your God and King adore;
Mortals give thanks and sing,
And triumph evermore.
Lift up your hearts, lift up your voice,
Rejoice again, I say rejoice," &c.

or something else that would be as appropriate.

May God grant that the Church in 1873 be more like that described in the Song of Solomon, looking forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun and terrible as an army with banners.

THINGS TO BE PRAYED FOR.

OUR FATHER

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation, forming us after thy own image, tenderly feeding us and conducting and strengthening us all our days. Thou art our Father by a more excellent mercy, adopting us in a new birth to become partakers of the inheritance of Jesus.

WHICH ART IN HEAVEN.

Heaven is thy throne and earth thy footstool. From thy throne thou beholdest all the dwellers on earth and triest the hearts of men, and nothing is hid from thy sight. And as thy knowledge is infinite, so is thy power uncircumscribed as the utmost orb of heaven, and thou sittest in thy own essential happiness and tranquility immovable and eternal. That is our country and thither thy servants are travelling, There is our Father and that is our inheritance. There our hearts are, for there our treasures are laid up till the day of recompense.

HALLOWED BE THY NAME.

Thy name, O God, is glorious, and in thy name is our hope and confidence. According to thy name so is thy praise unto the world's end. They that love thy name shall be joyful in thee for thy name which thou madest to be proclaimed unto thy people, is the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin, and that will, by no means, clear the guilty. In this glorious name we worship thee O, Lord.

THY KINGDOM COME.

Thou reignest in heaven and on earth. O do thou rule also in our hearts, advance the interest of religion, let thy gospel be placed in all the regions of the earth and let all nations come and worship thee, laying their proud wills at thy feet, submitting their understanding to the obedience of Jesus, conforming their affections to their holy laws. Let thy kingdom be set up gloriously over us and do thou reign in our spirit by thy spirit of grace.

THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH AS IT IS IN HEAVEN.

Thy will, O God, is the measure of holiness and peace, thy providence, he great disposer of all things, tying all events together in order to thy glory and thy good for thy servants, by a wonderful mysterious chain of wisdom. Let thy will also be the measure of our desires, for we know that whatsoever thou doest is good. Grant that we may submit our will to thine, being patient of evils which thou inflictest; lovers of the good which thou commandest; haters of all evil.

GIVE US THIS DAY OUR DAILY BREAD.

Thou, O God, which takest care of our souls, do not despise our bodies which thou hast made and sanctified and designed to be glorious. But now we are exposed to hunger and thirst, nakedness and weariness, want and inconvenience. Give unto us neither poverty nor riches, but feed us with food convenient for us and clothe us with fitting provisions according to that state and condition wherein thou hast placed thy servant, that we may not be tempted with want nor made contemptible by beggary, nor wanton or proud by riches, nor in love with anything in this world, but that we may use it as strangers and pilgrims, as the relief of our needs, the support of our infirmities and the oil of our lamps, feeding us till we are quite spent in thy service.

FORGIVE US OUR DEBTS AS WE FORGIVE OUR DEBTORS.

O dear God, unless thou art pleased to pardon us, in vain it is that we should live here, and what good will our life do us? O, look upon us with much mercy, for we have sinned greviously against thee, O God. Pardon the adherent imperfections of our life, the weakness of our duty, the carelessness of our spirit,—our affected ignorance, our intelligence, our rashness and want of observations, our malice and presumptions.

LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION.

Gracious Father, we are weak and ignorant, our afflictions betray us and make us willing to die. Our adversary, the devil, goeth up and down seeking whom he may devour. He is busy and crafty, malicious and powerful, watchful and envious, and we tempt ourselves running out to mischief.

BUT DELIVER US FROM EVIL.

From sin and shame from the malice and fraud of the devil, and from the falseness and greediness of men, from all thy wrath and from all our impurities. Good Lord, deliver thy servant.

FOR THINE IS THE KINGDOM, THE POWER AND THE GLORY FOREVER. AMEN.

So shall we, thy servants advance the mightiness of thy kingdom, the power of thy majesty and the glory of thy mercy from generation to generation forever. Amen.

TEMPTATION.

This subject is one of great importance to all men, especially to professors of religion. Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with such an innumerable cloud of witnesses we should lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, that we may run the race which is set before us with patience.

The tempter is daily watching our movements, our progress and our life, but his greatest concern is our negligence. Let us consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest we be weary and faint in our minds. Perhaps we have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin. If we consider how, through all the meandering scenes of life that Satan, in various ways, makes an effort to temporize our path to eternal glory by smoothing it a little, making it easier to get along with our worldly affairs and all that men in general are engaged in. It almost makes us shudder to think of it. But it raises joy in our hearts to peruse the greatest annal that ever was dispersed through America viz: the Gospel, and there learn that Christ died for the propitiation of our sins, and not for ours only but for the sins of the whole world, also leaving us an example in all things, He being baptized in Jordan and that being sanctioned by a voice from Heaven acknowledging Him as His Son; then He was led up of the Spirit to be tempted of the devil, and when He had fasted forty days and forty nights was an hungered. Then the tempter tempted Him and said; if thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. This is the joy that we have, that Christ gave us an example in this even when we are tempted how to overcome evil with good. Now seeing that the destroyer is a crafty being taking the advantage of our blessed Master by holding out such inducements as would be almost impossible for us to overcome, it becomes us to take instruction.

In our age of the world, there are people who might believe that the Spirit tempted them, but we understand it to mean, if we go on unforbidden ground (such there are many in the world) and give place to enticements; certainly we are not in the bounds of our duty, and God hath not promised the comforter. There, then, he might suffer us to be tempted. The Spirit will lead us into all truth, but when ever we are out of our bounds we have no promise of not being tempted. Therefore, being negligent in our daily duty, God may suffer us to be tempted. Thus mortal man has many temptations to overcome or to be thrown into. Just as cunning as the enticer was in ancient times, he is to this hour, for he has already the current flowing by every wind of doctrine, making professors of religion believe there are nonessentials written in the word of God. Others are induced to believe that the Spirit of God will follow them to gatherings of the world, and may be connected with the world in almost all respects. Therefore, in due time let us one and all meditate upon the Gospel of truth and not annihilate even the church of Christ by disobedience or selfrighteousness, but be obedient in all things. Although we frequently stray upon paths that are devious in our pilgrimage, let us not be negligent in our daily devotion to God, for we know that He is faithful and will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will with the temptation also make a way of escape that we may be able to bear it: therefore we should be careful not to receive the grace of God in vain, and let him that thinketh he stand take head lest he fall.

ANOMALOUS.

THE HOUSE OF THE LORD.

Of all places on earth, methinks the sweetest one is in the house of the Lord,—where Christians meet to worship the Most High, and where Jesus has promised to be in the midst, if assembled in His name. Cold and indifferent must be the heart that does not esteem this as a pleasant duty, and a privilege that is calculated to qualify us better for the various responsibilities incident to life. Weary with the toils, trials and excitement which we meet with while engaged in our earthly vocations, yet we can look forward with bright anticipations to the hour when we will for a time, lay these aside as belonging to the cares of this life, and go up to the house of the Lord, and there have our souls fed with the Bread of Life. To those who go up to this sacred place with full determinations to worship "in spirit and in truth," it is none other than "the house of God and the gate of Heaven," but those who go to the house of prayer careless and unconcerned, it is not likely that they will receive much benefit from the beautiful and instructive truths that are there presented by those whose duty it is to proclaim the Gospel to a dying world.

Many may prefer to frequent the ball-room or some other vain and sinful amusement which the world participates in, but our highest joy should consist in attending the house of the Lord. These scenes should be dear to every heart, as they are bright spots strewn along our pathway through life, and if entered into with solemnity and a desire to be instructed in the right paths, will produce great and lasting benefits.

This world would indeed be a dreary waste were it not for the solemn assemblies where God's people congregate to worship Him, and where they are encouraged to go on in the good cause which they have espoused,—to labor with renewed zeal in the Master's cause, thus securing unto themselves a rich inheritance, and showing to those around them that they have been with Jesus and learned of Him, that they too may be constrained to frequent the house of prayer and praise and thereby glorify their Father in Heaven. May we ever esteem it a high and sacred privilege to meet in the sanctuary of the Lord while here on earth, that when we are done meeting and parting in these earthly temples, we may be so unspeakably happy as to meet in our Father's house in that beautiful land on High.

"You may sing of the beauty of mountain or dale,
Of the silvery streamlet and flowers of the vale;
But the place most delightful this earth can afford,
Is the place of devotion, the house of the Lord."

PATIENCE.

"But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect, and entire, wanting nothing. James 1:4.

Nowhere else in the Bible is this ennobling principle so often spoken of, in so few of the sacred pages as in the epistle of James. The Apostle knew its worth by inspiration as well as by experience and natural philosophy. He studied its results and found it to so provident of good, that it tended unto perfection, and as having a tendency to prepare its possessor for any and every emergency, being "entire," and as providing for him all things so that he be "wanting nothing." Thus do all Christians study this virtue and thus do they find it. Patience is the foundation from which flows an incense, that sweetly flavors all passions. It causes happiness, joy and peace in the family circle. It causes glad hearts when father returns home. It causes affectionate accents and expressions of love; terms of reverence, acts of kindness, longsuffering and forbearance toward all. As it gladdens hearts when fathers return home, so does it secure and preserve cheerfulness when mothers retire for a few hours from the cares and toils of home. Patience is an indispensible link in the chain which suspends those eight grand characteristics which, if they "be in you and abound they shall make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." But if this link be broken, then shall three of these fall, of which one is Charity, which Paul says is greater than faith or hope.

C. C. ROOT.

THE DESIGN OF BAPTISM.

Continued.

God is a God of order, and his organized law is a law of order, and we are required to obey it in the order in which it is laid down, which is both consistent and clear to every unprejudiced man or woman. But through philosophy and vain deceit we become contaminated with the rudiments of the world, influenced by the power of satan, and we soon begin to set up our judgment against God and His holy apostles, hence, the great confusion in christendom at the present day.

A series of Essays came under my notice a short time since on the subject above treated, and the writer when referring to the sermon of Peter, in regard to baptism for the remission of sins, would try to make us believe that the word for, meant because of, and therefore sins must first be remitted before a candidate is fit for baptism, and that baptism, is only a right signifying that sins are remitted. I would here say, that brings him into a dreadful dilemma, for Peter says repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins, then if the word for, means because of, it would read thus: repent and be baptized because you have your sins remitted, about as glaring a fraud as could possibly be practiced against the messengers of Christ.

Again, he says, when referring to 1 Peter, 3: 21. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh," &c. It seems to me that the outward washing in baptism is here, by Peter, called the putting away of the filth of the flesh. Why does he say so? Not because Peter says so, for Peter says right to the contrary. Now whose testimony will we take, Peters or J. H.'s? Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel. Again, "We must be baptized into Christ not in water," and many more like expressions which are not worthy of comment. Any who have a desire to see the essays I will refer you to the Church Advocate, published in Lancaster, Pa., dated Oct. 2d, 9th and 16th, but the writer is a resident of our county.

Now I will show you dear reader that Peter meant what he said, on the day of Pentecost, and that it corresponds and corroberates with the general tenor of the gospel. All other inspired writers give testimony that in the general order of God's dealing with men it required a duty to be performed. That duty is repentance and baptism for the remission of our sins, and that is the design of it and what it will accomplish when complied with according to gospel order. We will now take you back to the ushering in of the gospel dispensation and see what was then preached, Matt. 3: 1. In those days came John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judea and saying, Repent, &c. in the 6th verse, and were baptized of him in Jordan confessing their sins not upon their remission. Oh, but says one, John's baptism was not Christian baptism. Well, let us pass on to 13th verse of same chapter we read, "Then cometh Jesus from Gallilee to Jordon unto John to be baptized of him." Now if that which is said above be true then we find here Jesus guilty of an unchristian act, for Matthew the Evangelist says, John baptized him, and when he was baptized he went up out of the water, (which is another thought worthy of our attention, especially those of you who are in the habit of going through the formula in the house), Jesus said it was becoming so that all righteousness might be fulfilled. Another might say, Jesus was not baptized for the remission of sins, we admit and say more, he was not required to repent, either; then that is an exceptional case. The reason of this is, he had nothing to repent of, and whenever we find one among you having nothing to repent of we will say the same. But such is not the case, then we will treat you as John treated the people of Jerusalem and the Land of Judea, that is, have you baptized in the water confessing your sins. That is so plain that any man not blind with prejudice or otherwise can see, and as for John's baptism not being Christian is so thin it seems as though some one would frighten at their own shadow. I would ask who sent John? That is enough. The Savior once asked the Jews this question, "The baptism of John, was it from Heaven or of men? Again it is said, the lawyers and Pharisees rejected the counsel of God against themselves and were not baptized of John. Were John's disciples rebaptized? I would like to see an account of a case? If not, then it was valid baptism and approved of by God and Christ, giving us an example. And out of the number of those whom John baptized, Christ chose twelve to be his witnesses whom he sent forth to preach his word. Now does their word and works correspond with the word and work of John. Of Peters' history I have already given. We will now come to Paul, one born out of due time, not receiving his instruction in the same way that the others did, but getting it direct from heaven after the resurrection of Christ from the dead, for at the time the other apostles were busily engaged in spreading the gospel. Saul, as he was then called, was persecuting the followers of Christ, being brought up at the feet of Gamaliel as many of the divines of the present day, but when God saw proper to call him from his wicked career and put him to a more noble purpose, and that, at a time when he was very busily engaged, having received authority from the rulers, was on his way to Damascus to bring to Jerusalem those disciples of Christ and punish them because they did not obey Gamaliel, but God met him in the way and said, "Saul, why do you persecute me?" Saul was astonished at this bit of information but said what shall I do Lord? Now if as we hear so much from our friends who so bitterly oppose us in the setting forth of the gospel as it is delivered unto us, why not have Saul's sins forgiven where the Lord met him, why did he have to go through the hands of one of his faithful disciples? Answer, because it is the order of God's dealing with men. Was it contrary to the course delivered by Peter on the day of Pentecost? If it was, then there is two orders. I tell you nay. There is one plan for our salvation, and as already said, it is clearly set forth, not shrouded in mystery as some would have us to believe. We will now take Paul's own language of the formula which he underwent when he was initiated into the family of God. Turn to the 22d chap. of the Acts of the Apostles 16th verse. which reads, "And now, why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." This was his own language long after he was converted, at the time he was making his defence in Jerusalem. I have given three positive cases under three different orders, that is, one before Christ's death and ressurrection, one immediately after by one of his chosen witnesses, and one especially called to bear his name before the Gentiles; a perfect agreement in their order of procedure having received their authority from the court of Heaven, in which we do not find such a divided state of things as in this fast age.

SEEDS.

Who can tell what a world of life is wrapped up in the tiny acorn, as it lies unnoticed half buried in the soil? The brown earth, out of pity, hides it away in her bosom and nourishes the little germ. Soon two shining green leaves peep above the earth, and in a short time they are grown to a shrub. The hand of a child might pluck it up and yet all the form of life manifested by the giant oak is contained in it. The smallest of seeds, the mustard, produces a plant from seven to nine feet high, approximating a tree, where the fowls of the air may find shelter among its branches. The winds and ocean currents bring the seeds and plants from every shore and deposit them upon the coral reefs, in time, render them a fit habitation for man. Here the cocoanut grows and the palm tree spreads its broad leaves to protect him from a tropical sun. Who can tell from a seed what the plant may be? The germ of the towering pine is contained in a much smaller seed-coat than the acorn. The smooth, light seed of the thistle which the wind carries to and fro over the fields, does not indicate the trouble that the farmer has to root up the noxious plant that injures the grain. A husbandman passing by a neighbor's field saw a thistle growing alone. Instead of pulling it up as his first impulse was, he went on, and the next year he found dozens of the same plants in his own fields. We may learn from this to regard the faults of others with charity, for sin may have scattered the same seed in our hearts. The time for different species of seeds to germinate is varied. Some germinate in a few days, some in a few weeks, while others remain buried for a whole season.

The good seed of truth often lies buried long after the sower has gone to his reward. The growth of plants also depends upon the nature of the soil and the manner in which it has been prepared. The pastor's field is wide. Thorns and thistles are springing up among the plants and he needs to work diligently to destroy these. Many an earnest minister has wept over the seed he has sown, for he saw no prospect of a harvest, "only the leaves, no gathered sheaves." Another comes in his place and the field having been cultivated by his predecessor, reaps his labors in a precious ingathering of souls. The field of the Sabbath school teacher is smaller and he can more carefully watch the tender plants and by the help of the Master may be able to gather the fruit of eternal life, but a mother gone to her rest may have scattered the seed.

The spirit of christianity that is mingling with the atmosphere of many nations to-day, is not the product of our generation, but the spirit and teachings and struggles in which Luther, Whitfield, Calvin, the Pilgrims, Roger Williams, Judson and many others have sowed precious seed. We are reminded of the scripture, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone." The seeds that are sown in tears, we are told, shall be reaped in joy. Into every christian heart God has poured the good seed and commands us to scatter it abroad. He alone can give the increase. Then let us commit all that we do to his care, praying that while we try to sow the precious seed that we may be kept from scattering also the tares. MAGGIE STIFLER.

THE CHILD AND THE RILL.

CHILD.

Beautiful rill,
Sparkling and bright,
Gliding so still
From morn to night,
Who taught thee to flow?
Who ordered thy course?
And thy fount below,
Who gave it its source?

RILL

'Twas God, my dear child,
Who gave me my source;
He taught me to flow,
And ordered my course,
'Neath the shade of the trees,
By the side of the hill.
'Midst the grass and the flowers,
So gentle and still.

And this is the place
For me to do good:
At the foot of the hill,
In the shade of the wood,
I water the herds:
I refresh the tall trees;
I nurture the flowers,
And cool every breeze.

And if, my dear child,
God e'er fixes your lot
At the foot of the hill,
Come, oh, come to this spot.
Hear the beautiful birds
Sing among the thick bowers,
And see the blithe bees
Sipping sweets from the flowers.

See what beauty and love,
And what happiness too,
Spring up by my side,
And your pathway pursue:
Nor sigh to be great,
Like the ocean or flood;
But, like the small rill,
Be content to do good.

"NO ONE TO LOVE ME NOW."

How sad it is to think of orphan children! Here they are in our picture. Their mother has just died. Before retiring to rest that night, sister Martha went into her mother's room. There she found her little crippled brother, Eddy, crying bitterly, as he raised the cold hand that lay beside him.

"Mother! O mother, speak to me! Tell me you'll not go away! Oh, I will be good! If you leave me, I shall have nobody to love me!"

He paused for an answer, and then receiving none, he said again, in a voice of sorrow which pierced Martha's heart;

"Mother, dear mother, do speak to me!"

Martha went up quietly to him, and laying her hand gently on his shoulder, she whispered "Eddy!"

The little boy raised his face. Oh, how pale and wan it was!

"Eddy, mother is in Heaven now: she cannot hear you speak to her."

"Oh, she must hear me! She always listened to me before."

"But she can't now, Eddy, because God has taken her away."

"And will she never come back?"

"No; but if you ask the Lord Jesus Christ, He will take you to be with her some day."

"But there is no one to love me now."

"I will, Eddy;" and she drew him tenderly into her arms, and kissed him almost as fondly as his mother had done. Eddy looked up into her face, and there seemed to be something there which he could trust, for by degrees his sobs became less violent; and bidding his sister good-night, quietly, he went up to bed.

Both the brother and sister cried themselves to sleep that night.

God pity and bless the poor orphans. How good He is to permit us to say:

"When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up."

EASIER NOW.

"It is my birthday, grandpappa," said the boy; "I have so many presents—a top and a ball, and some books."

His grandpappa looked rather sadly at the child and said—"I hope you will grow up a wise and good man, Arthur, and a happier man than I have been."

"Why, grandpapa?" asked the boy.

"I did not remember my Creator when I was young, my boy. I was always putting it off till another day, and when my friend here used to say that youth was the best time to think of God, and to give my heart to Him, I would say there was time enough yet, and I forgot God, in whose hands my life was. Then came the cares of life, and I seemed to have no time. I had to work for my living; to toil all the long days, and sometimes nights, in my counting room, at my books, and I found it difficult then to think of God. At last I was very ill; God took away the health for which I had never thanked Him, and the strength which I had thought was all my own; but in illness, and during nights of pain and bitter suffering, I found I could not think of God nor study the Bible which I had neglected, nor learn of Jesus, whom I had rejected. God raised me up again, however; but then I had other sorrows and cares, and it still seemed as if there was no time for religion. I have at last, I hope, found Jesus my Savior; but how sad is the thought to me that I have nothing but a world-weary heart to offer Him! I can do nothing for God, for I have so little strength either of mind or body."

The boy looked grave. His grandparent went on, "It is an easy yoke that Christ bids us take. Is it not, friend Gray?"

"It is indeed," said the other old man with a quiet smile.

"Bear this in mind, dear boy, that serving God in youth saves us from many sorrows, and it does not take away from us one real pleasure. Don't let your birthday pass away without praying that God would help you to remember Him now in the days of your youth."

The child lifted up his heart and God heard his prayer.

THE VOICE OF THE BELL.

A boy whose only religious education was obtained in a Sabbath school, discovered the worth of his soul at a very early age, and became convicted of sin. Christian friends looked forward to the time when he would be useful in the service of Christ for he appeared to be truly converted. But he formed the acquaintance of careless and wicked boys, and, by degrees, he absented himself from Sabbath school, and from church. At last he forsook both entirely, and said he was "ashamed to be a Sabbath scholar now, as he was a big boy." He went on from bad to worse, till he became a young man.

One Sabbath morning, he with some of his wicked companions, had set forth to spend the day in sport. They happened to pass the church where, when a boy, he had attended the Sabbath school. Just as they reached the steps, the bell pealed out its solemn tone.

He started; to his ears it spoke as plain as human voice: "Come, come, come!" Then and there the Spirit arrested him. He went on, but every peal rang in his ear, "Come, come now!" As the last stroke died away he turned to his companions, saying: "I'll not go with you to-day; I am going back to church." They laughed and tried to stop him; but he turned from them, and went back to the church, the days of his boyhood in that Sabbath school walking with him in the visions of memory every step of the way. The sermon was from the words, "Come unto me," etc. Then and there the Savior said to his soul, "Come;" and he went. To this day he is one of the most zealous workers in the vineyard of Christ. List to "the sound of the church-going bell," and see if it says not to you: "Come, come, come now."—Sunday School Messenger.

DO IT IN TIME.

Only two or three inches—that was all. If the switchman had moved the track only that little distance, all would have been right. But he forgot; and the train that was passing the station ran furiously into the heavy freight cars, and dashed itself to pieces!

"What was the cause?" everybody asked, when the news of the great accident spread about town.

"Oh! a switch was out of place," was the answer. The switchman was careless. Perhaps he was drunk."

How true it is, as Solomon said "There is a time for everything." If we do not attend to it at the right time, it is just as bad as if we did not do it at all.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

BLACKSBURG, VA., Feb. 4th '73.

Dear brethren:—I received yours dated January 29th this morning, and was pleased with the Christian spirit that dictated it. In response to its contents, I will say that the ever welcome PILGRIM has not reached me this year yet, and that I was growing impatient for its weekly visits. I believe I wrote substantially in my last to be recognized as a permanent subscriber, if not, regard me so from henceforward until it is directed otherwise. I regret very much my inability to communicate for its pages at present.

My health is very much impaired at this time, and I am contemplating a visit to "Our Home" New York, to try the virtue of its healing agencies. Should I go there, I will try and send you a remembrance, occasionally if my health will permit. I am now barely able to get about the house, and have been compelled, though reluctantly, to suspend the labors of the ministry indefinitely. As soon as I revive sufficiently, I will devote a full share of my time and energies to the good cause which you are carrying forward. May the Great Physician bless His feeble servant with His presence to enable him to suffer for the cause of salvation, and may you likewise receive a due share of Heaven's gifts.

Your brother,
D. C. MOOMAW.

REMARKS. The above is the expression of a large number of our readers. Some have said, "Send it on until I order it stopped," others, "as long as it is is published," &c. but of course, we cannot remember these things, and as they are generally such as are in the habit of writing to us, we made no note of it, expecting that they, like all others, would notice our present arrangement, and inform us of their wish of having it continued, but it seems that they may have been waiting and depending on their "life-lets" for reading the PILGRIM. We highly appreciate such abiding faith in our Christain integrity, but are sorry that they were disappointed in not receiving the PILGRIM. We especialy sympathize with our much esteemed brother Moomaw in his affliction, and hope that through the aid of our Great Physician and from the benefits to be derived from a treatment at "Our Home" he may soon be restored to health and be again enabled to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ.

THE NAME OF JESUS SOUNDS SO SWEET.

These are words that have left a lasting impression on my mind, from the fact, that they came from the dying lips of a departed friend.

Three years ago I had a dear brother. His manly strength was not surpassed in all the country. His health was very good. To look at him you would think death would never overtake him, but alas, disease took hold on his manly frame and brought him down to a bed of sickness. He was unable to attend to business for eight long months. He did not profess to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus but often remarked to me that he intended to be a christian, and wanted to be a true follower of Christ, but he was deprived of ever attaching himself to the church, but thank God, he had a lingering disease, and I feel satisfied he made peace with Him who is able to forgive the worst of sinners. While our dear old mother was attending to his wants and spending many sleepless nights over him, he saw her weeping and said, "mother do not weep for me, but be up and doing for yourself." Just before his death, while some friends were singing the hymn, "Jesus lover of my soul," he said, "how sweet the name of Jesus sounds," and soon left this vale of tears. I feel satisfied he reached that happy home where parting will be no more, and now I will say to father, mother and sisters, do not get weary serving the Lord, but prepare to meet thy son and our dear brother. We have one more dear brother who is out of the ark of safety and still sporting on the brink of ruin. May God be merciful to him, and may he flee the wrath to come before it is too late and prepare to meet death and hear the welcome plaudit, "well done thou good and faithful servant, that he may inherit the kingdom prepared for the people of God."

"Vain brother thy fond pursuit forbear,
Repent, thy end is nigh;
Death at the farthest can't be far,
O, think, before you die."

Now in conclusion, I will say dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, be up and doing and if you have friends still walking the downward road, try and pursuade them to turn from their evil way. They may be snatched from time to eternity without one moments warning. There is a work for us all to do. If we cannot preach we can talk. Let us all do our part, and do it without delay, and try to bear each others burdens while traveling through this world of trouble is the desire of your unworthy follower of Christ. C. P. F.

WITH.

"I indeed baptize you with [en] water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear he shall baptize you with [en] the Holy Ghost, and with [not in the Greek] fire." Matt. iii. 11.

The Greek preposition en, which is here translated with, is found not less than 290 times in Matthew's gospel; and out of the 290 times which it occurs in the Greek Testament, it is rendered in 215 times in King James' translation. It is rendered among, 12 times; within, 3 times; for, once; under, once; through, once; at, once; unto, once; upon, once; because, 2 times; at, 7 times; on, 4 times; by miscellaneous terms, 4 times; by, 26 times, and is rendered with but 11 times; so that our authority for saying that John baptized with water is without foundation. It should be rendered in; "I indeed baptize you in water." "He shall baptize you in the Holy Ghost, and (in) fire."

For the benefit of the readers that are not acquainted with the Greek I, will refer to a few places where the Greek en (in) is found.

Matt. iii, 6. Baptized of him in (en) Jordan.
" iv. 21. In (en) a ship with Zebadee.
" " 23. Teaching in (en) their synagogues.
" v, 12. Your reward in (en) Heaven.
" " 15. All that are in (en) the house.
" vi, 9. Our Father which art in (en) Heaven.
" ix, 10. Sat at meat in (en) the house.

Bros. Brumbaugh:—We had a meeting in the Rock Run District, Indiana, last week. Brother Jesse Calvert was with us. The weather was cold and very stormy and the lanes were drifted full, but they were shoveled open and a good attendance was had and a great interest taken in the meeting by everybody.

On Saturday, two were baptized, notwithstanding the ice, snow and cold winds.

Also the week previous, a meeting was held in the Shipswaney district by Bro. Jesse Calvert and Isaac L. Berkey. There was no Meeting-house, but the neighbors and friends all agreed to stop the school during the meeting as the weather was so very cold. Four more were made willing to enter the Kingdom of Jesus and were taken to the Lake, the ice, 30 inches thick, cut open, and there buried with Christ in Baptism. Many more seem to have made up their minds to come into the Church, for which purpose there is another meeting of several days appointed, commencing on the 12th day of April. The good work of the Lord is still going on. Jacob Berkey.

Forest City, Mo.
Feb. 3d., 1873.

Dear Pilgrim:—We have had a very cold winter so far. At present it is moderating and the snow is thawing rapidly. It had been 24 degrees below zero about Christmas with an average of about 8 degrees below zero for six weeks. I hope that the coldest weather is over, at least we are willing that it should be. (So are we. Ed.) I recalled all our appointments for meetings at a distance from us until the first Sunday in March, it being too cold and icy to travel any distance. The horse disease is also among us, but few have died and it is about over.

We are still slowly increasing in number here in the Bethel Church under the blessing of God, and we hope and pray that a continuation of those blessings may attend our weak efforts which we hope still to make in favor of the good cause.

Love to the saints.

A. J. Correll.

Brother's Brumbaugh: As church news are solicited, I would say that we, the brethren of the Ridge District are moving along slowly, not many accessions. Sinners, like Pharoah, are willing to put it off a day longer. Brother Daniel Hollinger was with us at a school house near where I live and preached three successive evenings, and also on Sabbath at the Etter Meeting House. He labored faithfully, hope he will be rewarded for his labors of love and that the seed sown may produce a bountiful harvest. We are glad when brethren come to preach for us. Yours in the bonds of Christian love.

Editors of the Pilgrim: We the members of the North Coventry Church, have had quite a refreshing time. We have been made to sit in heavenly places with Christ Jesus. We had a continued meeting of two weeks. Bro. J. Myers, D. Hollinger, D. Yountz, S. Zug and others were with us. There were sixteen added to the Church and several more are expected to join in with us. May the Lord bless the brethren for their labors of love.

SPRING RUN MEETING.

On last Saturday, February 8th, after passing through a very busy week, we concluded to unyoke ourself from office duty and give the McVeytown brethren a short visit, it being the commencement of a series of meetings to be held at that place.

At 3.20 p. m., we took our leave of the office, and making the connection at Huntingdon, arrived at McVeytown a little before sundown. On leaving the car, we soon learned that brethren J. R. Lane and G. Hanawalt were also on the train. It so happened that each got into a different car without the notice of the other, of course we would not have made the point any sooner, but we lost the opportunity of a friendly chat which we always enjoy. Sometimes luck meets us at every corner, so it was in this case, brother Geo's son had brought a sleigh to convey him home and in it, we found just enough room for our accommodation, and in a short time we were landed at his home where our bodily wants were attended to, and then off for the meeting, which, by the way, was a little late. When we entered the church we found a large audience which was being profitably addressed by brother J. R. Lane, who was the only strange minister present except those of the adjoining congregation, Lewistown. Bro. Lane delivered quite an interesting discourse, followed by Bro. Archy Vandyke, who speaks with considerable earnestness and power.

After service, Elder Hanawalt concluded to divide the labors making three appointments for Sabbath a. m. The other brethren were to fill the outside appointments, and we were left to fill the one at the church. The arrangements all made, we were taken to the home of P. S. Myers, (resident minister), where we were kindly cared for, brother Lane was also present. Next morning we repaired to the church with the weight of our duty heavily upon us, but to our great satisfaction we there met our brother D. M. Holsinger, who on account of bad connection arrived too late for the evening meeting. Of course, we waived the position and brother Daniel gave the audience quite a solid sermon, faith being the subject. He is not apt in stirring up the animal feelings, neither is it his derise, but deals in evident facts which cannot well be gainsayed. We followed with such ideas as were at command. After meeting, we were taken to the house of our old brother Samuel Myers where we dined. His family has become quite small, his children all being married, and have left the old homestead except Reuben, who lives in the same house and has charge of the farm. Two sons and two sons-in-law are in the ministry, one a deacon and the others all members except two. Again next March, if they are spared, will be the fiftieth year that they have lived together in wedlock and have in contemplation, a golden wedding,—except the gold, which he thinks is a little too scarce to have it displayed very much,—that they may be enabled once more before being gathered to the fathers, see all their children together, which is possible as they are all yet living, and what is remarkable, he informed us that in keeping house fifty years, they never had a death in their house. We hope the old father and mother may be spared to realize their desires.

In the evening, there were services again at the Church, and we led off with the ability given, followed by D. M. Holsinger. After services we were taken to Elder Hanawalt's, in company with D. M. Holsinger, where we enjoyed ourself much and had quite an interesting evening and morning entertainment. Bro. Joseph is zealous of his charge and rules well, leaving nothing undone that he thinks might be for the advancement of the good cause. The move now on foot for the abolishing of the hell nurseries with which our country is cursed, is by him, receiving due attention, and he is not ashamed to let the brethren and the world know that the Church of the "Brethren" is a temperance Church, and that he regards it a sacred privilege to slay the demon in the bud. Brethren, a word. Remember, we oppose Temperance Societies on the basis that the Church has it all. That is right,—our position exactly. The principle is good, very good, but the practice, the practice. There is where we may commit ourselves. The issue is before us and we must cast an influence for or against. Make it a subject of prayer, weigh it well and then with the light which God will give, ACT. The time passed so pleasantly, that before we were aware of it, the hour, to go up to the house of the Lord had arrived, where we resorted and enjoyed another very pleasant waiting in the Sanctuary. We now took leave of the brethren, and was taken out to Bro. Abram Myers, also a resident minister, near the depot, that we might take the p. m. train for home. Here we met Eld. Wm. Howe and brother and sister Shellenberger who had come this far on their way to meeting. At this place we spent our time pleasantly, and we trust profitably. In the evening we took the train for home but remained over night in Huntingdon for want of connecton—were hospitably entertained in the house of our brother A. B. Brumbaugh M. D., and next morning reached home and found all things well.

The brethren at Spring Run, (McVeytown) intend continuing the meeting during the week, and we hope the result may be a realization of their fondest expectations—souls converted to God.

THE GREAT WONDER.

The great wonder to strangers is, how James Creek can produce such a ponderous mail. They can scarcely be made to believe that so small a place can contain a printing office with so large a circulation, and in so short a time, but it is a fact and teaches us not to despise the day of small things. Like the tiny snowball, we commenced from a small center and rolled on and on, until our dimensions became of such a magnitude that we cannot escape observation. The humble Pilgrim now travels the United States from center to circumference and weekly makes glad the hearts of thousands, and still the voice from the North and South, East and West is COME. The last week has been auspicious one for us, adding largely to our list. And so it will continue, brethren and sisters, if the proper effort is kept up. The Pilgrim for 1873 is acknowledged by all to be a great improvement upon those of the past and all that is needed to have its circulation doubled, is to be seen. For this purpose we will send, free of postage, a number of specimen copies to any and all who wish to labor for us. Our terms are so liberal to such as are honest and will pay as soon as they can, that it makes it an easy matter to gather subscribers for us. There is very little risk to run if you can get a brother or sister to subscribe as it is an important part of our religion to pay our honest dues, and any that refuse to do it have denied the faith and are not worthy of the name. It is true, we have a large amount of money standing out, but we think it safe, because it is in the hands of brethren. On account of our money lists not being very large a few of our friends entertained fears that our ends might not meet, but we say, calm your fears, our money list is no index to our circulation. It is the result of our liberality and the bulk of our money is back yet. Because we are liberal should make none ungrateful. The more liberality we show towards our patroos, the more gratefulness should be extended to us, or else will our charity be abused. Please think of these things and favor those, especially, who favor you.

AGENTS WANTED.

We want a good active agent in every congregation in the brotherhood and anywhere else that a periodical defending Primitive Christianity is desired. Any persons wishing to labor for us will be supplied with an Almanac, prospectus and sample copies free of charge. Now is the time to work, and there are hundreds that would gladly read the Pilgrim if the opportunity was offered. We have still a goodly number of back No's and Almanacs on hand, so that all can be supplied.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

A citizen of Bedford county, Va., has just perfected an apparatus to melt snow and ice on railroad tracks, by means of a flame "sufficiently intense to produce the effect instantaneously." According to the plan of the inventor, the flame has to be shot from the fore part of the engine, and is relied upon to do its work without causing the slightest impediment to the progress of the train.

"I am glad," said a missionary to an Indian chief, "that you do not drink whiskey; but it grieves me to find that your people use so much of it." "Ah, yes," said the red man, and he fixed an impressive eye on the preacher, which communicated the reproof before he uttered it, "we Indians use a great deal of whiskey, but we do not make it."

POETRY.

NOTHING GOOD SHALL EVER PERISH.

SELECTED BY REBECCA J. REYNOLDS.

Nothing good shall ever perish,
Only the corrupt shall die;
Truth, which men and angels cherish,
Flourishes eternally.

None are wholly God-forsaken,
All his sacred image wear;
None so lost but should awaken
In our heart's a brother's care.

Not a mind but has its mission—
Power of working woe or weal
So degraded none's condition,
But the world his weight may feel.

Words of kindness, words of warning,
Deem not thou may'st speak in vain;
Even those thy counsels scorning,
Oft shall they return again.

Though the mind, absorbed in pleasure,
Hold the voice of counsel light,
Yet doth faithful memory treasure
What at first it seemed to slight.

Words of kindness we have spoken,
May when we have passed away,
Heal, perhaps, some spirit broken,
Guide a brother led astray.

Thus our very thoughts are living,
Even when we are not here;
Joy and consolation giving
To the friends who hold us dear.

Not an act but is recorded,
Not a word but has its weight;
Every virtue is rewarded,
Outrage punished, soon or late.

Let no being, then, be rated
As a thing of little worth;
Every soul that is created
Has its part to play on earth.

ANOINTING THE SICK.

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:
And the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. James 5:14-15.

Dear readers and fellow-pilgrim, travelers to an endless eternity, and more especially to you brethren and sisters, and all that name the name of Christ, is it not astonishing that such a plain commandment, attached with such great promises, and enjoined by Christ, whom all Christian professors acknowledge to be the Head of the Church, and so emphatically taught by James, one of His inspired apostles, is so little observed and even by many extinct? Why those Christian associations have lost sight of this plain command, whose teachers, on whom they entirely rely, can mystify and spiritualize any plain commandment and change it so to suit their own fancy or preconceived notions, we do not so much wonder; but why it is that those who with us believe in the literal observance of all the commandments of the Son of God, do not teach and observe it, we can not understand; and, especially, that it is so much neglected by our own fraternity.

Brethren and sisters, let us examine ourselves in this matter whether the fault does not lie with us. Do we teach our young members the necessity of this wholesome ordinance, when we visit our afflicted and distressed members? Every individual can be a teacher in this respect, but ministers should preach it publicly and frequeotly in their solemn assemblies when they meet together in the holy Sanctuary. I think this part of doctrine is too much dispensed with in some localities among the Brethren. This ought not so to be. Can we say with the Apostle Paul that we "have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God," if we omit to teach that part? May we so solemnly declare that "we ar free from the blood of all men" and neglect this point? Let every one answer for himself in the fear of God. I am well aware that some conceive the idea that as long as the disease is not considered dangerous, or likely to prove fatal it is unnecessary to attend to this injunction. We were called once to perform this ordinance on a dangerously sick sister and when we got there she was much better and considered convalescent, some proposed to omit it for fear if she recovered and would sin or commit faults through weakness it would not be forgiven her. We said it was only complying with the command of the Lord and in so doing we are always on the safe side and under the promise, for perhaps as many recover as die; but this I say when this ordinance is performed, the patient as well as the minister that performs it must be fully resigned to the will of the Lord. But as regards dangerous illness to be required, we have no "thus saith the Lord" The apostle does not qualify sickness; he says simply "Is any sick among you." We do not know the mind of the Lord; slight diseases, by His will can in a moment of time turn fatal, and if no effort is made to comply with this command an important promise may be lost, lost, yea LOST, and that forever. Brethren and sisters let us think on these things.

It was ever considered by the Brotherhood that the anointing should not be performed more than once in one sickness, but if the brother or sister gets well, as is often the case, and gets sick again it should be done again and as often as they get sick it should be repeated, for the apostle does not say how often, but merely "if any get sick among you." But a particular request on the part of the sick must be made to the elders; hence the necessity of teaching our members. Unless doing so from time to time, young members especially, would be ignorant of this fact and we may be chargable for their ignorance. The order of anointing is laid down in the Brethren's Encyclopedia under the head, Anointing, but as some have not access thereto, I will give the order we observe: When we are called on such occasions, if circumstances permit, we first sing a suitable hymn, if not, we dispense with singing; then exhort briefly and follow with prayer; then we read James 5th chap. so much as accords with the subject. And it requires two, since He saith "Let him call the elders of the church, and let them pray over him." If expedient, brief comments are made on the subject, and efficacy of anointing, then if possible, the sick is raised in the bed to a sitting posture, and the elder brother reaches forth his hand, the other brother pours the oil upon it which he first puts upon the head of the sick, and thus three times saying the words of the apostle: First, Thou art anointed with oil in the name of the Lord," unto the strengthening of thy faith. Secondly, unto the comforting of thy conscience. Thirdly, and unto a full assurance of the remission of thy sins; and then both put their hands on the sick, even as is done when a brother is ordained and pray briefly for the sick member. Such an example we have of the Savior as we see in Mark 6:13 and 19:18. Brethren also who are not ordained may administer it in cases of necessity. I am well aware that some professors speak lightly and even vilify this ordinance because the Roman Church practice what they call, Extreme Unction, and sometimes even after they are dead. But let it be known that we have it not from Papal authority; We have learned it from the word of God, and and that shall stand though Heaven and earth passeth away. Under the Jewish ceremony the Priests were anointed with oil and under their theocracy kings were also anointed with oil; both orders, first, to show to themselves their noble station and high authority, and, secondly, signifying to their subjects the same, and the indispensible necessity of honoring and obeying them as Priests and Kings. Now the believers in Christ are represented in the Gospel as a Royal Priesthood—both dignities verged in one, Hence, let no follower of Christ think it beneath his or her dignity to have the Holy Anointing administered in case of sickness for the promise is, salvation, restoration and pardon. For the prayer of faith shall save the sick, because he obeys the Savior through faith, and He is the only one that can save. And the Lord shall raise him up—if stricken down with pain, overwhelmed in affliction, cast down with sorrow, the strength of the Lord will uphold him, and through his unwavering faith, obtain the victory over sin, death and the grave, through the merits of Jesus Christ the Lord. LEONARD FURRY.

THE DESIGN OF BAPTISM. (Concluded.)

BY ELD. GEO. WORST.

Many more circumstances might be referred to but let that suffice, in the month of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. We will refer you to one case which was not a natural one but a miracle wrought for the benefit of Peter and those with him, which you will find in the 10th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, the conversion of Cornelius and those of his house, who we learn received the Holy Spirit before baptism. It says nothing of the remissions of his sins, but we intend to be consistent for we believe it to be contrary to the nature of God to grant the Holy Spirit to any that were yet in their sins. Therefore from the nature of God he would not give the Holy Spirit, and from the nature of the Holy Spirit it would be impossible to dwell where sin is, so from this stand point we assert, that he had received the remission of sin before baptism, and to prove that his was not God's natural way of dealing with the children of men, needs only an examination of the circumstances pertaining to it. Peter receiving the charge he did from his Master, which was, go not into the way of the Gentiles or any city of the Samaritans enter ye not, but go only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and the vision of the sheet let down to him from heaven, filled with all manner of beasts and fowls of the air, and the voice, "arise, slay and eat," caused him to go with the messengers sent from Cornelius, and after he did go he would not likely have baptized him if it had not been for the demonstrations of the Holy Spirit which caused him to say, "who can forbid water that these should not be baptized seeing they have received the Holy Ghost as well as we." He did not say to him repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins. Furthermore we find that Peter had to answer to his brethren when he returned, and had to explain to them the nature of the circumstances attending his mission which satisfied them that the Gentiles had also a right to be numbered with the children of God. Paul, in writing to the Romans 6th chapter, says, "Ye were the servants of sin, but God be thanked ye have now obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you being then made free from sin ye have become the servants of righteousness." You see, after obedience, deliverance comes. God's storehouse is ever full, he is ready to pay, but his manner of doing is to pay when the work is accomplished. He has never promised to pay beforehand. If he should see proper to give any one the Holy Spirit before baptism, it will not benefit our case in the least, and we have no assurance of it in the word of God. He gave it to Cornelius for a special purpose, and the gospel does not point to any other case or the need of any other that any specialty should be used, therefore I would advise to follow strictly the prescribed plan laid down.

For the better understanding of the subject, we will ask, what is repentance? Let the apostle answer. He says repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Again, repentance from dead works to serve the living God. This shows a turning from, and a turning to. Repentance is simple and easily understood if we let the apostle explain it. We will now give you a case. Saul started from Jerosalem to Damascus to perform a work, in the gospel sense it would be a dead work, Jesus met him in the way, and said, "Saul, why perscentest thou me?" He repented from his rash act, that is, turned from his intended work and turned to the service of the living God. But there was a time intervened between the time he turned from and turned to, and in that time, he was relieved of his sins and the way he was relieved he will tell you if you turn to the 22d chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. Now to illustrate, when we repent of our sins we turn, we stop committing sin, we see that it is not well pleasing in the sight of God. Then the evil spirit will have nothing to do, He will leave, he will not stay where he cannot be engaged in doing something. We are now not committing any sin but look at the fearful catalogue of sins charged against us from the time we became accountable until now. Will it do merely to ask God to forgive us? If that will do, why need baptism? Why, says one, it is an outward sign of an inward purification. Cannot God see the heart? Who cares what man says, if God and I are reconciled. Whose business is it? "Be not deceived, evil communications corrupt good manners, awake to righteousness and sin not." Your sins will not be remitted until you have an application of the blood of Christ and He says whosoever doeth the will of my Father in Heaven the same is my brother and sister and mother. Paul says, "How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Know ye not that as many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death, therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death." Into what kind of death? Getting rid of the last dregs of pollution and that long list of crimes charged against us we go down into the water in the name of Jesus Christ and are buried beneath the wave leaving our load of sin there. The rest will come to walk in newness of life. What a beautiful figure of the ressurrection? As Christ was raised from the dead, so we also should walk in newness of life. Peter, perhaps for fear that man would take a wrong view, was very explicit in telling us that it was not to take away the filth of the flesh but the answer of a good conscience toward God by the ressurrection of Jesus Christ." If a few drops or a handful of water would have been used only, on such occasions, Peter would not have reminded us of the danger of misunderstanding the design of it.

Another beautiful figure we find in the children of Israel passing thro' the Red Sea. Before they came to the Red Sea they refused to work for the Egyptians, but were not out of danger of being taken back into slavery again until the sea closed over and drowned the Egyptians. Then the Israelites on this side of the Sea could sing the song of deliverance. Paul says, "they were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. Another illustration may be made to show that in the act of baptism our sins are remitted. Col. 2: 11, 12 we read, "In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead. Circumcision means cutting around. Then, by repentance we cut around our sins or deaden them, or crucify them. Then after they are crucified they must be buried before we get them out of our way. Buried with Christ in water baptism, and leave the dead body in the water, but the new man which is created in righteousness unto good works, will be resurrected to walk in newness of life. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever would believe in him should not perish but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.

That Son suffered death upon the cross for the redemption of the human family. While upon the cross, he said, "it is finished," the work of redemption is accomplished. Paul to the Hebrews, says, "a testament is of force after men are dead, otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." While in life, he was engaged in writing out, or making known the Will, and when it was finished, he sealed it with his blood, and made it effective even to the remitting of our sins by a compliance therewith, having faith in its merits. If it were not for the emmissaries of satan, it would not be a hard matter to enlighten the minds of men and turn their feet into the ways of piety and truth, but the law of the Lord is so contrary to the evil nature in man that satan's force, which is "Legion," gains the ascendency of and the power over us, so that we are ever ready to give heed to his devices rather than to the simple truth of the gospel. He has so wisely arranged his plans thro' his emmisaries, that you can be accommodated in any manner of worship and retain the disposition you was possessed with before conversion. This makes worship such an easy task in appearance that many bite at the bait to their utter condemnation. The motives of these emmisaries are many and various, some for the love of gold and some for honor, some for power, and some that they may gain a great name in the world, all under the name of religion. To accomplish their ends they set up their judgment against the plain testimony of Jesus and his holy apostles, setting at naught some of the ordinances laid down and substituting traditions of their own devices, which are foreign to the gospel, and enforcing them upon their followers, promising them salvation. Well did the Savior say, ye have made the word of God of no effect through your tradition, ye hypocrites how can you escape the damnation hell?

In conclusion, we would say, examine our remarks closely, and compare them with the general tenor of the gospel and act the part of wisdom, for your eternal destiny depends upon your strict observance of all the commandments and ordinances laid down in the gospel. The Savior says, "I am the way, the truth and the life and no man cometh to the Father but by me, and he that entereth not by the door the same is a thief and a robber." If we enter by the door, we will receive the remission of our sins and the Revelator John, says, "the door is open and no man can shut it." Although they may stand at the door with their weapons of eloquence trying to mystify the way, no man need be deceived in this enlightened land of ours, neither will there be excuse for us if we get deceived, for we all have access to, and the free use of the Gospel—can read it for ourselves and choose the way our father's trod. Peter, Paul, and many more who sealed the testimony of Jesus with their blood, are examples of faith for us to well consider what they endured having the hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

CHARITY.—A crust of bread given to the poor through motives of pure philanthropy, would, in the sight of God, outweigh and sink into insignificance even the charity of Peabody, if given from no other motive than to secure the praise and approval of men. —J. S. Flory.

A LEVELING SYSTEM.

"Every vally shall be filled up and the hills shall be made low, the crooked shall be made straight and the rough be made smoothe, and all flesh shall see the salvation of God."

Dear brethren and sisters, these lines which your unworthy brother is now penning is, intended for the good of all, therefore do not condemn them before you give them a serious consideration.

The Savior brought a light into the world to enlighten every man that cometh into the world, and his forerunner John (the Baptist). was sent to prepare or show the children of men how to prepare themselves, in order that they might see that light, and the "leveling system" above mentioned is the way to get to that light or see the salvation of God. If so, where is the scribe, where is the wise? Hath God not made foolishness the wisdom of this world? Why is this? Because they must come down to men of low estate, and like the Eunuch, must acknowledge, "How can I, except some man instruct me." They cannot see the Kingdom and salvation of God except they be born again. Now if the "leveling system" has brought us to that light and we continue to walk in the light, then are we his disciples indeed, and we shall know the truth and the truth shall make us free.

If we abide within the limits of this "leveling system," we will be a distinct and separate people from the world, so that everybody that sees us will know that we are the light of the world and the salt of the earth. Our light is not put under a bushel or under the bed, but on a candlestick so that all that are in the house can see it.

This is the confession that the Lord requires of us, that we should not be ashamed of our appearance or conduct when it agrees with the pattern laid down by the Scriptures, so that we can know each other and be known by the appearance, that the world may see the light and glorify our Father in Heaven. If we do this, we need no private signs as do the secret societies, but our appearance and conduct will show to all that we are the people of God. If the world wish to know our signs, let them go and search the Scriptures, and there they will find all that is necessary for the children of God to have.

Now dear brethren and sisters, please bear with your humble servant while he drops a few words concerning the different appearances that are so prevalent among us. O, let us get still closer together so that we can see eye to eye. Let us now keep in view, the "leveling system" while here on our pilgrimage. The things which Moses commanded the children of Israel was a shadow of that which was to come, and it was said to them that they, with their houses, men-servants, maid-servants, &c., were to keep the Sabbath holy. Let us try to make use of this knowledge, for if Jesus had brought them rest, he would not have spoken of another day. There is therefore a rest remaining for the people of God, and that rest will be obtained when we take the yoke of Jesus upon us and learn that meekness and lowliness of heart that was manifest in Him. If this be manifested in us, it is a good confession and must shine as a light to the world.

Now concerning the Sabbath that was foreshadowed in the Mosaiac dispensation, it did not only require from the heads of families to see that the Sabbath was kept holy, but they were made accountable for all that were about them.

We have considered the hull and now get at the kernal a little. Our commander tells us to walk in newness of life, and, will it do for us, as fathers and mothers, to keep that Sabbath or maintain that humility on our persons and forget to examine our houses or the adorning that is in them, or our children, that they are brought up in the way that the Lord would have them, or that our men and maid-servants be instructed in the ways of the Lord, and our animals that we use for our convenience, do we put anything about them for a show to the world, or to gratify our carnal desires? As I did not wish to be lengthy, I only touched the points of the subject, hoping that what I have said may be for our general good.

WINTER REFLECTIONS

Oh how drear! Stern Winter art thou here? Hast thou appeared and with thy chilling blasts put to flight the pretty plumed birds; driven into his hive the working bee and chilled to death my most favorite flowers? Thou hast come: thou didst not forget thy speedy return. Nevertheless, we must welcome thee. Thou hast found the weak inhabitants of a terrestrial globe with hearts colder than thou canst make them. Thy winds are cold and fierce. Without wood thou hast found the drunkard's widow, without bread his children. Oh! God pity the drunkard's widow, pity his children who cry every day for bread.

O man, art not thou ashamed? Hast thou departed so far from the Sun of Righteousness that shineth in the meridian of glory, that those genial rays will never reach you? O ponder. Think seriously. Look about you. Look upon a frozen world. Compare your own heart with the mundane sphere on which you reside. Is all well? If not, will you continue to live a life that is little better than death? Are you so near frozen that the warm heart of Jesus pressed to thine own, will not melt thee? Great God! Infinite Mercy! ye concerned hosts of Heaven, ye, all ye sympathizing inhabitants of the earth, may we not command thy sympathy, all thy love? Has Jesus lived for naught? Has He died in vain? Cannot we, by viewing the past, make amends for the present? Are we not to hope better things for the future? May we not pray God to proffer mercy and stay vengeance yet awhile, since there are many that can aid in the great work of reformation? Can aid? Yes, but will you? Will you work for Jesus? Will you live for Him who died you? Will you reflect upon the past? Or are your sins so great that you would blush to look, aye, to think of them? Can it be that you have held the world's pride and licentiousness as your idol and God? O foul sin, what hast thou done for the past? Wilt thou do even more for the future? Friendly alien, we love thee too well to have you hug any longer, the vain delusion that drove you from redeeming love. Fall into the ranks of Jesus while proffered mercy bleeds for you. The Heavenly host is concerned for you. You have resisted long, too long. Your service is needed, though previously spent for satan—spent for the enemy of all good, the enemy of all true joy. Be no longer alarmed at your sins i e that they are too numerous to get rid of. Christ's greatest pleasure is in saving the worst of sinners, though they have greived Him.

HOME.

There is not another term in our language so sweet to all as home. Heaven, to the saint is as dear a word, as sweet a thought, but when the sinner thinks of home or hears the term, though Heaven, or the thought of Heaven may be to him a dread, yet even home, O, how sweet to him. To the truly moral but unregenerate, home is even yet a name sweeter, lovelier and freer of remorse than any other. To the sainted pilgrim, the thought of home, the enjoyment of what is here called home, or to hear of home, becomes dear because only that they savor a little of that which they call their home in Heaven. Because they bring to the soul a faint foretaste of their "house not made with hands eternal in the Heavens." Because the word home is heard, and no sooner is heard the echo in the sky, home, HOME. I have said that even the sinner, and the moral unregenerate, love the thought of home, but why is it that you love that home so dear, which so soon will deny you entertainment, which will toss you away as if an odious adhesion, or a venominous infection; and who can claim exemption from this doom? Then after this merciless and sure banishment which is rapidly and daily nearing us, then where will we take up our abode and call it home? Then oh, for a home in Heaven. It is true, here we enjoy home, but then we shall need a more enduring substance. It is equally true, now our joy and happiness is at home, and our sweetest memories are at home; but then shall we want "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," then death shall have no sting—the grave shall have no victory, "but thanks be to God who give us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

FAITH.—Living faith hath life through the Holy Spirit which is the gift of God. Such faith hath footmarks—it is the incentive to "the prayer of faith" so he that asketh of God doth so without doubt. He that obeyeth, "obeyeth from the heart." He that warreth with sin and Satan, fighteth the "fight of faith." Would we live the life of a Christian, we must "live by faith." Would we please God it must be "by faith." Faith maketh a man "alive to God," he liveth a life consecrated to the service of God. His mouth speaketh of the goodness of God—his tongue praiseth the Lord of life and glory,—his eyes look upon "His handiwork" with radiance and adoration. His hands open when the cause of the Lord calls for help—his feet are ready to walk the "narrow way," yea, that one that is "justified by faith" is a stranger and pilgrim seeking a better country like father Abraham who "walked by faith,"—that promised land is on ahead, the faithful shall inherit it. Those who "live by faith" shall conquer through faith, and when they "die by faith" shall seize the substance, and the things "not seen as yet" shall then appear in all their beauty, grandeur and immensity.—J. S. Flory.

BEAUTIFUL DEATH.—A girl of thirteen years, was dying. Lifting her eyes toward the ceiling, she said, softly, "Lift me higher." Her parents raised her with the pillow, but she faintly said, "No, not that but there," again looking earnestly toward Heaven, whither her happy soul flew a few moments later. On her grave stone these words are carved:—Jane B.—aged 13, "Lifted up higher." How beautiful is death when connected with such scenes.—Eliza Warner.

How seldom can we see all things working together for good. But it is better discipline to believe it.—M'Duff.

THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS.

And the desire of all nations shall come. Haggai. 2: 7.

The chapter preceding our text, is mainly spent in reproving the negligence of the Jews, who, being discouraged from time to time, had delayed rebuilding the temple, and in the meantime, employed their care and cost in building and adorning their own houses; but at last being persuaded to set about the work, they met with this discouragement, that such was the poverty of the time that the second structure would no way correspond with the magnificence and splendor of the first. In Solomon's days the nation was wealthy, now it was poor; so that there would be no proportion between the second and the first. To this discouragement, the prophet applies the relief, that whatever was wanting in external pomp and glory should be more than recompensed by the presence of Jesus Christ in this second temple, for "the desire of all nations," said he, shall come into it; which, by the way, may give us this useful lesson, that the presence of Jesus Christ gives a more real and excellent glory to places of worship than any external beauty whatsoever we can bestow upon them. Our eyes like the disciples, are apt to be dazzled with the goodly stones of the temple, and in the meantime to neglect and overlook that which gives it the greatest honor and beauty.

In these words we have both a description of Christ and an index pointing at the time of his incarnation H· is called "the desire of all nations," and the time of his coming in the flesh is plainly intimated to be whilst the second temple should be standing, here then we find just cause to bemoan the blindness that is happened to the Jews, who, owning the truth of this prophecy, and not able to deny the destruction of the second temple many hundred years since, yet will not be persuaded to acknowledge the incarnation of the true Messiah.

Christ was to come into the world in the time of the second temple, and after grevious concussions and revolutions which were to make way for his coming; for so the prophet here speaks, "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come," to which the apostle alludes. Heb. 12: 26, applying this prophecy to Jesus Christ, here called "the desire of all nations."

The desires of God's people in all kingdoms, and among all nations of the earth, are, and shall be drawn out and fixed upon the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ is not given to any one nation in the world, but intended to be God's salvation to the ends of the earth. "There is neither Greek nor Jew, Barbarian or Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all." Col. 3: 11. In the explication of this point two things must inquired into; why Christ is called the desire of all nations, and upon what account the people of God, in all nations, desire him.

1st. That God the Father has appointed him as a remedy for the sins and miseries of his people in all parts of the world. If God had not appointed him for, he could not be desired by all nations, and herein the grace of God admirably shines forth in the freeness of it, that even the most barbarous nations are not excluded from the benefits of redemption by Christ. This is what the apostle admires, that Christ should be 'preached unto the Gentiles." 1 Tim. 3: 16. To a people who seemed to be lost in the darkness of idolatry. "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession," Psa. 2: 8.

2nd. Christ, the desire of all nations, plainly indicates the sufficiency there is in him to supply the wants of the whole world. As the sun in the heavens suffices all nations for light and influence, so does the Son of righteousness suffice for the redemption, justification, sanctification and salvation of the people of God all over the world. "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." Isa. 45: 22.

3rd. It implies the reality of Godliness, it shows that religion is no fancy, as the atheistical world would pursuade us; for this appears in the uniform effects of it upon the hearts of all men, in all nations of the world that are truly religious, all their desires, like so many needles touched by one and the same loadstone, move towards Jesus Christ. Were it possible for the people of God of all nations, kindred and languages in the world to meet in one place, and there compare the desires and workings of their hearts, as face answers to face in a glass, so would their desires after Christ answer to each other. All hearts work after him in the same manner; what one says, all say. These are my troubles and burdens, these my wants and miseries, these my desires and fears, one and the same spirit works in all believers throughout the world, which could never be if religion were but a fancy as some call it.

Christ, the desire of all nations, implies the vast extent of his kingdom in the world out of every nation under heaven some shall be brought to Christ, and to heaven by him; and though the number of God's people, compared with the multitudes of the ungodly in all nations, be but a remnant, a little flock, and in that comparative sense there are few that shall be saved; yet considered absolutely and in themselves, they are a vast multitude which no man can number. "Many shall come from the east and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." In order to this, the gospel like the sun in the heavens encircles the world. It arose in the east and takes its course towards the western world; rising by degrees upon the remote idolatrous nations of the earth; out of all which a number is to be saved. Even "Ethiopia shall stretch out her hands unto God." Psa. 68: 31. And this consideration should move us to pray earnestly for the poor heathen who yet sit in darkness and the shadow of death. There is yet hope for them, we are to inquire upon what account Christ becomes the desire of all nations; yet he is the desire of all the people of God dispersed and scattered among those nations. When God touches their hearts with the sense of sin and misery, Christ, and none other, is desirable and necessary in the eyes of such persons. They are all by nature under condemnation, Rom. 5: 16, 18, under the curse of the law; against which nothing is found in heaven or earth able to relieve their consciences but the atoning blood, the pure and perfect righteousness of the Lord Jesus, and hence it is that Christ becomes so desirable in the eyes of poor sinners all the world over, when the light of the gospel shall shine upon the nations, they shall see that by reason of sin they are all barred out of heaven, and none but Christ can open an entrance for them into the kingdom of God; that no man cometh to the Father but by him, John 14: 6. Neither is there any name under heaven given among men whereby they must be saved, but the name of Christ, Acts 4: 12, and this will make the Lord Jesus incomparably desirable in their eyes.

Universlism in a Nutshell.

"I am a Universalist," said G. K. boastingly, "and you orthodox are not fair in saying that our system is inconsistent with reason." "I will prove the irrationality of your system," said his friend. "You believe that Christ died to save all men?" "Yes, I do." "And you don't believe there is a hell?" "No, I do not." "You don't believe there is any punishment hereafter?" "No, I do not; men are punished for their sins in this life." "Well, now let us put your 'rational system' together. It amounts to just this, that Christ the Savior died to save all men from nothing at all. Not from hell, because according to you, there is none. Not from punishment in the future state of being, for he receives his whole punishment in this life. Yours is the absurd spectacle of ropes and life preservers thrown, at an immense expense to a man who is on dry land, and in no danger of being drowned."

GOOD COUNSEL.

Guard, my child, thy tongue,
That it speak no wrong;
Let no evil word pass o'er it;
Set the watch of truth before it,
That it speak no wrong!
Guard, my child, thy tongue.

Guard, my child, thine eyes;
Prying is not wise:
Let them look on what is right;
From all evil turn their sight:
Prying is not wise.
Guard, my child, thine eyes.

Guard, my child, thine ear,
Wicked words will sear.
Let no evil word come in
That may cause the soul to sin;
Wicked words will sear.
Guard, my child, thine ear.

Ear, and eye, and tongue,
Guard while thou art young;
For, alas! these busy three
Can unruly members be.
Guard while thou art young,
Ear, and eye, and tongue!

ROSA'S THEFT.

BY WILLIAM TELL.

Rosa's work was all done; her lessons all learned, and she had gone out on the steps of her father's large house to play, when a rather coarse looking boy came along carrying something under his arm which proved to be a cage containing a bird of very beautiful plumage. When he saw Rosa he stopped, and Rosa looking up at him said:

"What kind of a bird is that?"

"A golden pheasant," replied the boy, setting the cage down where Rosa could see it. She exclaimed, clapping her hands:

"O, my, how beautiful! I wish it was mine!"

The boy stepped nearer, and said in almost a whisper:

"You may have it for two dollars. The cage cost more than that."

"O, dear I haven't got any money," replied Rosa.

"Perhaps you can borrow it," said the boy, looking disappointed.

"I don't think I can, papa and mamma have both gone out, but they never give me more than my weekly allowance anyway. O, perhaps Jane will lend it to me," said Rosa, suddenly brightening up. "She has got some, I know. Will you wait till I run and see her?"

"Yes," said the boy, sitting down, "if you will be quick."

Rosa ran into the kitchen but Jane was not there, so running up stairs, she hunted through all the rooms, and then down stairs again till she came to the sitting room, where she saw her uncle George's pocket-book lying on the stand half open, with a lot of bills in plain sight. For a moment Rosa stood still looking at it, and trembling all over.

"O," she thought, "If uncle George were only here. He'd lend it to me, I know."

A secret voice seemed to whisper in her ear, "Take it Rosa, Take it! uncle George will never miss it."

Then stepping up to the stand Rosa pulled out a two dollar bill. After this she stole down stairs looking in every direction to see if any one was watching her.

"Did you get it," asked the boy, as Rosa came out on the steps.

"Yes," said Rosa, looking guilty and handing him the bill. She then took the bird and went into the house. When all of a sudden a great difficulty arose in her mind, and she thought:

"O! what shall I tell mamma if she asks where I got the bird." Then a thought suddenly struck her, "I'll say Laura Jay gave it to me."

Laura Jay was a little girl who often came to see Rosa, and who lived ten or twelve blocks away.

When the family came home they were very much pleased with the bird, and of course believed Rosa's story, but when uncle George came Rosa's heart seemed to stand still.

But uncle George quickly walked to the stand; picked up his pocket book, put it in his pocket and remarked: "How careless of me, I thought some one had picked my pocket."

That night Rosa could not say her prayers. For she knew she had stolen, and then told a wilful lie to conceal it, so she went to bed and left them half finished.

But she could not master courage enough to tell how foolish she had been, and so kept the guilty secret, which weighed so heavily on her mind and heart.

In the afternoon she again took the bird out on the steps to let it get fresh air, where a small crowd of little children soon gathered around to gaze at its beautiful plumage, when a policeman sauntering by stopped.

"Ho," said he, "This is the very bird, let's look at this cage little girl."

Whereupon he lifted the cage and found the name of Ida Wilder written upon the bottom.

"Yes, this is it, here is her name. I say, little girl, where did you get this?"

"I bought it of a boy for two dollars," said Rosa, trembling, and very much scared.

"You bought it for two dollars, yes a very likely story, such a bird and cage as that for two dollars, you stole it," and the policeman took hold of her.

Just then uncle George came out.

"What's this fuss here, policeman, let that little girl alone."

"This bird has been stolen," said the officer of the law, "and it's my business to see about it."

And Rosa was obliged to explain all, which she did with many tears and much tribulation. She was not taken to jail, but her punishment was great, and thus uncle George thought, and so did her mamma for that night she helped Rosa to say her prayers, and gave her words of counsel which were never forgotten.

And let all my young readers take warning from Rosa's experience, and never steal to gratify a passing desire, and never tell a lie for it is sure to become a burden to your conscience, even if it is not found out, you are left in shame.—Bright Side.

EFFIE'S CONFESSION.

"Oh, Laura, just see what I've done!"

Laura stopped running, and came back to the place where Effie was standing and looking at a flower border.

"What's the matter? What have you been doing?" said she.

"Why I've broken one of these lovely lilies that father wanted to keep till Aunt Marion comes. As I was running past here, I went too near this side of the path, and my dress caught and broke the stem. Just look at it."

"Oh, what a pity! What will your father say? Do you think he'll scold you?"

"I don't know. What shall I do about it?"

Laura thought a moment, and then said—

"I'll tell you! I've got a capital plan. Lets go and let Towser out of the house, and then come back here, and he will be sure to follow us, and then we can say he broke it."

"Why, Laura Graham, that would be telling a dreadful falsehood, and I won't do it."

"But what will you say if your father asks who did it?"

Effie looked at Laura and then at the broken lily. A bright thought seemed to strike her, and she said, "I'm going right to father to tell him just how it was," and she walked off very fast, as if she were afraid her courage would give out, while Laura followed slowly.

They found Mr. Neville in the library, reading the newspaper, and Effie walked up to him and stood by his chair, waiting for him to look up.

Presently he said, "Well Effie?"

Then she told him all about it, without trying to excuse herself. Her father waited for her to finish; then drawing her to him and kissing her, told her he had seen the whole from a window, and watched to see what she would do, and as she had been truthful, and come and confessed her fault, he would gladly forgive her.—Bright Side

MY EXPERIENCE.

Brother Pilgrim:—Many days have come and gone since my mind and pen, as co workers together, have been engaged in speaking to you, through this medium, fearing most of all that when I come to you, as my custom is, I may not bring food for the soul, and again, that I may be found burdensome to our editors, and an intruder in the columns of the PILGRIM, by filling space that might be devoted to a better purpose. But "as there is a time for all things under the sun," I will try my hand to the work, and if I have not the wherewith to polish my ideas as I go, just take them as you find them.

I will now proceed, and say with one of old, "Few and evil have been my days." There is nothing that I can gather from my experience since I have enlisted in the army, that would be of interest, but my mind runs back to my early childhood days. The recollection of those days come to me as days not long passed. I very well remember the first prayer I offered to our Heavenly Father. As a general thing, those who pray to God very young have been taught so by Christian parents. Whether this be right or nor I have my ideas. We cannot read in the Bible of children being commanded to pray. I think they should be taught the principles of Christianity as soon as they become able to know good from evil. To learn the little one to pray before they have the knowledge they should have, seems to me like plucking fruit from its mother stem before it becomes ripe. There can be no positive benefit derived from it. Before I attained to this knowledge, I was under the protecting care of Christian parents. They knew my wants, and my desires were to them. As regards a spiritual life I knew nothing. As to temporal things, my parents supplied my wants. And as soon as I became spiritual minded, then I must look to a higher or spiritual power. As in temporal things I had a resource, my earthly parents, so in spiritual things, I must look to my Heavenly Father. His spirit striving with me, made me feel the need of prayer, and the first striving, I am made to believe, had the effect of leading me to commune with God in secret. This was my first prayer. I continued my secret devotions for a number of years. This brought me to the studying of the Scriptures.

The Bible was my favorite book. No other book was half so interesting. I have oftimes thought, how pure my thoughts were then. There was no unbelief, no doubts, no thoughts to disturb my mind, but by and by a change came, time was wafting me down,—a little wrong here and a little there. I began to get uneasy. I needed something and prayed earnestly. I now began to learn that my parents could not supply all my wants. I was growing more and spiritual minded, but my wants still unsupplied led me to seek God in prayer. The effect of prayer bid me read the Word, and it led me to become a child of God by adoption, by complying with the requirements of the atonement. As my parents became dead to me, so far as my spiritual wants were concerned, I began to stray from my Father's house, I was now led to return and be adopted into the family of God, Now began the warfare, such as mortals have to fight. I, having set my feet "homeward bound," the devil no doubt saw that I was making for the "straight and narrow way," and commanded a halt, and began to reason and promise me many things upon which I could feast. As I was not so easily taken into his service in this, he strikes at my weaker points. As my nature was to be very backward, (and is not very much changed yet) he tries his hand here, and to my knowledge I never having heard the Brethren explain how applicants were received, this caused a stand still, I not having energy sufficient to make my wants known, thinking probably it would be my duty to explain what I believed and how I felt, &c., and my courage failed me. O, if I just had known that the church was of such a lovely nature, and how welcome I would have been, my heart would have been given wholly to the Lord much sooner than it was. Here ministers may gather an item that may be improved. These things caused me much trouble, but still I trusted in my Heavenly Father, I prayed and I wept, but ah, how soon was I changed, for at a certain time, as I was returning from prayer, where I was holding sweet communion with God, my mind changed, but not as I hear sometimes at prayer-meetings, where the forgiveness of sins and peace to the burdened soul is found, but I was changed from a praying boy to an infidel. O, sad to tell, I who never doubted in the existence of a God, a Savior and a future life, was now a disbeliever. Doubts began to arise in my mind whether there was any such thing as a hereafter, O, how gloomy was my soul! The twelve months under which I labored in this condition, all seemed darkness and gloom beyond the tomb. There was no light to my benighted mind, if I then should have taken a leap into the dark. I prayed, but all such prayers were not such as cometh from the heart. What to do I knew not. I attended preaching, but there was not the place for me. There I heard of death, O, must I die and go where no living never come, in the cold and silent tomb? But I believe in all this there was a hand unseen to me. The spirit of God left the house, but it was not swept and garnished. The devil seeing the house vacated, enters in for the spoil. For a little while, God is dethroned, angels weep, devils laugh, and I am made to tremble. I wept, I mourned. As a mother weeps for her little babe that is lost to her, so I mourned my condition. Thank God my Redeemer was living. He knew the eruptions of my heart. He pitied my condition. As the angry waves of the ocean arise with foaming madness, when the hissing wind, with fury disturbs its peace, so was I comparatively speaking. I was hurled into the ocean of despair, where the angry waves lashed my frail bark, but there was a power which once calmed the turbid water away back in the land of Judah, that spoke peace to my troubled soul; "peace be still," was heard in an hour of great need. I reasoned with myself of the creation of all things, and came to the conclusion that there must be a creative power. Who created God? and thus I began to speculate, when there was "a still small voice" seemed to whisper in my ear, "And who created that principle of unbelief in thy heart?" Get thee hence satan, thou savorest not the things that be of God, but of men. Old satan, I never as much as thought of him while in the arms of his power. He could infuse into my heart the thot's of a disbelief in God, but not once did he let me reason whether there was a devil. Just as soon as I thought of my mind being changed to unbelief without any reason on my part, that soon was my eyes opened so that I might behold the devil in his masked form.

This ends my experience prior to my conversion, and here it shall end with you. But I could speak of the time when my sins were pardoned, or rather, when I began to feel the burden of sin removed, and effects of religion. I might fill many more sheets, but will not now, at some other time you will hear from

ONE WHO KNOWS.

Dear Pilgrim:—I was at church to day and heard an interesting sermon delivered by Eld. John Wise. No doubt, his words touched many hearts with a sense of the duty they owe to God. As we sang the last stanza of the 923d hymn in the Brethren's Hymnbook, a sweet dream came to mind which I dreamed last night of my sister, who died a year ago. I dreamed I saw her, shook hands with her, kissed her and conversed with her. It was a happy meeting after being separated one year. But I soon awoke and found that it was only a dream. Oh reader if the dream of meeting death-divided friends is sweet, what must the reality of it be. Let us take fresh courage and lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith. Let us put on the whole armor of God that we may overcome all evil. Then soon we will reach that happy shore where death-divided friends at last shall meet to part no more. There will be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying nor pain, but God will wipe away all tears from their eyes. There the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. Then will we realize the following precious promises as they are only unto him that overcometh.

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2:7. "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. 2:11. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna and will give him a white stone and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." Rev. 2:17. "And he that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star." Rev. 2:26. "He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment and I will not blot out his name from the Book of Life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before His angels." Rev. 3:5. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God and he shall go no more out and and I will write upon him the name of my God and the name of the city of my God which is new Jerusalem which cometh down out of Heaven from my God and will write upon him my new name." Rev. 3:12 "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father on His throne." Rev. 3:21. These, brethren and sisters, are glorious promises, and should be a happy consolation to every regenerated soul. HANNAH E. SMITH.

Tenmile Village. Pa.

ALMENA, MICH., FEB. 1873.

Dear Editors, brethen and sisters in the Lord:—Inasmuch as we love to read the church news, and hear from the different arms of the church how the Lord is prospering them, we have thought it would not be out of place to drop you a few lines informing you of our progression in our Masters cause We have had a series of meetings here in our school house, conducted by our elder and worthy brother F. P. Loehr and brother M. T. Baer, and assisted for a few evenings, by brother Peter Wrightsman, M. D. of South Bend Indiania.

Our meeting was largely attended and with good order, and all seemed to be edified. After the close of the ten o' clock services on Sunday we went to the water, and five were inducted through the holy rite of baptism into the Church, and one week from that time, after the close of our meetings, six more souls manifested to the world their humble intentions, by being baptized in to Christ. May the good Lord send more abundantly the convincing Spirit, until all may see the error of their way and accept of God's mercy before it is everlastingly too late, is my prayer. Yours as ever in the Lord.

J. J. SOLOMON.

Dear Editors:—Through the kind mercies of God I am permitted for the first time, to write to you. I am requested by two of our German brethren who cannot write in the English, that I should write for you to send them the PILGRIM. This is the first year that we have had the pleasure of reading your paper, and we are well pleased with it and hope it will keep close to the gospel, and hold forth nothing that is not in harmony with it, so that the world can have no opportunity of disputing its name as not being a pilgrim.

I will now inform the brethren and sisters that there are but few members here in the East end of the Oks Church. Old Abraham Ritchy is our speaker in this end. He is beloved by all who know him. Brethren and sisters wishing to come West, will here find a very good country, and also railroad conveniences, one crossing at Lovington and one at Sullivan, the county seat, 9 miles south of this place. If any come to Lovington and wish to stop with brethren, enquire for Samuel Early or Daniel Oaks who live near the station, and will gladly accommodate.

SAD INTELLIGENCE.

Just rec'd by letter, sad intelligence from Franklin county Va., announcing the death of our much esteemed brother, Elder Abraham Naff, after a short and painful attack of pneumonia.

In the death of brother Naff, the community has lost one of its most valuable citizens: as a husband, he was all that can be expressed; as a father, kind and affectionate, as well as a faithful guardian of the best interest of his children: as a neighbor, he was obliging; as a member of the church, an ornament; as a minister, zealous and efficient; as a counsellor, wise and prudent; in a word, he will be very much missed in every department of the society in which he moved, especially, as a faithful watchman over the principles of Apostolical Christianity, and the preservation of peace and harmony in the churches within his reach. So highly were his services valued that whenever a committee was wanting to settle any matter, he was almost invariably one of the number. What I say, I speak knowingly as it very frequently happened that he and myself labored together, having traveled together many thousand miles. The last time we were together we served as a committee, and at that time were appointed to attend in another important case, and agreed to meet on the 31st of Jan., but the day previous I rec'd a communication from him, informing me of his illness, and consequent inability to serve, and requested me to inform him of the result of the labor assigned us. Accordingly, I wrote on the evening of Feb. 2nd., which, as I am informed, reached his residence on the 4th., but alas! too late, as he had fallen asleep in death, a few hours before it arrived. So it only remains for us to be resigned, to "be still and know that the Lord is God." Our prayer is, that his mantle may fall on another, that the vacancy occasioned by his death may be filled, and that blessings such as they may need, may be bountifully dealt out to the dear sister, and the entire household, is the sincere prayer of their brother and friend. B. F. MOOMAW.

WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT?

When we look around us and view the fields of nature, only half explored, we behold wonders upon wonders, and the query flashes upon our mind, 'What hath God wrought.' Notwithstanding, nature in its primeval state, presented mysteries as a book unpaged, yet, like the glory of Solomon, half was untold, until made manifest through the agencies of man.

Were the fathers, who have been sleeping for centuries, to return and drop in among the modern achievements of man, they would scarcely know in what world they had appeared. They seem truly wonderful to us who have been brought up among them, but how much more wonderful would it be, if all were to flash upon our minds at once. Though the achievements and inventions of men are legion, yet there are a few that have taken the lead through the civilized world. Among these first in importance we name that of Printing. What this has done for the world, cannot be estimated. Truly, "what hath God wrought." By it, under the blessing of God, the Gospel has been preached in every tongue, and every clime has been made to sing the songs of redeeming love. It is the great civilizing power of the world and to have it removed would leave a blank which nothing else could fill.

Another great advance in the sciences, is the invention of the power and utility of steam. Fulton was looked upon as a visionary enthusiast, but his invention has become the bone and sinew of the manufacturing world, and to-day, the rushing iron-horse owes his speed to his inventive genius, and thousands upon thousands of engines throughout the length and breadth of the land, speak forth his praise. But the great modern wonder is that of domesticating the fiery element electricity, and making it subservient to our daily wants. The honor of this great achievement partly belongs to the late Sam'l F. B. Morse, to whom Emperors, Kings and Queens afterwards, delighted to pay homage. But what makes our subject the more interesting is the fact that it was the first message or dispatch that was ever transmitted by Telegraph, which occurred at 8. 45 A. M. on the 24th of May, 1844. Mr. Morse was a man of undaunted courage and, had learned to rough his way through, but when he presented his Telegraph to Congress, requesting an appropriation of $30.000 to enable him to give it a fair test it was rec'd with such bad grace that he became discouraged, and was making arrangements to leave, when a daughter of Hon. Henry Elisworth brought him the happy intelligence that his bill had passed. The tidings so overjoyed him that he took the lady by the hand and declared that she should send over the wires, the first message, as her reward, and that message was, "What hath God wrought?" The message strikes us as being altogether appropriate and reflects great credit to the one who suggested it. It throws the honor just where it belongs, while Prof. Morse was the instrument, God was the author. "And without him was there not anything made." These are the three great inventions of the world and their spheres of usefulness are so blended together that neither one seems to be independent of the other. By Electricity, the messages are sent to the Press. By the Press they are multiplied by the hundreds, thousands and millions, and through the agency of steam, they are distributed over the world, so that we seem equally indebted to Laurentius, Fulton and Moore for the great privileges and conveniences which we now enjoy, for which we should thank God, because he wrought them all.

ODD NUMBERS of the PILGRIM will be supplied to such as will distribute them and solicit subscribers. We have a good supply of some numbers and will gladly send them to such as may apply. If our brethren and sisters generally would accept this offer, our list might be largely increased, as there are many in the church who would subscribe for it if they could once see a copy of it, and not only in the church, but there are many others who would gladly read it, had they an opportunity. A few weeks ago, a copy of the PILGRIM was accidentally left lay in the seat of a Railway car, the conductor took it home with him and his wife was so pleased with it that it was sent for immediately. Brethren and sisters, the PILGRIM is getting to be a great missionary, and by the blessing of God and your aid, we hope to be able to introduce the humble doctrines of Jesus into the homes of many that have not learned them aright.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL & PILGRIM sent together for only $3.50. The Journal alone costs $3.00. It is decidedly the most important Journal published, free from all fiction and love stories, and can with safety, be introduced into our families and will in all cases, make favorable improvements on the minds of those who read it. Those who have paid us $1.50 for the PILGRIM, by sending us $2.00 more can have the Journal. Specimen copies for examination, will be sent by enclosing a 3 cent stamp to pay postage.

CORRECTION.

In PILGRIM No. 4, under the caption "Another wail from the camp;" second paragraph, you have the type to say the quotation "M. E." made from "Mourner's Bench Religion Examined," reads "wishes his right hand may be palsied" &c., when it should be "wishes his sight may be palsied" as that is the way "M. E." uses it, therefore I was justifiable in saying "there is no such quotation in the tract.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS:

The ever-increasing circulation of this excellent monthly proves its continued adaptation to popular desires and needs. Indeed when we think into how many homes it penetrates every month, we must consider it as one of the educators as well as entertainers of the public mind, for its vast popularity has been won by no appeal to stupid prejudices or depraved tastes.—Boston Globe.

The character which this Magazine possesses for variety, enterprise, artistic wealth and literary culture that has kept pace with, if it has not led the time, should cause its conductors to regard it with justifiable complacency. It also entitles them to a great claim upon the public gratitude. The Magazine has done good and not evil all the days of his life.—Brooklyn Eagle.

POETRY.

FOR THE NIGHT COMETH.

Behold beloved, the night cometh swiftly!
The night wherein never man can work—
With its chilling blasts, and its gloomy shadows
Where the ghosts of neglected duties lurk.

Now, while the daylight is gleaming o'er us,
Earnestly labor while yet we may,
Then when the night-shades gather around us
Gladly we'll put our toils away.

Day is given for labor unceasing,
Night is the season for peaceful rest.
Haste! for the hours are surely passing,
The sun is reaching toward the West.

Shrink not away, but cheerfully labor
Each at the task which the Master gave,
Though the hours be never so long and weary,
Still let the heart be strong and brave.

What though the task may seem too mighty
For hands so feeble and frail and small—
The Lord who gave it hath still a purpose,
Which worketh ever with us, through all.

Even though failure seem all our portion,
Lift up the eyes with weeping dim!—
Haply the lesson He meant to teach us
Was just—our weakness apart from Him

Ours is the duty of cheerfully striving;
His, to judge if the work shall be blest.
Labor, then while the daylight lingers,
Leaving, in meekness, to Him the rest.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

CHRIST THE RISEN SAVIOR.

"Now is Christ risen from the dead."

We learn from this text that some of the Corinthians had denied the doctrine of a resurrection, probably explaining away the apostolical language, as figurative, and, as only meaning conversion or that change which took place in the world by the introduction of Christianity.

In confuting this error the apostle called their attention to the resurrection of Christ, as an undeniable fact and showed that the denial of a resurrection was equivalent to saying that Christ was not risen, and thus tended to subvert the foundation of Christianity and to destroy the hope and comfort of believers. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen, and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain, yea and if we are found false witnesses of God, and if Christ be not raised ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." All the joy and supports of Christians are inseparably connected with future and eternal felicity, without the hope of which they would have nothing to counterbalance their peculiar trials and conflicts. If Christ were not risen, believers were yet in their sins and even the martyrs had perished. But were not the primitive Christians converted from idols to serve the living God? Did they not repent and do works meet for repentance? Were they not exemplary in the practice of all good works, and did they not meet death for the sake of a good conscience toward God? How, then could they yet be in their sins, as none of these things could atone for their transgressions, and if Christ were not risen, no effectual atonement had been made. They must therefore, have still continued under condemnation and been exposed to the curse of the law which they had broken—a most conclusive proof that the death of Christ was a satisfaction for sin, and, that none can be saved who are not interested in, that atonement he then adds the words, "Now is Christ risen from the dead."

Though true Christians have a witness in themselves which in general satisfies their minds as to the certainty of the things they have believed, yet in seasons of temptation, an acquaintance with the evidence of Christianity would tend greatly to their establishment. And in these times of infidelity all who would continue earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints should be able to give a reason for their hope to every inquirer or objector both to defend themselves from the charge of enthusiasm, and to preserve young persons, perhaps their own children, from the fatal contagion. It is therefore greatly to be lamented, that pious persons are in general, so little furnished with this sort of knowledge of which they might make such important use. It is commonly said that the New Testament is built upon the foundation of the Old, and must stand or fall along with it, and there is a truth in this sentiment, though it be somewhat diverse in its nature from that which is supposed. Our Lord and His apostles have so frequently quoted the Old Testament and almost every part of it as the Scripture, the word of God, the oracles of God and the language of the Holy Ghost, that their credit must be connected with the divine inspiration of the books thus attested by them. We are able to prove that the Canon of the Old Testament in those days, differed very little, if at all, from that which we have at present, yet our Lord referring to different parts of it, says, thus it is written and thus it must be the Scriptures can not be broken, the Scriptures must needs be fulfilled. And the apostles say: "All Scripture is given by inspiration from God." "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." This consideration completely establishes the whole of the Old Testament as a divine revelation with all those who duly reverence the words of Christ and His apostles. In all other respects, the New Testament stands on its own basis and is proved to be the Word of God by distinct evidence. It affords unspeakably more support to the Old Testament than it receives from it, and the resurrection of Christ alone is sufficient to authenticate the whole sacred volume.

The restoration of the dead body to life, is no more difficult with God than the production of life at first. The Divine operation is in both respects alike, incomprehensible.

As we continually observe life to be communicated in a certain way, we call that the law of nature, though we understand not our own meaning and cannot explain how causes produce their effects. But dead bodies do not return to life in the ordinary course of human affairs, we therefore suppose some laws of nature to the contrary, the violation of which in any particular instance, we should call a miracle, that is a divine interposition and operation, to produce an effect above or contrary to the general energy of second causes. Some persons, indeed pretend that this is impossible, but why should it be thought incredible with you that God should raise the dead? The power is no greater than that by which thousands of infants receive new life every day. And who will now say that God cannot or shall not exert his power in any way which they have never before? If a sufficient reason can be assigned for His interposition and the fact be indisputably proven, it becomes as credible as other well attested events, many of which do not coincide with our expectations or ideas of probability. A PILGRIM.

WHOSE CHILDREN ARE YOU?

Whosoever doth not righteousness is not of God. 1st John, 3 10.

When we look abroad upon the earth and behold the many wonders connected with it, we are led to confess that there is a Supreme Being worthy of our best praises, and when we come to our own bodies and contemplate their structure and the dependence of each member, their sympathy one for another, we are led to say, how wonderful! what wisdom! While viewing these we should ask ourselves, who formed all these parts and gave them their office, and are they filling the sphere for which they were created? The answer must come, God formed all.

But a question of importance presents itself, whose children are we, or whose child am I? Here we call a number of children together and ask them, one will answer, "I am J. C's child," another, "I am J. J.'s son," another, "I do not know," and a fourth, "I am Mr. B's by adoption." So we might go on questioning children, and what a variety of answers. Some will tell us promptly what family they belong to and some do not know. Why is it? Because it frequently happens that children's parents die when they are young and they never hear their names, but mark the sadness of that child when it says, "I do not know." How lonesome it feels when it sees other children enjoying the comforts of a pleasant home. Now the inference is drawn from the three classes of answers from the children, that but one of them will stand the test before God, and that is of adoption. There are many who claim to be the children of God but are not; like the Ethiopian that went to Jerusalem to worship, Acts 8:27, when properly instructed, he changed and then knowing his duty, he did it. And Saul, who claimed to be a child of God, believing he was doing God's service but had yet to be adopted. While some say, "I do not know." they appear to be in doubt, saying: "I have done this, and that, but there is a part I do not fully understand. I would willingly do all if I could only believe it necessary, and my teachers ought to know for they make it their study. They are good men and if they can get to Heaven without it I can too," yet they hardly know whose children they are. But the child of adoption says, "I must obey, for when I was adopted the law was made known to me. I have a copy and can read it and hear from it from day to day; and the law says: "If ye love me keep my commandments." A claim to the inheritance is gained by obedience and the child of adoption will ever affirm its right to do a thing because its father did it. Why does it pray? Because it was taught it. How does it know its prayers are answered? Because it asks according to the law. If it disobeys God, it asks forgiveness, and then if it has been offended it forgives, and knows it is forgiven because the word says so. Then the natural conclusion is, that we are all the children of some one by service, and in whose service are we? Now this can be answered by the word of God. It will stand when Heaven and earth pass away, and the children of God are the children of light, and light will shine in darkness. Again, children do not like to hear their parents evil spoken of, they all want honorable parents. Now which is the greater honor, to be God's child or a child of the devil? We are one or the other—can not be both. Let the solemn question come to us all, that in the judgment there will be but two classes of children, and I am to be of one class, and where will my lot fall, on the left or right? If on the left, I will be a child of the devil. Sad thought! What kind of a home has he for me? A lake of fire is his home, and I with him must dwell. What is the order of his house? Weeping and gnashing of teeth, dying and never dead, gloomy prison. Dreadful thought! But on the right hand, "Come ye blessed inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." What is the order of that house? We are made heirs and joint heirs with Christ, we will sit around our Father's table and Christ will serve, go in and out and find pasture, drink of the pure waters and unite with the Heavenly hosts to praise God. Dear reader, let you be old or young, whose child are you? Remember one thing, this question will be answered some day and we are writing the answer while we live, and as death finds us so will the judgment. Then if you have not done so, set thy house in order, for this night thy soul may be required of thee. And if we never meet on earth may we be the children of God, and meet in that happy Home prepared for us above, where sickness and sorrow, pain and death are strangers.

MY NEW HOUSE.

I married a wife at the age of twenty-three, settled down on a tolerable good farm and was what might be called a well to do farmer. For a number of years we, (wife and I) fought manfully with the ups and downs that attend this very honorable vocation until finally, we could see the day of success dawning, and our labors crowned with a reward.

All this time there seemed to be but one object worthy of our labor, and that was, to get a clear title for our home and the necessary conveniences. The house, though tolerable good when we commenced farming, was begioning to be insuffic ent for home comforts and it seemed to me, if we just had a good comfortable house, the end would be gained and we would be contented.—The last payment had been made two years before, and by good luck and management we had gathered enough to make a commencement in building, and I presented the matter to my wife.

"Sarah, we have now been laboring for a long time, and have at last succeeded in getting our farm paid for and have some left; had we not better build a house, as this one is very uncomfortable and is not worth repairing anymore?

"You are right, husband, our house is not as comfortable as it might be and I have wished that we could have a better one, but of late my mind has been fixed upon another subject. It is now twenty-three years since we commenced keeping house. All this time God has dealt graciously with us in granting us health and in giving us this comfortable home, but how ungrateful we have been. We are now growing old and our bodies, like our house, are failing and soon may fall. Do you not think it is high time that we commence building houses for us that will not fail, but be eternal in the Heavens? To have a new house would be very desirable, but it will not secure us from death, and oh how dreadful the thought of dying unprepared—without that spiritual house as a refuge for the soul. I have made up my mind, since God has spared me thus long, to put off the important work no longer, but now, seek the Kingdom, and I hope you will do the same and then we can have the promise that "all things will be added," and if among those, we get a new house, so much the more can we prove thankful."

I often sat and heard the powerful preaching of the word, unmoved, but this one stroke came as a thunderbolt and I was slain. The awful truth was presented to me in all its fullness, and I determined that no opportunities should be lost until the Kingdom was secured. Together we sought the mercy-seat—covenanted with God to live faithful until death, by being buried with Christ in baptism.

We lived to realize the promised "added blessings," and to have a new house, but the partner of my trials and joys is gone—her earthly house failed and is now lying beneath the green turf of the valley, but the new house was ready, and her spirit has entered its eternal abode. Your unworthy servant is still abiding his time, but this earthly house is rapidly failing, and soon I expect to be unclothed that I may be clothed upon with that spiritual house which is eternal in the Heavens. I feel that I am nearing the stream, but death has lost all its terrors. Dear PILGRIM, sweet messenger of salvation, may God spread your wings and help you go forth to warn sinners of their lost condition and persuade them to build for themselves houses that that will abide beyond the grave.

A BROTHER.

LOVING OUR ENEMIES.

But I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use and persecute you.—Matt. 5; 44.

This is the language of our Savior, and there is probably no command given us that is more in opposition to the human nature than the one contained in the above text. We are so apt to return evil for evil, forgetting as it were the command of our blessed Redeemer, "Love your enemies." Oh, that this were carried out to its full extent! Would to God we had more of that forgiving spirit within us that was exercised by our Savior, who when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not, and looked down even from the cross and prayed to His Heavenly Father to forgive them for they knew not what they did. Such was the spirit of Christ.

Oh! how benevolent and kind
How mild, how ready to forgive;
Be this the temper of our mind,
And these the rules by which we live.

Paul says if a man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His. Brethren and sisters, let us examine ourselves, and see whether we are in possession of that spirit that is mild and ready to forgive. If we are, we will readily forgive those who misuse us, we will not hold a feeling of revenge against any one, but will have a feeling of love toward all, not only our brethren and sisters, but also those that are without. We will let our light shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Father in Heaven. For if we love them which love us what reward have we, and if we salute our brethren only, what do we more than others, do not even the publicans the same? Let us try and be the children of our Father which is in Heaven, who maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. If we have not a loving disposition toward our enemies, we have not the spirit of Christ within us, consequently we are not His children, for the Word says so. That Word that will stand either for or against us at a coming day; that Word that is quick and powerful and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

Brethren and sisters, let us take the admonition of the Apostle Paul, who says, "Be kindly affectionate one to another, with brotherly love," again, "Recompense to no man evil for evil, and as much as lieth in you live peaceably with all men, not avenging yourselves but rather give place unto wrath, for it is written, vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Let us endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, that we may with propriety say, "Forgive us our tresspasses as we forgive those who tresspass against us." May the Lord be our helper and we His faithful servants.

AN EXTRACT.

Brethren, I wish to give an extract from the report of an editor upon a sermon preached in our county town by a Methodist minister from the following text:

"And they all with one consent began to make excuse."—St. Luke, 14: 18.

The editor says: "In the evening he discussed—in the second branch of his subject—the effect and excuses offered for rejecting religion. Among others he mentioned the following: The mysteries of the Bible; the number of denominations; inconsistency of professors of religion: fear of failure of success; fear of failure to be able to hold out faithfully to the end; don't feel like it. In reference to the member of orthodox denominations, he said that he recognized them all as integral, component parts of the Kingdom of God, each performing its proper office and function, that a single Church would result in ecclesiastical despotism and spiritual tyranny, that this experiment was tried for a thousand years, but that God would never again entrust the reins of spiritual power to the hands of any spiritual Church: that he spoke the sentiments of his heart when he said, that rather than have the Methodist or any other church reign supreme in this country, he would have the summit of every mountain in this beloved State, the crater of a blazing volcano, with its sides covered with molten running lava, and every stream from its source to the sea filled with blood instead of pure, limpid sparkling water."

It seems that the speaker recognists all orthodox denominations as integral, component parts in the Kingdom of God, each performing its proper office and function. Now friendly reader, out of the hundreds of different Churches that we are told are in existence, what part can each one perform and perform its proper office and function? The speaker thinks if God would trust the reigns of spiritual power to a single Church it would result in ecclesiastical despotism and spiritual tyranny. What! the church founded on the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, run into despotism and spiritual tyranny, when Christ has promised to be with his people always even to the end of the world! Where is men's faith, when they say they are honest and say they would rather see every mountain in this State break forth with volcano eruptions and every stream filled with blood rather than see the Church that Christ has established here on earth reign supreme?

"And they all with one consent began to make excuse." Are there not excuses that will not be worth any more at the great and coming day than the excuses those persons made that were bidden? The one had bought a piece of ground, the other had bought oxen and the third had married a wife and therefore neither of them could come, but in this age of the world it has become popular for people to believe if they only have religion it don't make any difference whether they follow Christ or not, all will be well, when Christ says, "I am the way." This just reminds me of a conversation that took place between a professor and non-professor not long ago. They met on the road to Staunton, our County seat, and commenced talking about religion. The non-professor asked the other some questions and he would say, "what of that, if a man only has religion." There was a county fair near town that day where the professor was going, the other was also going to the town, but not to the fair, and before they parted he asked the professor if he thought it was right to go to the fair where they were horse racing, &c. He answered, he did not know that it was exactly right but what of that if a person had religion. S. J. GARBER.

THE DRUNKARD'S TREE.

SIMPLICITY.

Simplicity of manner and plainness of speech has ever been peculiar characteristics of the "Brethren." Some one writing for the PILGRIM, No. 8, '73, seems to have forgotten whom he is, or entirely lost this peculiar feature. On "Wintor Reflections," he first addresses the winter, then God, then man, then Great God! Infinite Mercy! Concerned hosts of Heaven, all ye sympathizing inhabitants of the earth, &c., in the same sentance. Then he talks to pride and licentiousness as familiar friends. The article is full of words and phrases the meaning of which is not very plain to his readers, and doubtless not to himself. "Terrestrial Globe," —why not say the earth,—"Mundane sphere"—why not say the world? Who are the "concerned hosts of Heaven?" Why "pray God to proffer mercy and stay vengeance" when he says "proffered mercy" bleeds for you? There are many things in this article that we do not understand, and we greatly wish that we too were learned and had the abilty to see all these bright visions set forth therein.

DRIFTING AWAY.

With proud, exultant step we may tread to the very verge of the future in the journey of life; but we can go no farther; there it becomes lost to us in the realities of the present; we are left to look forward to a new future, while behind us lies the past, from which we are rapidly drifting. Often our hearts grow weary, our eye-lids wet with tears, as we pause to look back at the receding shore, and through the dim distance, seem to catch glimpses of the forms we loved in other days—earthly friends, whose hands we were wont to clasp in fond, familiar greeting, but whom now we meet no more as in the old en time, for on the restless sea of change our barks have drifted far apart. Far more vividly than all, come to us visions of the old homestead, from whose portals we went forth with brave hearts, to try the realities of the world which lay beyond the precincts of our own quiet home. Half impatiently we had looked forward to the time when, no longer bound by the restraints of home, we should take our place upon the stage of active life; but often the path has proved a thorny one, our feet have grown weary, and with yearning hearts we have longed for the quiet joys from which we have forever drifted.

No more do we gather an unbroken circle beneath the shelter of the old home tree; loved ones grown weary with life's burdens, and borne on the river of death, have drifted away to the unknown shore. It is sometimes sad to feel that we are receding from all that our hearts hold dear. From our childhood years with their innocent joys—from the sacred ties of home and early association—but more sad, more bitter than all, comes to us the knowledge that on the current of worldly pleasure we are floating from the love of our Heavenly Father: that with thoughtless feet we are treading each day nearer the grave, unmindful of what may lie beyond its dark borders.

There are moments when our better natures are awakened within us—when we turn heart-sick and weary from the vanities of the world, and pause to contemplate whither the stream of life is carrying us. Then it is that we feel the need of a stronger arm than earth can give to lean upon; and could we but throw off the shackles of sin, and with renewed energy and earnest purpose press forward in the path of duty—aiming to fulfill the mission of which Our Savior has left an example in His Holy word—our lives would be purer, our influence more ennobling, and we far more happy: that when our eyes grow dim with age, and we await our summons home, there may come to us no regret for the joys from which we have drifted away, but rather golden gleams of the home to which we are hastening.—Rural New Yorker.

RELIGION—That religion that goes in golden slippers, never takes its way through the "straight gate" along the thorny road which Heaven-bound pilgrims travel. That religion that glows only when the sun shines dies out when the storm rages and the clouds thicken. But that religion that has Jesus crucified in it, goes even barefooted over the burning sands of the "desert" and is a light and lamp to the feet of the "meek and humble" pilgrim while pressing onward through storms and tempests to the promised land—the land of eternal rest.—J. S. Flory.

EDUCATION, like money, is a power for good or evil. A man of good education is a man of large talents, and places him under large responsibilities, but it should be remembered that ignorance will not lessen our responsibilities, as the improvement of our talents implies a duty, and that duty can only be fully discharged by surrounding ourselves with such circumstances as will enable us to successfully meet the great responsibilities of life and improve our talent to the full extent. There was a man of three scores told us, the other day, that he would now give $1,000 if he had a good English education. He was a minister, and lacked education. Young reader, think of this. Perseverance and application with a little money now, will give you what thousands would when you are old.—Wasp.

THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS.

Concluded.

Inference 1st. Is Christ the desire of all nations? How vile a sin is it then in any nation, upon whom the light of the gospel has shone, to reject Jesus Christ? These say, "depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways," Job. 21: 14. They thrust away his worship, government and servants from amongst them, and in effect say, "we will not have this man to reign over us." Luke 19: 14. Thus did the Jews, they put away Christ from among them, and thereby judged themselves unworthy of eternal life. Acts 13: 46. This is at once a fearful sin and a dreadful sign, how soon did vengeance overtake them like the overthrow of Sodom; O let it be for a warning to all nations to the end of the world. He would have gathered the children of Israel under his wings as a hen doth her brood, even when the Roman eagle was hovering over them, but they would not; therefore their houses were made unto them desolate, their city and temple made an heap.

2nd. If Jesus Christ be the desire of all nations, how incomparably happy must that nation be that enjoys Christ in the power and purity of his Gospel ordinances; if Christ under a veil made Canaan a glorious land. Dan. 11: 41. What a glorious place must that nation be which beholds him with open face in the bright sunshine of the Gospel. O, my country, know thy happiness and the day of thy visitation, what others desired, thou enjoyest; provoke not the Lord Jesus to depart from thee by corrupting his worship, longing after idolatry, abusing his messengers and oppressing his people, lest his soul depart from thee.

3rd. If Christ be the desire of all nations, examine whether he be the desire of your soul in particular, else you shall have no benefit by him. Are your desires after Christ true spiritual desires? Reflect, I beseech you, upon the frame and temper of your heart. Can you say of your desires as Peter did of his love to Christ? Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I desire thee. Try your desires by the following tests: Has Christ the supreme place in your desires? Do you deem all things but dross in comparison of the excellency of Jesus Christ your Lord? Do your desires after Christ lead you to effort, to use all the means of accomplishing what you desire? You say you desire Christ, but what will you do to obtain your desire? If you seek him carefully and incessantly in all the ways of duty; if you will strive in prayer, labor to believe, cut off right hands and pluck out right eyes, that is, be willing to part with the most profitable and pleasant ways of sin that you may enjoy Christ, the desire of your souls, then are your desires right, are your desires after him permanent, or only a sudden fit which goes off again without effect? If your desires after Christ abide in your heart, if your longings are at all times for him, then are your desires right. Christ always dwells in the desires of his people; they can feel him in their desires when they cannot discern him in their love or delight. Do your desires after Christ spring from a deep sense of your need of him? Has conviction opened your eyes to see your misery, to feel your burdens, and to make you sensible that your remedy lies only in the Lord Jesus? Then are your desires right, bread and water are made necessary and desirable by hunger and thirst, by these things try the truth of your desires after Christ.

4th. Do you, upon serious trial, find in you such desires after Christ as above described? O, bless the Lord for that day wherein Christ the desire of all nations, became the desire of your souls, and for your comfort know that you are blessed in this, that your eyes have been opened to see both the want and worth of Christ. Had not Christ applied his precious eye salve to the eyes of your mind, you would never have desired him; you would have said, "he hath no form nor comeliness, and when we shall see him there is no beauty that we should desire him," Isa. 53: 2, or as they to the spouse, "what is thy beloved more than another beloved?" Sol. Song, 5: 9. O blessed souls enlightened of the Lord to see those things that are hid from them that perish; you are blessed in that your desires after Christ are a sure evidence that the desire of Christ is toward you, we may say of desires as it is said of love, we desire him because he first desired us; you are blessed in that your desires shall surely be satisfied. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled." Matt. 5: 6. "The desire of the righteous shall be granted." Prov. 10: 24. You are blessed, in that God hath guided your desires to make the best choice that ever was made, whilst the desires of others are eagerly set upon gaining riches, pleasure and honor in the world, any good will satisfy some men's happy soul, if none but Christ can satisfy thee. Psa. 4: 6. You are blessed, in that there is a work of grace certainly wrought upon thy soul; and these very desires after Christ are a part thereof, blessed in that these desires after him keep thy soul active and working after him continually in the way of duty. One thing have I desired, that will I seek after. Psa. 27: 4, Desire will be a continual spring to diligence and industry in the way of duty; the desire of the end quickeneth to the use of means. Others may fall asleep and cast off duty, but it will be hard for those to do so whose souls burn with desire after Christ, you are also blessed, in that your desires after Christ will make death much the sweeter and easier to you. "I desire to be dissolved and to be with Christ, which is far better." Phil. 1: 23. When a christian was once asked whether he was willing to die, he returned this answer; Let him be unwilling to die, who is unwilling to go to Christ.

5th. Let me exhort and persuade all to make Jesus Christ the desire and choice of their souls. This is the main scope of the Gospel. Every creature naturally desires its own preservation, do not you desire the preservation of your precious and immortal souls? If you do, then make Christ your desire and choice. Do not your souls earnestly desire the bodies they live in? How tender are they of them, how careful to provide for them, though they pay a dear rent for those tenements they live in. And is not union with Christ infinitely more desirable than the union of soul and body? O, covet union with him; then shall your souls be happy when your bodies drop from them at death, 2 Cor. 5: 1–3. How do the men of this world desire the enjoyments of it? They rise early, sit up late, &c., and all this for very vanity. Shall a worldling do more for earth than you for heaven? Shall the creature be so earnestly desired and Christ neglected? What do all your desires in this world benefit you if you go Christless? Suppose you had the desire of your hearts in these things, how long should you have comfort in them if you have not Christ. Blessed be God for Jesus Christ, the desire of all nations.

The highest average salary to clergymen in New York are paid in the Protestant Episcopal Church, two ministers receiving $12,000 each.

Miss Sarah E. Smiley, the Quakeress preacher, has recently received the ordinance of baptism, and formally declared herself no longer a Quaker, but a member of the church universal.

From the Advent Christian Times we learn that a Jonas Wendell of Edenboro, Pa., has written a work, entitled "Present Truth," on prophecy and chronology, setting forth the end of this age, this present year, 1873.

Spurgeon the London Baptist Divine has so far recovered from his late illness that he has commenced preaching again, and is expected to visit Brooklyn soon, as the guest of Dr. Talmage, and will probably preach for him in the Tabernacle.

FROM RUSSIA.—Recent dispatches from Berlin, in Germany, state that there is an extensive emigration movement to America, among the German colonists in Russia. One hundred and twenty families are said to have left Beresina alone. We must however not place too much confidence in these dispatches.—Herald of Truth.

Beecher says that religion that isn't "mixed" with politics and the business of life, is worth about as much as yeast that is never mixed with flour.

Yes, as far as dollars and cents are concerned, Beecher knows how to make things pay. With religion on one shoulder and politics on the other we have a nice mixture and no doubt it will raise.

Benjamin Franklin, a self-made man, Editor-in-chief of the American Christian Review, Cincinnati, now sixty-two years of age, has served as an evangelist thirty-seven years, and as an editor thirty-five years. He is the most noted evangelist among the Disciples, having visited more States, travelled more extensively, and held more protracted meetings, than any other man among this people. He has baptized with his own hands over 8,000 people.

The following is a clip from the Christian Standard: With the word of the Lord before me, no person is born again until he is baptized; no person is converted until he is baptized; no person is regenerated until he is baptized. A person may be baptized and not be born again, but born again he cannot be without being baptized. A person may be baptized and not be converted, but converted he cannot be without being baptized. A person may be baptized and not be regenerated, but regenerated he can not be without being baptized.

The Missionary Herald states that the field of Christian missions in what is distinctively known as the heathen world embraces a population of 700,000,000. Of these seven-eighths are attached to one or other of the three great systems—Mohammedanism, Hindooism and Buddhism. The first as yet relatively untouched, still pushes its proselytism in Africa and everywhere stands as a barrier to the Christian faith. In India even university graduates celebrate the degraded rites of Hindooism. And Buddhism, with its 300,000,000 votaries, has hardly been touched by Christian influences. The Herald draws the conclusion that there is a great deal of hard work to be done yet.

LITTLE GEORGIE.

BY J. R. RAFF.

Death comes alike to all. The young, the little boys and girls, tripping lightly and gayly along the flowered pathway of life, are as suddenly called away as the old, those who have ripened through long years for the grave. The little ones with their blooming cheeks and their bright eyes are the flowers of earth. They gladden all around them with their presence. The glad sunshine of their young faces, and the merry gushing of their young hearts enliven the less cheerful journey of the old fathers and mothers.

But some flowers die in the early Spring-time, before they have had time to fully open their petals to the bright sunshine and mature into the ripe fruit.

So little boys and girls are often called by our good Heavenly Father from the happy home circle on earth, and the fond embrace of their parents, to bloom forever in the beautiful land that Jesus makes glad by His presence. I am going to tell you a short story of little George W———, who died thus early but who went away happy because he loved Jesus, and knew that Jesus loved him.

Georgie was just seven years old, a bright, happy little boy who loved everybody and whom everybody loved. He had a good papa and mamma who taught him to pray and to be good. He had a pretty home in a pretty town, in a pretty part of the country. His father and mother loved everything beautiful and good. Their beautiful little cottage was surrounded with beautiful flowers and vines and evergreen trees, that made it look like a paradise. The rooms of the cottage were hung with beautiful pictures, and good and beautiful books were on the tables and in the book-cases.

We used to pass this beautiful home every day, where Georgie and his brothers and sisters lived so happily with their parents. We knew the little boys and girls of this home were happy and good, because they had such good parents, and had so much beauty and goodness around them; and boys and girls that always have things good and beautiful about them, grow good and beautiful themselves.

But grief and sorrow came suddenly and unexpectedly to the happy hearts of this pretty home, and although several years have passed, when the recollection of the hour comes back, there also comes back the quick pang of pain and sorrow.

One evening just at the hour when the fading beams of the sun were kissing the flowers around the cottage, good-night, little Georgie, taking his whip in his hand, and bidding his mamma an hour's good-by started to meet his papa at the store. On his way he had to cross the railroad, and just as he passed it the puffing engine rolled by dragging heavily a long train of cars. Little Georgie turned around to look at the rattling train. He struck at the wheels with his whip. The lash became entangled, and little Georgie in his endeavor to tear it loose, stumbled and fell under the car, and several wheels, carrying their heavy load, passed over him. His tender limbs were almost severed from his body. A strong man seeing him fall, leaped from the train and picked up the poor crushed form and carrying it home laid it tenderly on the sofa, where the smiles of the pictures and the breath of the sweet flowers might be above him and around him as his young life ebbed away.

Then strong men and tender women gathered in and all mingled their tears with the sorrow-stricken hearts that bowed around the dying boy. But the bravest heart there was little Georgie. Not a tear dimmed his eye, not a groan escaped him, and as drop by drop his young blood flowed from his mutilated form, he sang snatches of his Sunday school songs. Conscious that he was dying he told his dear papa and mamma that he was going home. He called for his young playmates and with smiling face he bid them good-by, telling them of his love for them and his dear parents and brothers and sisters, but that he loved Jesus too, and would soon be with him. Just before he died he asked his papa to lay him once more in his little bed, but he could not be moved; and just six hours after the heavy wheels had passed over his tender form his young spirit took its flight.

We bowed our head with the rest in the sorrowing crowd. We assisted to dress the poor crushed boy and to fold his little hands across his breast. It was a painful death for one so young and promising, and yet it was happy. It was young and innocent childhood passing away before the taint of earth had fastened upon it, yet it was childhood passing away almost as if with the wisdom of age.

Such was the life and death of little Georgie. We laid him away where the flowers bloom and the green trees wave their branches over his grave; in a spot where the beauty of the home where he lived and died might flourish where his crushed body sleeps. I hope all the little boys and girls who read this story may aim to be as good as little Georgie was and to love the dear Savior as he did. And we hope the parents of the same little boys and girls may aim to make the homes of their dear children as happy as Georgie's parents made his.—Christian Standard.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

EASTON, W. VA., February 14, 1873.

Dear Pilgrim:—You still make your weekly visits to my home, away up here among the hills and valleys of West Va. I know I would miss you greatly were you to "pass me by" in going to and fro over the world. The work our periodicals have to do is immense, they are silent teachers, and penetrate where the living voice of God's ministers cannot, or do not go. And too, that which is read in the circle at home is often more effective than many sermons. The mind is more at rest, and seems to be withdrawn from the excitements and amusements of the outside world. The "mind itself a kingdom is," wherein is fought the battle of life and the victory gained over the adversary.

Since last I took up my pen to write to you, death has been walking up and down through our land, knocking at almost every door. Our little circle was ruthlessly invaded and one of the fairest and best was called to "spirit life." Calmly and fearlessly she went down to the Jordan of death for her hope was in Jesus, an anchor to bear her above the chilling waves. Life was bright before her, and the radiance from the golden future shed its light around her pathway. But God's ways are not our ways—He saw not as we see—with a glance of his omniscient eye He scanned the plane, and seeing the evil to come, said come up higher, thy life work is done. Sad sorrowing hearts find their only comfort now in looking beyond the brightness of the stars, beyond the dimness of the earth, to the Celestial City where the white-robed angels dwell. On earth we have the melancholy satisfaction of going where raised mounds and hallowed inscriptions tell of the loved dead. Ah! How blessed the righteous when he dies." It is the "never-forever" that wrings the heart with agony, never here—forever there. Life at the longest, can't be long, and ere many years roll away, the angel Azrael will come for us, and bear us away from care and toil. May we too be able to say as did our dear one, —"Don't you see the Father and Jesus are with me"—then why need we fear to cross over.

"Snow-white hands are folded," for their work is done—the record is closed—the golden bowl is broken, the silver cord is loosed, the pitcher is broken at the fountain and the wheel at the cistern, and the light that never was on sea or land, the light of divine love, glorified the face of the dead.

Let us then live that when our summons comes we can draw our robes around us, like one who lies down to pleasant dreams. We know that our loss is her gain, but it is hard, Oh! so hard to say "Thy will be done," and bow in meek submission to His will. We know that He who is the resurrection and the life will help in every trouble. Therefore let us leave all to Him, knowing He doeth all things well.

In the one hope, L. H. M.

TIPTON, CEDAR CO IOWA, February 18th, '73.

Dear Pilgrim:—I will pen a few lines for the brethren in the ministry upon the charge given by the Savior to His servants, "Occupy till I come." As every one has received at least one talent to put the same to usury, or make use of the same in such a way as to accumulate an increase by his talent, and consequently every one that is a faithful servant will be diligently engaged in meditating often in what way and manner he may make the best use of his talents, so that he can know his labor is profitable and not hid in a napkin, no matter what the napkin be, "convenience," "afterwhile," "some other time," or anything else. Now I do not want my brethren to understand me to charge any one of not making any use of his talents, but I wish to be understood in the language of the Savior, "Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel," and also in the language of St. Paul, "Preach the word in season and out of season," &c.

I have noticed, very often, in some districts, four, five and more laboring brethren, sitting at the stand the same time, where one or two are sufficient for to conduct a meeting and to preach the Word there, and some of these brethren may not make use of their calling but a few times in a year. Others again we notice who are laboring faithfully in the Master's cause, are also embarressed with "convenience," &c., for often we hear that such met with the brethren in large congregations, where they have large meeting-houses, churches organized for many years, and plenty of able brethren in the ministry, although there may be there at the same time, six, eight or more able speakers together to attend the preaching for the day. Now there are newly organized churches in their infancy, and quite young and weak, even suffering for the want of help where such could find the very place to find labor desired, and where the talents of such would be crowned with the very desired fruit of their labor, when like here in Cedar Co., Iowa, the calls come from so many places repeatedly, "Come preach for us, come and give us a meeting," where many are inquiring for the good old way to walk therein.

A very large territory is open here for laborers, as they are few in number here, and we can only hold meetings at some places every eight weeks and at some four weeks, and at some places from where the calls are repeated, not at all, consequently some will at last wander astray and will follow such teaching which will finally lead them to destruction and be lost. Therefore brethren now could make the best use of their talents here, and in such a way where their labors would be profitable, and perhaps more so than if they would even go to the far East or West, North or South, among Pagans, heathens or Gentiles.

I see there are calls for laborers from many places, and I think not any without a good cause, but perhaps not many places where such a fair prospect is open, and where laborers are more needed than here. Our Church is in a good and prosperous condition, the Lord has done great things for us during the last two years. We number about 50 members, considerably scattered, and the way is open for brethren to come and settle down with us, where they will find a large field to labor in. Land is very fertile, and all improved, generally good buildings, timber and water plenty, and can be bought as cheap or cheaper than any one can go into new land and make the necessary improvements.

Your brother in love.

SAMUEL MUSSELMAN.

Dear Pilgrim: The health and prosperity of this arm of the Church at present is pretty good, with a little exception. We had seven accessions this fall, one of the seven, Samantha Collins living in Lockport, tells us the way she came to know the Brethren. One day she was at the house of a proprietor of a Paper Mill in the village, and saw a part of a book lying on a stand. She asked to read it. The lady gave it to her and said it came there among the rags brought on the Canal boat which they had bought. When she read it she found it was a part of a book written by Elder Peter Nead of Dayton, Ohio, known as "Nead's Theology." In that work she found a people who obeyed the Gospel in its primitive purity, and that was the church she had been seeking for, for the space of seven years. She said she believed there was a church that did obey the commandments of Christ all this seven years seeking, but knew not where to find it until she found part of Nead's Theology. From that time on she sought the Church, and as the writer was passing through that vicinity and preached in the town in which she lived, he became acquainted with her and she requested the whole book. He gave it to her, and she read it and gave it to her neighbor, a Lutheran lady, and at our Communion in September, both of them came the distance of fifteen miles and were baptized. Sister Collins above named, was a member of the Baptist Church. She said at one time she called upon her minister to give an explanation of the 13th chapter of John. His response was, "if my feet are dirty, I wash my own feet." She said to him, "you are a pretty minister, you profess to preach the whole Gospel to us, and inasmuch as you make light of this chapter you make light of your Savior, &c."

How remarkably strange sometimes things occur. In the case above the book was thought to be entirely useless, sold by somebody in rags, was separated and laid aside and pronounced worth nothing. But in it there was a message (though secreted in rags), a message that directed the soul to the Church of God. I believe that God had a hand in this matter, and that He has a great work for her to do, and our prayer is, that sister Collins, with all others, may be bright and shining lights in the Church.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

Dear Pilgrim:—As you request Church news, I thought to write a few lines for your columns that may be of some interest to those that read it. We appointed a meeting on the 10th of December, for brethren Jacob Berkey and Jesse Calvert, but the latter failed to come, yet we had five very interesting meetings, and a good feeling was manifested among the people.

On Sunday following, being the 19th, brethren Jesse Calvert, David Hostettler and Isaac Berkey came to us unexpectedly. We appointed an evening meeting at our school-house, on Monday at sister Hannah Baumgardner's house, and in the evening at the school-house, had a large congregation. The teacher and neighbors were much interested, and all were willing to stop the school for the week. On Thursday the 23d was very cold, and snowed all day, we baptized three persons, the ice being nearly two feet thick, which took much labor to cut through, but the brethren were willing to labor to get poor souls in the fold of Christ. On Sunday the 26th, one more, a motherless daughter, was added to the church by baptism, while many more were almost persuaded to be Christians, and others contemplate uniting with the Church soon. May the prayers of the Church go up to God in their behalf that they may not put it off until it is too late. The Lord reward those brethren for their labor, and that the word spoken by them may be as bread cast upon the waters that may be gathered not many days hence.

Editors of the Pilgrim:—I had not seen a number of your paper for a long time, until lately I was at Bro. J. H. Flora's where a meeting was held. He was endeavoring to make up a club for the PILGRIM, and seeing that the paper had improved much, it induced me to try it for the present year. A few days since I received the PILGRIM and Almanac, and am much pleased with them. I have read the PILGRIM and it contains many good lessons. It, like many other things, is condemned by many, (brethren not excepted), upon these grounds, they say, all that is written is nothing more than men's opinions. Admitted; so is preaching mens opinions, but always when we hear or read religious conversation we should not condemn it until we have examined the Word of God, and if it does not harmonize with that, then we can truly say that it is only doctrines of men.

Dear brethren, when you write, let your pen be governed by the spirit of the Gospel, that we contend for no doctrine save that which was once delivered to the saints, but strive to keep in view the landmarks that our ancient fathers have set. So we hope the PILGRIM will visit us weekly and bring us interesting items that cannot be condemned by the words of eternal Truth. Let us prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good, is the prayer of your unworthy servant.

JEREMIAH BARNHART.

Retreat, Va.

Editors Pilgrim:—We desire to contribute our mite of church news to the brethren through the PILGRIM, by stating that through an invitation, Elder H. D. Davy came to us on the 25th of January, and on the evening of that day and the next morning, (Sunday), preached two sermons at the Rowland Meeting-house, near Canton, brethren Conrad Caylor, W. Murray, Noah Longenecker and Aaron Shively also being present and taking part in the exercises. On Sunday evening we repaired to the Center Meeting house, and continued to meet day and evening until Tuesday evening, brother John Clement also coming to us. We had very good meetings, a full house and good attention. We earnestly pray that the good seed sown may not all have been sown in vain, but that some may have fallen upon good ground, spring up and bring fruit unto eternal life, some thirty, some sixty and some a hundred fold. Yours in love,

B. B. BOLLINGER.

Dear Editors:—Perhaps a few words from this part of the world would interest you. The first topic is "the weather." Our winter has been an unusually fine one. We had some hard frosts, but light freezes. I saw ice about a quarter of an inch once or twice this winter and that was cold for our ever fine climate. We have green vegetables the year round, such as turnips, radishes, lettuce and onions. Almond trees blossomed some time ago and the peach trees are almost out.

Our growing grain looks promising and every available spot of land is being sown with the expectation of reaping a bountiful harvest. Farmers say, we have had sufficient rains to insure a crop even if we should get no more, but our rainy season continues up to May, though generally no very heavy showers in the Spring months, they are only occasional.

CARRIE P. FOSTER.

Dear Pilgrim:—On the first Sunday of the present month, (Feb.,) the brethren of the Brownsville Church, Washington Co., Md., commenced a meeting, and continued for some six days. The ministering brethren present were Brown and Gibbons of the Bush Creek Congregation, Frederick Co. Md., and Daniel Wolf of Washington Co. Md.

Part of the time the roads were in bad condition for travel, yet there was pretty good attendance by the people of the community, and good attention paid to the preaching, and although there were none added to the church, I am sure good impressions were made on many who attended, and the prospects are that some will yet declare on the Lord's side, and will say, that they started to think about their souls best interest at this meeting. The Church was built up by the efforts then made to extend the Redeemer's Kingdom.

The subject of this notice was an amiable, intelligent girl, and though full of life and mirth, her amusements and enjoyments were of such a nature that her parents, and those with whom she was surrounded, were led to conclude that she had not yet crossed the line of accountability. She died of Consumption. May the Lord comfort the stricken parents, brothers and little sisters, and help them and us all to remember the solemn words of the wise man that were used on the occasion, "Rejoice, O, young man, but know thou that for all these God will bring thee to judgment."

TRINE AND TRIUNE.

The above words seem to be the subject of some inquiry, and we have been requested to give the definition of each, and show the difference of meaning, if there is any, which seems to be a matter of doubt with some who regard them as synonomous terms. These conclusions, no doubt, have been arrived at from the manner in which they are generally used.

That there is a difference, is very evident when we trace up their origin and definition.

Trine, is from the Latin word trinus and signifies, threefold or thrice repeated.

Triune is from the Latin words, tri—three, and unus, one, together tri—une—three in one.

With the word immersion attached to it, as our querist has it, we have Trine Immersion, which is equivalent to three immersions, or being immersed thrice.

In Triune Immersion, we have three immersions in one immersion or three actions to complete one immersion which so beautifully harmonizes with our mode of baptism that it occurs to us that it would be much more appropriate for us to accept the term Triune Immersion, instead of Trine Immersion. Trine Immersion really signifies three immersions, and to fully carry out the sense, in baptism, it would necessitate the administrator, each time, to lift the subject entirely out of the water and give three distinct immersions which would entirely destroy the trinity and unity of the God-head. But in Triune Immersion we have three in one, by the subject being taken in the water and the lower part of the body immersed in the water, unus, and remain there while the upper part is immersed in each of the names of the Trinity, tri, thus making three immersions in one immersion which makes a beautiful figure of the God-head and fully coincides with the commission, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.

CRITICISMS.

Of late, a number of criticisms have been sent us, one of which we admit this week, under the caption, "Simplicity." This we do, not to discourage but for improvement.

Criticisms, wisely administered, are just the things we need, and would greatly improve and elevate our standard of literature, and we would open a special department for this purpose were we assured that our contributors would bear it. There should be no possible offence taken from friendly criticisms, especially among children, (as such we claim to be) when it is done for our benefit and improvement.

When we attended school, in our Literary Societies, there was a critic appointed to criticise, not only our compositions, but the manner in which we stood, gestures &c., and that in the most rigid manner. We not only bore it, but we desired it, because we knew it was for our own improvement. In this spirit exactly we wish our contributors to receive any criticisms that may be offered on their compositions.

As a timely hint we would say; study brevity. Write only when you have something to write about, and let that be to the point. Remember, apologies are a waste in paper, ink, and time of writing them; a waste of postage, a waste in compositor's time, and a waste in reading, in fact, it is waste all around because there is nothing at all in them. Do not apologize but write with such ability as God may give, be brief and to the point and we will exact no more.

We are in want of a large number of plain practical articles and we hope our readers will get to work and supply us promptly. The world is God's great book of instruction and a living witness of the Bible. Whenever and where-ever there is an idea suggested that might be of general interest, make it the subject of an article for the PILGRIM.

CAN'T DO WITHOUT IT. The following is the sacrifice some are willing to make that they may read and have others read the PILGRIM.

Brother Brumbaugh:—I am taking that good paper, THE WEEKLY PILGRIM. It comes every week a welcome visitor and I could not do without it and borrowed the money to send for it. I am a widow and have to work for my living, but I must have another copy sent for my daughter. She has not yet found that sweet rest promised to the righteous. Enclosed find, &c. S. E. M.

Jefferson, Ind.

If our whole Church was made up of such material, our circulation would be increased by the thousands. How much better to spend money thus, than to waste it in decorating our daughters with the friviolities of fashion which impart no knowledge, but tend to the destruction of the soul. Fathers and mothers, if you have sons and daughters, see that they are supplied with the PILGRIM. Some have done it, and there are hundreds more that should do it. Think of this.

PERSONAL.

ABRAHAM L. NEFF: The money was not received.

JOS. AMICH. All postal orders must be made payable at Huntingdon.

L. WORKMAN: You say Susa Long paid $2.50 but this information will do us no good unless we have her address.

D. MILLER: M. J. McClure's papers are sent and we suppose he gets them now. His address is changed to Prospect, as ordered.

JOSEPH RITTENHOUSE: J. P. and D. W. are marked paid on our list. Sarah Hull's name is not on our list. Shall we send the PILGRIM to her?

DANIEL BOCK: All right now. Your list was right but we always want the names of those who pay, sent with the money, so that we can give them credit for the money he pays.

VALUABLE RECEIPTS.

The following are a few of the hundreds of valuable receipts contained in the "Household Treasure." No Family can afford to be without it for the trifle it costs. See advertisement on last page.

BRONCHITIS.—Avoid exposure to cold or damp air; and refrain from reading aloud, public speaking, singing, or blowing instruments; keep clear of stimulants, and use a diet of milk and vegetables, take some soothing syrop to allay the irritation; wear no cravat or other bandage about the neck, a light ribbon is sufficient; let the neck have plenty of fresh air, and apply cold water to it every morning when you wash.

COUGHS AND COLDS.—Keep the bowels open by pills or senna—soak the feet in warm water, and drink freely of herb tea, such as catmint or spearmint. Use for the cough, a syrup of life-everlasting, and thoroughwort, boiled in molasses.

WHOOPING COUGH.—Take salts of tartar twenty grains, cochineal ten grains, loaf sugar one ounce, dissolve in three gills of water. Dose for a child, four to five years old, a teaspoonful three times a day, and also a little when the cough is troublesome.

RED ANTS.—To keep them away from cupboards, keep one pint of tar, in two quarts of water, in an earthen vessel in your closets, and you will not be troubled with little red ants. When first mixed, pour the water on hot.

POETRY.

CHEER UP.

BY I. W. SCRIBNER.

Lonely pilgrim on the journey of Life,
Oppressed with fear's, with cares and sighs,
Cheer up, cheer up, fear not the world's sad strife,
For thou art heir of Paradise.

Awake, ye drooping despondents arise,
And bid an adieu to thy grief,
For peaceful rest, and joy that never dies,
Comes to the weary soul's relief.

Cheer up, cheer up, from the darkness of night,
Ye careworn mourner old and gray,
Fix thy weary eye on the distant light,
Let not thy hopes all pass away.

Cheer up, cheer up, ye young hearts drooping low,
O dry thy tears and sigh no more,
Though "the dark seas roll and the wild winds blow,"
Cast thy hopes on the distant shore.

For there in purest rays of heavenly light,
Undying joys forever bloom,
And fair, celestial beings, pure and bright,
Earth's lonely wanderer, welcome home.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN. WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

In resuming the train of thought on the subject of divine and human institutions, after an absence of several weeks, I very much regret that I could not have pursued the subject regularly, and presented it to the readers of the PILGRIM in an unbroken chain through each successive number, but circumstances, beyond my control, directed otherwise and the only remedy left, is for me to ask those in whose mind an interest has been or shall be awakened upon this, as I regard it, important subject, to preserve the papers containing it, and read in connection, that they may be able to judge of the merits of the question, and the force of reasoning adduced.

The causes combined which has prevented me, was the burning of my son Jos. C. Moomaws' barn with all his corn, forage, a large quantity of cloverseed, all his farming implements and machinery (a full assortment,) all his harness, together with four valuable horses, cows, and other stock. In the meantime, I was called upon to visit an afflicted son some thirty miles distant, with whom I spent several days. The subsequent learning of another barn and stock &c., in the immediate vicinity of my son's that was burned, the arrest of the supposed incendiaries, and their trial in which I felt somewhat interested. It resulted in the conviction, in the mind of the minister of justice, and all present, with a strong probability of the guilt of the accused, and he was remanded to prison to await a future trial. Why those who have suffered should have been selected as victims of such an atrocious outrage, is a mystery that perhaps only eternity will reveal, it being notorious that two more quiet, kind, and inoffensive men could not be found in that or any other community,

Asking the forbearance and pardon of the reader for the above digression, by way of apology and explanation, we will resume the subject by again calling attention to the carefulness of our rightful sovereign in the injunction of all duties imposed upon his subjects that we may assuredly know from "whence they come from God or from men."

Let us then notice forsooth, the authority in the divine law for the observance of the passover and its concomitants, the feast of unleavened bread, &c., Ex. 12th chap., "And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt saying. This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you, speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying. In the tenth day of this month, they shall take to them every man, a lamb according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house." 5th ver. "Your lamb shall be without blemish a male of the first year, ye shall take it out from the sheep, or from the goats; "And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month, and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening." And they shall take of the blood." "And they shall eat the flesh in that night, and with bitter herbs they shall eat it." 10th ver. "And ye shall let nothing remain of it until the morning, and that which remaineth until morning ye shall burn with fire." "And thus shall ye eat it," "and ye shall eat it in haste, it is the Lord's passover," &c. Thus we see in the divine command for this feast we have the verb shall used in the imperative moode seventeen times. And in the reiteration of the command by Moses we have the following. See same chap. 21st verse, Then Moses called for all the elders of the children of Israel, and said unto them draw out and take you a lamb according to your families and kill the passover." "And ye shall take a bunch of hysop and dip it in the blood that is in the bason, and strike the lintel and the two side-posts with the blood," &c. In this Moses fixes the obligation to observe, keep and perpetuate this institution by repeating the command, to draw out and take "ye shall take, ye shall observe" and "ye shall say it is the sacrifice of the Lord's passover." "And the people bowed the head and worshipped." Six times satisfied that it was from God, the children of Israel went away and did as the Lord had commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they."

In the same connection we have the command for observing the feast of unleavened bread and holy convocations not less than nine times so that there cannot possibly be any mistake as to "from whence it was," and therefore the people bowed the head and worshipped.

In pursuance of the investigation of these feasts we ascertain that command is repeated very frequently in the scriptures, after leaving the point of its first institution. See references, Lev. 23: 5-8; Num. 9: 1-14; 28: 16, 17. Deuteronomy 16: 1-8; 2nd Kings, 23: 21 23; Ezekial 45: 21. In addition to the frequency and urgency of this command, and the penalties denounced against the unfaithful, we have in the Old and New Testament, twenty three references at least, thus indelibly fixing it in the mind of every believer, in the divine authenticity of the Bible, that these are divine institutions, and that they might not be neglected by those for whom the command was intended without incurring the most fearful responsibility.

Passing from the ritual of the Old Testament to the new dispensation, reviewing the duties, obligations, privileges and prerogatives, enjoined and awarded under the teachings we will content ourselves with examining a few of these institutions, supposing that will be sufficient to fix the principle in our minds, the point aimed at throughout these communications, that is when we adopt and connect ourselves with any enterprise, religiously, that we are sure that we know "from whence it is from heaven or of men."

Commencing with the institution of baptism what a stream of thought rushes into the mind. First we beshold the rough man of the woods, without the benefit of refined society, or the advantage of human literature, emerging from his obscure retreat, preaching in the wilderness of Jordan the unsearchable riches of Christ, whose harbinger he was, preaching "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," attracting by his profound wisdom and superhuman eloquence, all Jerusalem and Judea, and the regions around and about Jordan. The farmer leaving his plow in the forrow, the smith his anvil, the carpenter his bench, the woodman his ax, the milliner her half finished garment, the merchant his counter, the clerk his desk, the banker his books and his safe, the lawyer his library and the bar, the judge his dignified seat, the priest and the people all rush to the unparalleled scene, and yielding to the divine influence, overwhelmed by the proof that it was "from heaven and not of men" thousands submitted and received the divine institution at the hands of him whom God had sent, and yet this is not all, but in the midst of this grand and sublime array of divine influence. Oh what do we see? The Son of God himself emerging from the midst of the surrounding press, with a halo of glory surrounding his head, which eclipsed the grandeur of the scene, though already superlatively grand. He submitted to and thus approved by his act, his own institution, in confirmation of which the heavens were opened, the Holy Ghost descended, rested upon him, the voice of the Father was heard proclaiming, "this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Subsequently, John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove and it abode upon him. And I knew him not, but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bear record that this is the Son of God. John 1: 32-34. With such an array of testimony before us, who can doubt for a moment, "from whence it is?" No marvel then that these recreant Scribes and Pharisees writhed when the question in the language of Christ, under which we write was proposed to them. How appropriate the question asked by the Prophet Jeremiah 13:25. "What will ye say when He shall punish thee?" John obtained his commission from Heaven as we have seen, but "he must decrease and his superior must increase". Hence at the time appointed Christ assumes His high prerogatives, unfurls His banner, which then, and still is floating in the breeze, with the great law of baptism inscribed. "All power is given to me in Heaven and on earth, go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, &c." It being clearly demonstrated that the baptism of John was from Heaven, and he testifying that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, having accomplished the object of His mission he resigned, in favor of his superior, resting from the field of his successful labors. The messenger of the covenant, whom we delight in, came to His own temple, invested with full power, assumes His rightful prerogatives as leader and commander of the people, and says: "Go therefore." The command to baptize was only once actually given by Christ, yet it was so well understood that it was faithfully attended to by the apostles, and frequently commanded by them, as in the case of Ananias to Saul, and Peter to the Pentecostians, and well understood by all who desired to know the will of the Lord, as the Ethiopian Eunuch, and the jailor who received baptism at the hands of Paul and Silas, &c. So well was it understood that we have it literally commanded and referred to about seventy-two times, and figuratively, not less than five times, sufficient to enable us to determine of a truth that it is from Heaven and not of men.

A LETTER OF LOVE UNTO THE CHUROH AT FALLS CREEK. IND.

Editors of the Pilgrim:—Please publish this letter enclosed, written by John J. Hoover, Marmaton, Kansas, to the brethren and sisters of Fall Creek, Henry Co., Ind. And the brethren and sisters wish me to request of you to add thereto, that we entertain a feeling of gratitude and respect for brother John for the sympathy, and love that is manifested for this Church in the following letter and feel thankful for the friendly admonitions and instructions that he gave us, hoping they will have a good effect and eventually prove an inestimable blessing to us all. Brother John was elected to the ministry in this Church, and during his stay with us was ever prompt and at his place; ever ready to instruct the brethren and sisters and encourage them to press forward and be true to their profession. May he ever hold out to do so and obtain "souls for his hire now, and in the world to come eternal life."

Yours most respectfully.
DAVID K. TEETER.
Sulphur Springs, Ind.

Grace be unto you, and peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom be all praise, honor, glory, power and dominion forever.

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord, whom I love dearly, and whom God has also chosen to be the followers of His Son Jesus Christ and called from the dead works of a sinful world, and hast set thee apart from the world to be His children, according to the glorious promises revealed in His word. Although thou art yet surrounded by the world, and temptations may arise on every side, yet if thy face be set Zionward and thine eye be single to the glory of God, those temptations will fly from before thee, as the chaff is carried before the wind.

Being absent from you in the body, dearly beloved, I write unto you, to stir up your pure minds, by way of remembrance, for thou art well aware that God was in Christ Jesus reconciling the world unto Himself, and when thy sins were upon thee, thou went about seeking rest but finding none, and when thy sins arose before thee like unto mountains, thou sawest thy condition thou returnedst to thy Fathers house, and thou hast well done, that thou hast returned while the door is yet open, for the door of Gospel grace is open night and day. But many of your heads are growing gray, the frosts of many winters are telling upon you and soon you will be wafted o'er the cold stream. There is no repentance in yonder world to which you are fast hastening, the door of grace will soon be closed with you, and if you have made a proper use of the means of grace granted, all will be well with you when the change comes. And knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade you as dear brethren to be watchful and hold fast that thou hast, that no man take thy crown, always showing that true light that becometh the true followers of Christ. I plead with you to receive the good counsels and wholesome instructions given you by those that have the charge over you, knowing that they are working for the interest and salvation of your never dying souls, and this is all the pay they ask of you, obedience and submission to the Divine requirements. If obedient members, you are living in peace one with another, and not looking back again into the beggarly elements of the world, then the chastening rod is withheld, and not stretched out among you. Then doth charity reign among you, and the blessings of Almighty God are flowing freely upon you. O I remember the many seasons of worship, yes many times did we kneel together in prayer, and our hearts were thrilled and made to overflow with gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the unsearchable riches of His grace, but soon, ah soon, dark clouds arose, a brother here or a sister there, has broken the charm, they have stepped over the mark, they have reached out their hand, they have partaken of the forbidden fruit, and worse than all, they contend that it is not wrong to take a few things of the world along, only a few, the switch or chignon, and ruby with a few ribbons interwoven, are as good a covering for the head as I desire, and I don't need your plain cap," says the sister, and "I am sure if this flounce or grecian bend don't hurt me it ought not to hurt any one else." And says the brother, "I don't see any harm in trimming and coloring my hair and beard to suit myself, and then this paper collar is a very little thing, and my fashionable coat, pants and vest suit me very well." But suppose the Savior would come to you in person, clothed with flesh as He once was, what do you think He would say? Would He say, 'O ye of little faith," or would He say "ye fools and blind," or "you belong to the world" and are of your father the devil, or that you are lukewarm and "I will spew thee out of my mouth. If there be any such among you dear brethren, in the language of the apostle "we pray you in Christs stead be ye reconciled unto God," and "be not conformed to this world but be ye rather transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, acceptable and perfect will of the Lord," for we are instructed in the law, "that to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace, for the carnal mind is in enmity against God, and is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." If there be any among you, that would turn away, let them remember the words of the apostle Peter when the Savior said to the apostles, wilt thou also turn away? Peter said "Lord where will we go, thou hast the words of eternal life?" and John in his epistolary writing says, "my little children, these things write I unto you that ye sin not, and if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and He is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world, and hereby do we know that we know Him if we keep His commandments." And again we learn that His commandments are not grievious, but by obeying the same we are made partakers of His grace and we become fit subjects for our Masters' use, for "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor, which you have showed toward His name, in that ye have ministered to the saints and do minister, and we desire that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end."

And you, dear brethren and sisters who have the rule and oversight, how is it with you, are you always ready and willing to discharge every duty encumbent upon you, in holding the little flock together, and also in calling others into the pasture of the Lord that there may be an increase in the fold of Christ, and that He may have His own with usury at His coming? And have you not a few lambs of your own yet, that have not been gathered into the fold? If so, have you used every means in your power to get them in? Have you implored the divine aid at all times to assist you in gathering them in, or do ye rather, like the children of Israel, when they went to take Ai? they went without imploring the divine aid, and they were smitten and driven back in disorder, and caused Joshua to rent his clothes, &c. See Joshua 7th chapter. When you go to them go in the fear of the Lord, and use every means of grace given you, as Joshua did when he took Jericho. He used all the means given him by the Father, and they in using the very last and very simple means, that of blowing a blast with the rams horn and raising a great shout, made the walls of Jericho fall. So you should never stop until you have exausted every means of grace given you, and then the walls of satan will be sure to tumble down, so that when you appear at the judgment bar of God, you can say: "here am I Lord with those that thou hast given me." Be very careful brethren, lest perhaps you may loose those things which you have wrought and finally not be permitted to receive a full reward. And dearly beloved, in conclusion I would ask you all to remember your son in the faith, whom you have chosen, and set as a watchman upon the walls of Zion. Let your prayers ascend the hill of Zion as the prayers of one man in my behalf. And now unto Him that is able to keep you from the hour of temptation, and to present you blameless before God, unto Him be all honor, glory, power and dominion forever and ever, amen.

JOHN J. HOOVER.

SIMON MAGUS AND SIMON PETER.

We have in the 8th chapter of Acts an account of those two ancient characters, and an interview between them. Simon Magus seems to have been a very extraordinary man, and exceedingly popular in a very eminent city, Samaria. The inhabitants of all ranks regarded him with high veneration, and had done so for a long time. At the time Simon Peter appeared in that city, Simon Magus seems to have been highly respected in a religious point of view. He was to them as an oracle of God, and seemed invested with power almost divine. He asserted his own dignity and gained the ear of the people: so that all from the least unto the greatest gave heed to him saying, this man is the great power of God. And a chief engine of his fame was his power of working wonders which others could neither explain nor imitate. Simon Peter was not a person of high renown among such people as the inhabitants of Samaria. He was a low bred man, and his speech marked with a provincial vulgarity. He had been, originally, neither a prophet nor a prophet's son, nor a doctor of the law, but men had taught him to take fishes from his youth, howsoever, the Founder of Christianity having all power in Heaven and earth had, by this time, made him a successful fisher of men. He was qualified for the work with wondrous powers in particular, when by divine guidance, he laid his hands on believers, they received the Holy Spirit, and were also endowed with wonder working gifts. Previous to his arrival at Samaria, Philip, one of his friends had preached the Gospel there, and it had been confirmed with signs following, hence many believed the Gospel and acted under its influence. Simon Magus too, by the different nature and tendency of the wonders wrought was overpowered into a profession of that Gospel which was so confirmed. He was still more astonished when he observed the gifts of the Holy Spirit communicated by laying on of the hands of Simon Peter and others. Whatever knowledge of the truth he had thus attained he still labored under a great mistake. He thought the teachers of Christianity made a trade of it, and also that they acted by their own skill or power, hence as he could teach others to imitate his own miracles, he thought perhaps the apostles could do so too, and as he had no higher aim than the gaining of money, he thought they were like himself, hence he proposed to purchase the power. This proposal was so repugnant to the whole spirit of that system which levels every mountain and exalts every valley,—so hostile to the nature of a kingdom not of this world, the king of which voluntarily appeared in this world as an indigent dependant, and promised his subjects the same kind of treatment which himself had experienced, and so derogatory to the gift itself, which was not of temporal but of eternal importance, that Simon Peter at once saw the character of the man and the nullity of all his pretentions to Christianity, and filled with holy indignation, he thus reprehended him: "Thy money perish with thee because thou thoughtest the gift of God could be purchased with money thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter, thou art yet in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity, repent of this thy wickedness, and pray God if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." At this reprehension Simon Magus stood confounded and convicted, and requested an interest in the other prayers. Indeed his sin seems to have been exceedingly heinous, and it did not so much consist in the single act of offering the money to the apostles as in that erroneous state of mind from which it flowed.

This reprehension then must apply to every act which betrays the same erroneous state of mind. Simon's sin consisted in the thought of his heart, that money could purchase what was the gift of God. This error appears in two views. He is guilty of it who thinks that any sum, however great, is of any avail to purchase such an engagement. He is equally guilty of this error who thinks any sum, however small, absolutely necessary to the attainment, since without money and without price is the motto to them all.

These principles may be brought to a practical application to officers in the Church. I shall consider Simon's error as it bears on these offices. Every office in the Church which has the warrant of God is God.s gift to the person invested with the office, accordingly the Elders of the Church of Ephesus are enjoined to take heed to the flock over which the Holy Spirtt had made them overseers. Acts 20. Now whatever plan of Church puts this office within the reach of the person who has money, or out of the reach of the person who has it not, must involve the error of Simon Magus. And every church which renders such offices attainable by wealthy societies, and unattainable by those who are poor, renders this gift an article purchasable with money, and is deeply tinctured with the error of Simon. God gave to the Church, pastors, but for want of money, the poor little society cannot obtain the gift. Perhaps they fix on an object and present a call, if so, the question is, "What salary ?" If this be too little, the affair is ended, they cannot support the gospel, and they shall not get it in that way. A similar plan is in the quantity and quality of the gift. These are distributed as nearly as can be guessed in the exact ratio of the wealth of the societies. One very poor gets a sermon but once a month, and a little more wealthy may observe public worship three times a month, but it is so contrived that the most despised preacher is sent to the most despised society. While this is the case of poor societies, those which are wealthy, have public worship every Lord's day and may have a plurality of pastors, and those of the most esteemed and accomplished sort. Thus the poor society is frequently deprived of its pastor. These hints claim the regard of many small societies.

A PILGRIM.

FAITH ALONE DOCTRINE.

After listening to some of the popular preachers of the present day, on the "Faith alone doctrine," I became so aroused on the subject that I feel that our sanctified press as well as they that occupy the sacred desk, should give this subject a more and more earnest study and investigation. When I contemplate the many thousand souls of the present day who are deluded by their leaders and preachers crying peace, peace, where there is no peace, I feel that it is time that we become awake to the subject. "Only believe," say they, and you shall be saved? Verily nay. And in this way, poor people are deluded and do not realize what they are promised and what they expect and become sceptic and infidel. Oh! who can comprehend the fearfulness of the destruction of the great numbers of lost precious souls by the "faith alone doctrine." Is it not brethren a similar method to that of satan with our first parents in Eden's garden in telling them part truth only? But what does St. James say 2: 20, "But wilt thou know, O! vain man, that faith without works is dead." &c. Those blind guides appear to make great demunstrations to awaken them to a sense of duty and when the query is put "what they must do to be saved," they tell them, "only look to Jesus by faith, that is all that is necessary to salvation and arise and give God thanks, he saved a thief upon the cross by faith and he can save you by faith—believe, you are blessed and it is done." They do not for one moment, think that believing a thing does not make it so if it was not so before they believed it.

Now Brethren, I have not so learned of Christ. The way to salvation, but faith and obedience is the more excellent way. The way Saul was commanded after he believed. He was commanded to be baptized in order to wash away his sins, by repentance, faith and baptism. Acts 8: 39. "What doth hinder me from being baptized?" When he had believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. And further, Peter on the day of Pentecost, Acts 2: 14, "They that gladly received his word were baptized and the same day there were added to the church about three thousand souls." They not only believed but continued steadfast in the Apostles doctrine. The Phillippian Acts 16: 33, and he took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes and he was baptized he and all his household." Taking all these, as well as many other examples and positive commands into consideration, how can the "faith alone doctrine" stand the test in the great day of accounts. I have been made to wonder hearing the advocates of this doctrine to appeal to such examples, as for instance, Naaman the leper, or Moses raising the brazen serpent on a pole to enforce faith, and thus resting the scriptures to their own destruction, when those examples are purely practical to enforce obedience to ordinances of God's house. One of these advocates of "faith alone" in my hearing, declared to a large audience that all the water baptism Christ had reference to in telling Nicodemus he must be born of the water and the spirit, was the water that flowed out of his side pierced by the soldiers' spear, so you see dear friends the necessity, in these latter days of scepticism, of us proving the spirits whether they be of God and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, not only believe, but do the commandments and we shall have a right to the tree of life and enter through the gates into the city.

And again, Abraham the Father of the faithful, was likewise justified by obedience in offering up his only son. Obedience is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams, while stubborness is idolatry, and disobedience as witchcraft. Was not Moses obedient as well as believed in every word and work of the Lord, except one transgression, for which he was deprived of entering the promised land, and the Son of God our Lord Jesus Christ, was obedient in all things even to the death on the cross that we through his obedience might be saved. And now if we know these things happy are we if we do them. If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. He obeyed his Father's commands and we must obey his, for he says, "if ye love me keep my commandments."

A CONVERSATION ON DRESS.

Mrs. A. Well elder, I declare it is almost discouraging for persons to be picked at, and have so many stories told about them as they tell about me.

Elder. Indeed, what is the trouble now; I am not posted in regard to the stories, and think we all have about all we can do to build over against our own house, without spending too much time in watching our neighbors. You are aware that I oppose backbiting, and claim if we see a wrong in a brother, our duty is to go to him in a proper spirit and tell him his fault to his face.

Mrs. A. Well, somebody has started the story that I went to Mr. ——'s to a dinner party on the Sabbath, dressed in the gayest manner possible. Now the facts are, I never went to a party to Mr.——s house, and I never went to his house on the Sabbath. I went there one Sunday to dinner with my son and his wife by invitation, and I don't think people need find fault with that.

Eld. Probably this can all be explained in this wise, sister; you know some people call Sunday the Sabbath. It might have been casually mentioned at first, that you were at Mr.——s to dinner on the Sabbath, meaning Sunday; others may have heard of it, and supposed it was on the Seventh-day, the day you profess to keep. We want to look upon all with all the allowance possible, and not to think they are designing to injure us unless we have direct evidence to that effect.

Mrs. A. Well, I have not so much charity perhaps as I ought to have, and I think it is a small matter any way to be noticing people's dress, I am sure I have not purchased any new dresses lately. My clothing is all old, and as for my gold chain, brooch and cuff-buttons, I wear them when I go out into company, and it is necessary to do so when you move in respectable circles.

Eld. Well, sister, Christ is represented as our pattern, and we are admonished to learn of him; there would be an amazing contrast between the silks, satins and gold jewels of some and the plain vesture of Christ.

Mrs. A. I think it is a small business to descend to notice such things, and I confess I do not want to associate with people who pick flaws about such little things. People that move in the circle in which I do, must dress according to those they associate with, or they will have no influence.

Eld. I have always supposed that to be a Christian was to be like Christ, and we are admonished not only to have the mind that was in Christ, but He is given as a pattern, that we should walk in His steps, I should think it would be our duty to follow Him and go with the humble ones who are trying to imitate Him instead of disowning our profession for the sake of securing influence in what is called by men, high circles. We should remember that, "what is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God."

Mrs. A. Well, my brooch and sleeve-buttons are useful articles, and I could not get along without wearing them.

Eld. Let us see, you wear your brooch to fasten your collar. A jet or vulcanized rubber pin, costing twenty-five cts., would keep your collar to its place, and look much more neat, plain and tidy than a cameo two by three inches, set on a plate, costing twenty-five or thirty dollars; your gold cuff-buttons one inch in diameter are worth from ten to fifteen dollars; your cuffs could be secured with nice jet buttons not costing over twenty-five cts.

Mrs. A. I don't care anything about them, I'd just as willingly wear an old rag or a piece of pewter as my brooch so far as my own feelings are concerned, but we are responsible for the influence we exert upon others.

Eld. That is true; and you would not wear pewter or an old rag, for that would not be neat or tasty. I am glad you feel responsible for the influence you exert upon others, but sister, have we any right to take a course to influence others contrary to the teachings of the Bible?

Mrs. A. If you people should all dress in that plain manner, you could never gain influence over such as Mr.——and——, you ought to think it an honor to have people come in among you that move in such high circles.

Eld. Well I don't know that it helps the cause any to have persons espouse it that feel above the simplicity of the truth; and as for these men you mention, with all their avaricious over-reaching disposition and pride, what could we do with them? What help would they be to us? God is not so straitened for means as to have the standard of truth lowered to gain them. I say here that unless such men can come down to the simplicity of the Gospel, I would rather they would not come among us, for it is no benefit to them or to the cause of God.

Mrs. A. I have thought your preaching would have a better influence if you did not say any thing about dress. Preach the great and glorious truths and let these little things alone.

Religious News.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the "Brethren" for 1873 will be held at Dale City, Pa., and for 1874, in the Otter Creek Church, Macoupin Co., Ill.

The Friends have six hundred and sixty two houses of worship in this country, including Orthadox and Hicksite. They have lost in the last decade nine per cent of their membership.

THE Moravians report 1,156 converts on the Labrador coast. The Bible complete, in the Exquimaux language, has recently been distributed among the heads of families. In South Africa, the Moravians reckon 8,814 converts; in Surinam, 23,703.

FROM an exchange, we learn that there are 97,405 orthadox Friends or Quakers in the United States. From religious statistics it appears that they are decreasing in number on account of their children not embracing their faith.

Millerism is reviving in Vermont. The world, it is there affirmed by some, is coming to an end toward the close of the present year. Others think that the catastrophe will occur during the present winter. There are a good many meetings, and there is a good deal of preaching and excitement.

REPORTS from the interior of Russia, state that the Baptists are making a large number of converts, and that they are rebaptizing by the scores, in the rivers and in the sea, despite the biting cold.

Such news is not very cheering when we learn that thousands of humble Christians are compelled to leave the same country to be freed from learning the arts of war and human butchery.

The baltimore Sun says that the Eutaw Place Baptist church unanimously agreed to increase the salary of their pastor Rev. Dr. Fuller, but he politely declined their generosity. At their next meeting they remained after services and again unanimously resolved to insist upon their pastor to comply with their resolution. The Sun remarks: "We never heard of such a difficulty before." Rather rare we suppose.

THE UNITED BRETHREN originated among the German population of this state in the year 1760. They now claim a membership of 140,000 distributed among forty three conferences, has four bishops, supports eight colleges, publishes five regular periodicals and sustains three hundred missionaries in the home work.

This shows what energy and zeal combined will do. While others are spending their thousands to propagate their respective creeds we seem to be holding our purse strings with an iron grasp. Brethren right here we are diseased, and if not cured it will form a putrifying sore which will finally infirm and weaken the effective working force of the whole body. One of the hardest lessons we have to learn, is that our wealth and means belong to the Lord, and that it is our duty to use it for the furtherance of His cause and the glorifying of His name.

ELD. ADDISON PRATT.—This prominent Mormon preacher died Oct. 14th, 1872, at the house of his daughter in Anaheim, Los Angeles Co., Cal. He was the son of Henry Pratt, Esq., the celebrated organ builder. He was ordained Elder at Nauvoo, Ill., in 1842. In 1843, he was sent on a mission to the South Pacific Islands where he was successful in converting many to the faith of the "Latter Day Saints." In 1852, he returned to San Francisco. After remaining with his family a number of years, he went to his daughter where he might enjoy a milder climate, hoping to be relieved of a disease which was aggravated by the cold winters of his home. At this place he passed away in the full enjoyment of his faith, thus demonstrating that conscience is no guide whatever in religion, as a man can die happy in any religion, no matter how absurd, if he can only die in the faith.

AGAINST CHURCH FAIRS.—The General Council of the Diocese of Florida has expressed by resolutions its decided condemnation of balls, fairs, festivals, concerts, theatrical representations, and all such public entertainments in aid of religious objects, believing all these modes of obtaining money for the services of God to be contrary to the spirit of the Gospel, opposed to the teachings of the church on the subject of offertory, and calculated to lower that spiritual standard which ought to be aimed at by every Christian in the devotion of his substance to the service of God."—N. Y. Observer.

This is certainly a move in the right direction. The desire for having costly edifices for worship is becoming so great that some churches have resorted to any and every means to obtain the funds, above that of direct stealing. The gambling and chance games played off at these church fairs are practically stealing, or to be a little more mild, robbing the devil to serve God.

FAITH.

In the gloaming, when my darlings,
In their dainty robes of white,
By their mother's knees have murmured,
"Jesus keep us through the night."

To their little crib white-curtained,
Where the upper shadows fall,
Nestled in my arms, I take them
Through the long, unlighted hall.

Swift, in rayless silence round us,
Close the deepening shades of night;
"Dark!" my blue-eyed Bertie whispers,
Half in awe and half in fright.

"Dark!" the baby brother echoes,
With a hush upon his glee;
When my Bertie, nestling nearer,
Whispers softly, "Papa, see!"

Blessed, blessed faith of childhood,
Father, grant this faith to me;
Dark the shadows round me gather,
But I know that Thou dost see.

THE PATH OF THE WISE.

Let me ask my little PILGRIM friends what is the most excellent of all knowledge? You will all answer immediately, "To know the path of the wise man and how to walk therein." "The path of the wise" is the highway to eternal excellence and glory. Let us look at the truly wise man. His gait is firm, his language purity, his voice a melody, a smile of grace lights his countenance, mercy, truth and faith flash from his eye. Though his forehead is deeply furrowed with care yet the expression there, is untouched by the blight of life's autumn. He rises from his couch at early morn., and tunes his harp to mingle his notes of praise with the sweet song of birds, he pours out a prayer of praise as he mounts upon the golden chain of faith. As the day advances, the wise man still pursues his holy course, he is girt about with the habiliments of active life, he feasts at the table of plenty and simplicity, and drinks at the fountain of innocence. At evening he throws aside sthe implements of labor, considers the privileges and blessings of the day, consigns himself into the hands of an efficient and powerful Creator, and wraps himself in sweet repose, while angels guard his peaceful slumbers. Thus has passed away the truly wise man. Who of us are ready to follow in his footsteps? It is foolishness, error and wrong to seek wealth, honor power, save that wealth, honor and power that guides us in the path of wisdom and prepares us for filling our mission in life and fits us for glory beyond.

JOHNNY'S MISTAKE.

Little Jonny H—— came running home from school one day, and asked his mother's permission to go out in the morning with a party of boys to shoot wild ducks.

Mrs. H——readily gave her consent, and Johnny hastened to bring out the old rifle, which had grown somewhat rusty by disuse, and commenced cleaning and polishing it.

While Johnny was thus engaged, his mother sat near by, quietly watching his movements until he was ready to put in the charge, when she said to him, "Johnny, you had better not load your rifle to-night; I'm afraid some accident will happen."

"O mother," replied Johnny, "there will be no danger, and then I shall be all ready for an early start in the morning."

"But," continued his mother, "something might happen, and at all events it will be safer to put it away just as it is."

Johnny made no further reply, and his mother soon left the room.

Johnny was usually a very good boy, and prompt in obeying his mother's wishes; but this time he kept looking at his rifle, and wishing he might load it, and the more he looked and wished, the harder it became for him to put it away.

At last, saying to himself, "mother wouldn't care if she knew there was really no danger, and I'll be very careful." Johnny took the last step which parleying with temptation almost always leads to, loaded the riffle and set it behind the door.

Early the next morning, before any one else in the family was astir, Johnny crept down stairs and hastened to join the boys in their sports. So eager was he to be on his way, he actually forgot his rifle, until he was fairly out of the house. Then he turned and went back for it, but somehow, in opening the door, the rifle was knocked down, its contents discharged, and the ball entered one of Johnny's knees.

And now what do you think were the first words that passed his lips? Did he call for help? Did he utter an exclamation of pain? No, this is what he said, "I thought I knew better than my mother."

How many other boys, and girls too, have made the same mistake that Johnny did. They may not find it out so quickly and surely, but sooner or later they will think, if not say, "After all mother knew best." Child's Paper.

A CHILD'S MORNING PRAYER.

Many a Christian mother, who, at evening receives at her knee her little one, with folded hands and closed eyes to say, "Now I lay me," before going to rest, has been puzzled to find an equally brief and suitable form of words in which to conduct the morning devotions of said little child. Possibly it would be a kindness to some such mothers if you should publish the accompanying stanza, which has done acceptable service in the circle where it had its origin in a mother's heart:

Jesus hear me while I pray;
Please to take my sins away;
Make me gentle, make me mild,
Make me thine own little child.
Amen

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim:—As you and the brethren at large, have not heard from this arm of the Church this Winter, I will state that we, the brethren of the Mohican Church, Wayne Co., Ohio, commenced a series of meetings on the 8th of Feb., and continued until there was 18 appointments filled. We gave some special invitations and a general one. When the time came for the meeting we had to commence under rather unfavorable circumstances, no strange brethren made their appearance, but we began. Bro. Jacob Garver, our Elder, preached the first sermon on Saturday evening, and on Sunday the writer tried to preach the second. By Sunday evening help began to come in, a force of three brethren, which made us rejoice. Third sermon by J. B Shoemaker, of the Shipswaney Church, followed by Moses Weaver from the Ashland Church, to a very attentive audience. Fourth by Wm. Sadler, of the Maple Grove Church, brother Shoemaker, P. J. Brown and Garver being called away a short distance to visit a sick man. Fifth by brother Sadler, followed by brother Shoemaker. In about the midst of the meeting, brother Christian Wise of Mansfield Church arrived, which caused a thrill of joy to us all, seeing our ministerial aid increasing and the interest of the meeting also increasing from time to time. Sixth by brother Wise. Seventh by Shoemaker, followed by Wise. Eighth by Wise and Witmer from the Ashland Church, and ninth by Wise, Witmer and Brown. While brother Wise occupied the floor it seemed as though the entire audience were held spell-bound, every countenance rivited upon the speaker while he was engaged in delivering to them the word of God with power and effect.

On Thursday morning, the 15th, brother Joseph N. Kauffman of Logan Co., came to our assistance, and some of those that were with us returned to their homes, but still left enough for all necessary demands. Tenth sermon by brother Kauffman, followed by Wise. Eleventh sermon by Kauffman and Wise,—interest still increasing, congregation enlarging, and attention and good order praiseworthy. At this point Bro. Wise returned home. We now gave the matter more fully into the hands of Bro. Kauffman, who preached day and evening until Sunday evening, a series of discourses taking a broad field, throwing his net out a great ways and drawing it together by degrees until he brought it to an end by a baptism sermon, which was truly a master piece discourse. He made popular religion quake, and the sinner tremble. We expected to close on this evening, but as we were informed that two precious souls had become tired of sin, we thought good to have a meeting on Monday, and when we came together two more made application, therefore after the sermon, we went down to the water and received four into the Church by baptism, which made us all truly rejoice in the God of our salvation, seeing He is still willing to call sinners through the labors of his servants. From visible indications, we think many more will, from time to time knock at the door for admittance. Taking it all in all, it was truly a time of refreshing to us all. May we long remember what we have heard, and all put it to practice, for it was dealt out to saint and sinner, each one received his due portion in due time. May it be watered by the dew-drops of Heaven, so that His Satanic Majesty may be made to tremble and the borders of Zion be enlarged, is our prayer.

GEORGE WORST.

New Pittsburg, Ohio.

ALLEN, PA.,
February 29th 1872.

Dear Brother:—I am receiving the PILGRIM, and I love it because it holds to the old order of the Brethren. I do love that order. I am not in favor of those modern styles in dress which are now getting so common. Some say, dress to please yourselves, but we should not thus do, we should follow Christ and His people, and if we do not, it is a strong evidence that we do not love them, and if we do not love the brethren whom we have seen, how can we love Christ whom we have not seen? I do think if we are not willing to follow our old brethren as they followed Christ, we have not yet fully cast off the old man. The beloved Apostle says, "Be ye followers of me even as I also am of Christ." If we are not willing to come to the humble order of the Church, I think we yet love the world too much. John in his epistle, says, "Love not the world neither the things that are in the world, if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." Again, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren, he that loveth not his brother abideth in death." O, then, brethren, let us love one another with a pure heart, and that which our brethren love to see, let us not shun or decline to wear. I believe that we are in times in which we should be up and doing, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man cometh, and O, if He should find us asleep, how awful it would be. I am afraid we would open our eyes where the rich man did, but the Savior says, "Blessed is the man who, at my coming, shall be found watching." Yes, he will indeed be blessed and will be conducted to that Heavenly home. DAVID GOODYEAR.

Dear Pilgrim:—This morning I feel to inform your readers that I am well and have been over since my trip in Pa., and all our members are also well as far as I know. There is not much sickness at present in our neighborhood and we feel thankful to God our Heavenly Father for His kindness conferred on us.

I have not forgotten and hope never shall, the dear brethren, sisters, their kind children and all the friends that I met in Ind. and Pa. last fall. My mind often travels the rounds and when I think of their kindness, I ask God to bless them all.

I will now say that I traveled through the Brotherhood in part of Northern Ind., found all well with a few exceptions, attended many meetings, had large congregations and very good attention to the word preached. I had three meetings in Milford, Ind. in the Campbellite or Christian Church. They were very kind. I think the brethren ought to preach there often. While I was in Milford I visited our much respected friend Allen Gilkerson, and Mary his wife, she being a kind sister, and I hope that he also will soon become a member, as I think he loves the brethren and the order they practice. He is a reader of the PILGRIM and told me that he could not well do without it. I think there should be good admonitions in our papers for our dear friends and children, and all our brethren should take the periodicals at least one of them, and the abler ones could take more, or get some for the poor. Our children should read these good admonitions and when they have read them, we should give them to our neighbors that they may read them, if there is not too much criticism, of which I disapprove; at any rate dear members, we cannot do too much good, but we can very easily do too little, and I fear if we are not careful, we may labor too much for the world and not enough for the Lord. If we have so much concern for the things of this world we are so apt to neglect our duty towards God and one another, and we will find fault with long meetings and short ones too, and after a while we may forget where the Lord has promised to meet with us. I mean if we do not watch and pray. Well may the Savior say "what I say I say unto all watch." If we do not watch we may get proud and buy everything that the world buys, and becomes defiled, or we may become stingy which is covetousness, and such will not make themselves comfortable or others. But if our affections are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God, we are more apt to be in our duty, and not be too slothful or too worldly-minded; and I do think we will have the right kind of courage in every direction. We will pay a debt while we have money, and do without what we do not need, however much our eyes may covet it; have the courage to speak our mind when necessary, and to hold our tongue when prudent; have the courage to speak to a friend in a plain and modest apparel, even though you are in company with a rich one and richly attired; have the courage to make a will and a just one before your dying hour, have the courage to tell a man and the most agreeable acquaintance we have when we are convinced that he lacks principle. A friend should bear with a friend's infirmities, but not with his vices. Have the courage to show your respect for honesty in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonest duplicity by whomsoever exhibited. Have the courage to wear our old clothes until we can pay for our new ones, have the courage to obey our Maker at the risk of being ridiculed by man, have the courage to acknowledge our ignorance rather than to seek credit for knowledge under false pretense, have courage to stand for God, even if we must stand alone, have the courage of two evils to choose the last, but of two wrongs, to choose neither, and have courage to believe in God with all your heart, and own His name everywhere. § JOHN KNISLEY.

ANNUAL MEETING OF 1874.

Editors of the PILGRIM, please say that the committee of arrangements, after carefully examining the many places offered for holding the A. M., of 1874, have finally decided, all things considered, that Joseph Filburns have the best facilities for the accommodation of the A. M., therefore the Lord willing, it will be held in the Otter Creek Congregation, MaCoupin Co., Ill., 25 miles south of Springfield at the residence of brother Joseph Filburns, only about 200 yards from the St. Louis, Alton and Chicago Railroad. You can also say to the brethren of Southern Ill., that the money subscribed for procuring a tent for the benefit of the churches in the Southern district of Ill., is not sufficient, and that the project is therefore a failure for the present. Sacredly shall my ashes lie, Awaiting the summons from on high.

SNAPP.—In Logan Co., Ohio, on Feb. 19, 1873, of Lung fever, our old friend Jos. B. Snapp, aged 72 years, 1 month and 27 days.

He was a member of the Baptist Church. He leaves an old companion, three children, 12 grand-children and many relatives to mourn their loss. Funeral preached by the writer in the English and by John P. King minister of the Omish Church in the German, by request, from Rev. 14: 13.

COFFMAN.—Near South English, in the English River Church District, March the 1st, 1873, our beloved brother, Benjamin F. Coffman, formerly of Rockingham Co., Va., aged 39 years, 8 months and 6 days. Disease Typhoid fever.

He leaves a widow, two children and a large number of relations and friends to mourn their loss, but they mourn not as those who have no hope for all feel assured that he rests in the Paradise of God. His last audible words were, "all is well, let me go in peace." A kind husband, an affectionate father, a good citizen and an humble exemplary follower of Christ were some of the characteristics of his life. A few days before he passed from earth he called for the Elders of the church and had the Holy Unction of annointing with oil administered to him. Though his sickness was of short duration, only two weeks, he suffered but little or no pain, but slowly and silently passed through the gates of death and peacefully landed in the haven of eternal rest. O that we might all so live, that when we die we can also die in peace and meet all our dear brethren, sisters, friends and all the holy Fathers around the throne of God. The funeral services were attended to by the brethren, to one of the largest collections of mourning and sympathizing friends ever assembled in this part of the Lord's heritage. The words of Jesus addressed to Martha, as recorded in John 11: 23. "Thy brother shall rise again," were improved upon on the solemn occasion. B. F. F.

(Visitor please copy.)

BENNITT.—On Feb, 11th, 1873, in the Winamac District, at North Bend, Parthena Alice, daughter of Bro. James Y. and sister Hannah Bennitt, aged 13 yrs., 6 months and 25 days.

Bro. James is in the ministry. It was a hard stroke to give up their child as she was an obedient daughter and much loved, and was taken away unexpectedly, as she was sick only three days. Disease, inflammation of the brain. The child expressed a willingness to go home and we need not mourn for her as those who have no hope. Funeral service by Bro's. A. Appelman and D. R. Freeman, from John 16: 20.

QUERY AND ANSWER.

Will the Editors of the Pilgrim please give us an explanation on the following Scripture: "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house neither bid him God speed." 2d John 1st; 10.

What house is here referred to, our dwellings or the house of public worship? Wm. B. Sell.

The souls of all men are equally precious in the sight of God and should so be considered. To refuse any man the common charities of life seems not to be in harmony with the spirit of Christ, therefore we conclude that it is not the man that we are so specially to guard against as the doctrine which may not be in accordance with the truth, hence if any bring among us a doctrine that does not comport with the Word of God and is not calculated for the salvation of the soul, we are to afford him no opportunity to preach that doctrine, no matter whether it be a private house, a tent or a Church-house. It is the doctrine that we are to exert our influence against. To do this will not necessitate us to deny them the common charities, such as entertaining them as strangers or feeding them when hungry.

TAKE THE BACK NO'S.

All subscriptions should commence with the beginning of the volume, as the first Nos. contained some very interesting articles some of which are still continued. It will also make a complete file and make the volume valuable for binding. We can still supply all subscribers with numbers from the beginning of the year. New subscribers are still coming in quite encouragingly and we can assure you, they are welcomely received. We have room for many more, send them along and we will accommodate all.

Bro. Stephen Hilderbrand, of Mineral Point, Cambria Co., Pa., says: "One month has elapsed since I took my leave of the brethren and sisters of James Creek and of the Pilgrim Office. I arrived home same evening —found all well. I often think of the privilege I had of meeting with you, brethren, and I am so well pleased with the zeal and appearance of the brethren and sisters that I hope the time will not be long until we can meet again. Further, I think it would do our brethren and sisters good to visit James Creek, especially, sisters. We feel glad that those who visit James Creek are generally favorably impressed as we always contended that good men ought to have a good reputation at home. Perhaps some brethren flatter the James Creek Church a little, but one thing we are glad to acknowledge, we have peace among us and try to contend for the faith.

PERSONAL.

D. Brower. That will do.

Jacob Link. We don't publish the Pilgrim in the German.

Jacob Weaver, H. E's paper is now paid to No. 40 73.

Jeremiah Rothermel. The money you speak of is received—Almanac and No. 7 sent.

D. F. Hahr and others. The Tune Books have now arrived and all orders are filled.

B. A. Leiter. Your name with several others was on the book but overlooked in putting them in the addressing galley. They will come all right now.

—Brother D. Yonce intends to leave the charge at Germantown, but where he intends to locate we have not yet learned.

—Elder Isaac Cripe of Pyrmont, Ind., has been unwell during the winter but is now recovering.

Eld. Geo. Wolf. We received $8.00 from you about the 24th of November, but have no account of receiving any since. You say you sent $8.00 January 20th, how did you send it? Was it by postal order, check or how?

—S. M. Shuck of Preston, Mion., informs us that their Church is in a good condition and that they have been prospering. During the winter, they added eight to their number by baptism.

—Elder J. W. Brumbaugh of Clover Creek, and J. T. Myers of Somerset, Pa., gave us a call. Had preaching on last evening at the James Creek Church,—this evening service will be in our new Bethel.

—Sister M. M. Custer informs us that the brethren at Pottstown Pa., were holding some meetings, and that twenty-five were to be baptized on Saturday March the 1st.

—From Elder J. W. Brumbaugh, we learn that the church at Snake Spring, Pa., on the 22d of February, held a choice for a speaker and two deacons. The charges fell upon Bro. Wm. Ritchy for speaker, and Thomas Dibert and John Baker deacons.

—A brother says, "The winter here in Marion Co., Oregon has been very mild up to this date, February 20th, health good, the wheat looks well and the grass growing.

—From brother J. B. Diehl we learn that Elder C. Long, of Adel, Dallas Co., Iowa, has had bad health during the winter and seems to be declining some, but in his religious deliberations and zeal, remains unchanged.

—The following very good advice is received from a brother in the West: "Try your best to keep out controversaries as our people are not inclined to patronize a paper of that character. Exhibit a mild and gentle spirit through the columns of your paper, and then I have no doubt that the circulation of the Pilgrim will be an entire success.

—The building of a church near Hamilton, Caldwell Co., Mo., will fall through unless the Brotherhood comes to their aid more liberally. In brother W. B. Sell's last letter, he says: "On next Sabbath I have an appointment to fill at a distance of 13 miles and no way to get there but walk. Brethren, think of these things, and then help them to build a house for worship.

—Sister Kate Gambel of Cordelia, Cal., has been on a trip to Yosemite Valley and among the "Big Trees," and has given an account of it for the the entertainment of our readers,—will appear next week. Sister Kate, notwithstanding she is isolated from the general Brotherhood, remembers the poor by sending $1.00 along to make glad the fireside of some poor lonely widow. Brethren and sisters, what have you done towards supplying the poor with good religious reading? You would be surprised to learn that we have or are giving $150,00 for this purpose and cannot afford it a particle better than many hundreds of our subscribers.

Continue to work for the Pilgrim. A number of our agents who had done quite well before, made a second effort and almost doubled their lists. There are many more could do equally as well if they would try a little. One of our agents last week took a Pilgrim to their council meeting and obtained nine new subscribers.

POETRY.

"IS YOUR LAMP BURNING?"

Say, is your lamp burning, my brother?
I pray you look quickly and see.
For if it were burning, then surely
Some beams would fall bright upon me.

Straight, straight is the road, but I falter,
And oft I fall out by the way;
Then lift your lamp higher, my brother,
Lest I should make fatal delay.

There are many and many around you
Who follow wherever you go;
If you thought that they walked in the shadow,
Your lamp would burn brighter, I know.

Upon the dark mountain they stumble;
They are bruised on the rocks, and they lie
With their white pleading faces turned upward
To the clouds and the pitiful sky.

There is many a lamp that is lighted;
We behold them anear and afar:
But not many among them my brother,
Shine steadily on like a star.

I think, were they trimmed night and morning,
They would never burn down or go out,
Though from the four quarters of heaven
The winds were all blowing about.

If once all the lamps that were lighted
Should steadily blaze in a line,
Wide over the land and the ocean,
What a girdle of glory would shine!

How all the dark places would brighten!
How the mist would roll up and away!
How the earth would laugh out in her gladness
To hail the mellennial day!

Say, is your lamp burning, my brother?
I pray you look quickly and see;
For if it were burning, then surely
Some beam would fall bright upon me!

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

SIR, WE WOULD SEE JESUS.

JOHN 11:21.

This phrase, addressed to Philip by certain Greeks who were among them that came up to Jerusalem to worship at the feast, seems very natural from the attending circumstances. It may have contained a sincere desire to see Jesus and hear Him converse, or it may have been mere idle curiosity. All Jerusalem was astir over the Personage who spoke as one having authority, and whose miracles none could gainsay. The Pharisees said among themselves, "Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after them." His entry into Jerusalem had been triumphant—the people had cut down branches of palm trees and strewed them in the way proclaiming before Him, "Hosanna, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." That a notable miracle had been performed, no one could deny, and indeed the chief priests consulted concerning putting Lazarus to death, because on account of Him many believed on Jesus. The multitudes that followed Him were great, and from different motives; some because others did, some from the benefits derived for themselves or friends, some from curiosity. He granted all requests to see Him, and to each meted a portion in due season. Zaccheus, we remember desired greatly to see Him, but thought His house would not be honored by the Great Teacher, but we remember the words of Jesus, "Zaccheus, make haste and come down for to-day is salvation come to thy house, and he made haste and received Him joyfully." The people beheld Him as Isaiah says, "A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." They beheld Him as one whom the Scribes and Pharisees could not entangle. To the woman at the well of Samaria He spoke in simple terms. To Nicodemus, He spoke immediately of the new birth; and when he marveled, answered "Art thou a teacher in Israel and knowest not these things?"

Let us contemplate Him in a few of the scenes through which He passed while tabernacling in the flesh. We see Him walking up the streets of Jerusalem alone toilworn and weary, we see him by the sea of Galilee teaching the waiting people, when they hung upon His word until the "day was far spent," when He had compassion on the multitude and said to His disciples, "Give ye them to eat." And when they hesitated whence to get bread to satisfy them in the wilderness, He commanded them to sit down in companies and with a few loaves and a couple of fish, fed the multitude. We see Him rebuking the boisterous waves, and shrieking wind, and immediately there was a great calm. We see Him at the grave of Lazarus, manifesting both His human and divine nature, in the temple exhibiting zeal for His Father's house, when He made a scourge of small cords and drove out them that bought and sold therein. We see Him toiling up the rugged ascent of Tabor with His three disciples. We know not of the conversation that passed between them there, but we have an account that His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light, while He held communion with Moses and Elias just from the courts of Heaven, who doubtless spake of His decease and resurrection, while over all spreads a bright cloud. No wonder awe steals over the disciples at this holding high converse with the skies. No wonder all things earthly are forgotten, and Peter in the fullness of his soul exclaims, Lord it is good for us to here, let us remain. We see Him in the large upper room, when the preparation for supper being ended He riseth therefrom and poureth water into a basin and began to wash His disciple's feet. We see His agony in the garden, when the weight of the world's salvation rested upon Him—when sympathy from God and man seemed denied. We see Him on the resurrection morn, when He addressed words of cheer to the weeping Mary; when He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men; when He journeyed with two of His disciples to Emmaus, how their hearts burned within them while He unfolded to them the Scriptures! Again, we see Him on the day of His ascension when He led His disciples out as far as Olivet, and when a cloud received Him out of their sight. We see Him as the Mediator, made a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. Again we shall see Him when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible, incorruption, for we shall be like Him.

CHASTENING LOVE.

The love that chastens is the love that saves. Yearning over the sinner, it hates and abhors the sin. Twining itself about the wayward child, it restrains and recalls the wandering feet from every sinful path. "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten." And that God whose love will not allow us to sin unrebuked, nor tolerate wrong doing in us, will yet defend His children and deliver and bless and save them forever.

"Two Rabbis," says a Jewish legend, "as they drew nigh to Jerusalem saw a fox running upon the hill of Zion. At the sight Rabbi Joshua wept, but Rabbi Elizer smiled. 'Wherefore dost thou smile?' asked the one who wept. 'Nay, wherefore dost thou weep?' said the other. 'I weep,' replied the Rabbi Joshua, 'because I see fulfilled what is written in the Lamentations: "'Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it.'"

"'And therefore do I smile,' said Rabbi Elizer, 'for in the sign that God hath fulfilled His threatenings, I see a pledge that not one of His promises shall fail!'"

So in every affliction and trial which comes upon us, we may recognize the Father's hand correcting us, or the Father's love permitting every grief, and may take comfort in the assurance that all things are working together for good to them that love God, and that He who chastens and afflicts us for our profit in this world, shall fulfill each promise of blessing made to us for days to come, and crown us with the joy and glory of His Heavenly home.—

The Christian.

Make the best possible use of wealth while living. You cannot take it to the grave, and it will only be a curse to your children if they are made to believe they have no aim in life, but to wait until you choose to leave them all your accumulations.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

B. F. MOOMAW.

In resuming our reflections upon the principle involved in this question, we next in order, consider briefly the ordinance of Feet-Washing.

As a matter of faith, the Christian world stands united upon this subject, nor could it possibly be otherwise, because in matters of faith we have no power over our volition, but are compelled by the laws of our organization to decide according to the weight of evidence adduced. This being in the case before us, so overwhelming, no intelligent person would risk their reputation by denying that it was a divine command, it fully embracing the three ideas according to Wayland, "an act designated, signified to be the will of God, that it be performed, and that we are included within the number addressed.

The discrepency only arises when opinion is substituted for faith. One is of the opinion that it is intended as a social institution, to be performed literally in the family circle. A second is of the opinion that it is to be understood figuratively, and implies an act, or actions of hospitality and benevolence, and is fully met in all its demands by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, supplying the wants in any way of the destitute. Comforting the oppressed, visiting the sick, literally washing the feet of the weary traveller, or others when filthy, or forsooth, blacking the boots and foraging the horse of the minister. A third party believes that all these, minus the blacking of boots, &c., are obligations devolving upon Christians, fully enjoined by divine authority, and that they need not be coupled to the command of Feet-washing. Hence that it may legitimately be practiced as an act of kindness when necessary, and should be performed by the Church according to the example and command of our blessed Lord and Master, and that when this is performed it secures to the believer great and precious promises, "If ye know these things happy are ye if you do them." We are of the latter party, and why? "because it is from Heaven and not from men."

It is not our purpose to discuss the comparative merits of these different propositions here, but only to show that it has the sanction of a divine command, and "that it is not of men." This is the point that I desire should be constantly kept in view. "Then to the law and to the testimony."

It is a fact well understood, that God's people, under the old covenant dispensations, performed many and various ablutions and among them was the washing of feet, both socially and sacramentally. Socially as in the case of Abraham in the plains of Mamre. Genesis 18: 4. Lot in the city of Sodom, the Levite in Bethlehem in the land of Gibeah, Judges 19: 21. Abigail at Carmel, 1 Samuel 25: 41, the exhortation of David to Uriah. 2 Samuel 11: 8, and the church represented in Songs of Solomon. 5: 3.

Sacramentally, Ex. 30:17-21, "And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, thou shalt also make me a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass to wash with all, and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein, for Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat. When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water that they die not, or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord. So they shall wash their hands and their feet—that they die not, and it shall be a statute forever unto them, even to him and to his seed throughout their generations." Moses, Aaron and his sons are the parties to whom this command was given. They well understood what was required of them, and the fatal consequence of neglecting, changing or modifying it, hence we see them as faithful stewards and true believers, obeying it to the letter. See Ex. 40:30-32, "When they went into the tent of the congregation and when they came near to the altar they washed as the Lord commanded Moses."

In the above we have a striking analogy, a counterpart in the examples and commands of Jesus Christ, the Moses like prophet, the author of our blessed Christianity. Here we see Shilo assembling his chosen, from the world apart, "among them as one that serves," laying aside his garment, fulfilling the object of his mission, delivering his Father's will, honoring it by His own example, threatning excommunication upon those refusing submission, declaring that they should have no part with Him. Oh, fatal denunciation! Like in the case of Aaron and his sons, must "wash that they die not, but otherwise if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," that ye may have life, and have it more abundantly," John 13th chapter. What care and what labor has our Savior taken to convince and satisfy our skeptical minds that this, as well as other institutions, is from Heaven, and not of men. May it not with propriety be said of this generation as to the disciples on the way to Emmaus, "Oh fools and slow of heart, to believe the things that are written in the Prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me."

The Lord's Supper and the eucharist standing in the same connection with, and so closely allied to the ordinance of Feet-washing, it is not necessary so far as our present purpose is concerned, to go into a detailed review of the evidences upon which their divine authority is predicated. The facts and circumstances establishing these also, hence no difficulty in determining "from whence they are."

The salutation of the kiss, we think deserves from us a passing notice in this connection. Standing, as it does, somewhat isolated, we conclude that it has rather a special significance, having many examples in the Old Testament of it being observed by many persons eminent for their piety and devotion to the glory of God, and the best interests of humanity, in connection with the example of the Master and the apostles, as well as the frequency of Apostolic command in the New Testament, we conclude "that it is from Heaven;" and fixes the obligations upon the servants of God to practice it, but as the when and the where is not expressed, this must be supplied according to the nature and design of the institution, which we now proceed to consider.

First, It is significant of reverence, 1 Sam. 10: 1. Samuel annointing Saul. "Then, Samuel took a vial of oil and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said, is it not because the Lord hath annointed thee to be a captain over his inheritance." 1 Kings 19: 18. And the Lord said unto Elijah, "Yet have I left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him."

2nd. Of submission to Christ, Psa. 2: 12. David addressing the sovereigns of earth, "Be wise now therefore O ye kings, be instructed ye judges of the earth, serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling, kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are they that put their trust in him.

3rd. Of love, Gen. 27: 26, 27. Isaac blessing Jacob, "said unto him, come near now and kiss me my son, and he came near and kissed him." 1 Sam. 20: 41. Jonathan and David whose hearts were knit together in affection kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David succeeded." In the observance of this duty we should constantly have these three points before the mind, reverence unto Christ, who has assured us that "what we do unto a disciple in his name, we do unto him." Thus we salute our brethren in the name of the Lord, because they are his disciple, and in submission to his authority because he has signified by his example and the express command through inspired instruments that the faithful should salute one another with an Holy kiss, and of love, signifying that fraternal affection, christian fellowship and common brotherhood that characterizes every well regulated family, especially the family of Christ. Taking this view of the subject as we do, it is clearly implied when and where it ought to be observed. Not only as an act of devotion to be performed at places of worship, but when and wherever brethren, who have been separated for a time, meet together, and when we separate not knowing whether we shall ever meet again, as well as on other occasions when circumstances demand an expression of love and fidelity. So I understand it and so the spirit moves within, and I doubt not but it will be blessed by the smiles of an approving Providence.

STRIKE AT THE ROOT.

It cannot but be considered the duty of the ministers of the Gospel and every professed follower of Christ to oppose evil of every shade and color, whenever and wherever they possibly can, not however, to select out some particular one and make it a hobby upon which to continually ride, and pass all others by without a notice. I know some who make a hobby of intemperance. It is their Alpha and Omega. The whole power of their intellect and talent is engaged in a warfare against this evil while they pay no attention to others. There are other vices besides intemperance, which must be met and conquered by the love of truth and temperance, and there are more virtues to contend for than temperance. Still intemperance is an evil of such immense proportions and wide extent that it behooves all lovers of order and good government to rise up as a man and sweep it away, root and branch.

Our penitentiaries, jails, alms-houses, and lunatic asylums are constantly crowded with the victims of this terrible vice. The only way to effectually combat the evil is to strike at its root, License.

In voting upon this question at the coming election, is there any one professing to be a christian that will stultify their sense of justice and right by voting license? What! Shall we vote liberty to those who have no more conscience than to poison our children, ruin our homes, crush our hearts, and blast our hopes. Go to some of our large cities and visit the dens of squalid poverty and then you can get a just conception of the ring of misery and wretchedness there. You will find the poor mother hanging over the smouldering embers with her little ones hovering around her piteously asking for bread. What causes this misery and woe? Nine cases out of ten, Rum. Shall we grant license to that which robs the wife of her husband and home, the children of their friend and father? The thought is preposterous. The license law has proved a failure and its results do not justify its retention and the only remedy at present is, No License. I am not afraid that whisky will hurt me but I am afraid, and have good reason to be afraid that it will hurt ten thousand others, therefore I am opposed to it and whatever else will work detrimental to the good of my fellowmen. Young men are not, as a general thing, as thoughtful and considerate as men of age and experience, and being naturally of a more active, lively temperament, they are more apt to be led astray, in the years of early boyhood. I heard a gentleman quote a verse which has never faded from my memory. "The drunkards will never be dead." I will tell you the reason. The young grow up before the old one's die" Alas how true! Nine-tenths of the drunkards of to-day were led astray when they were young. We seldom see a person who has arrived at the years of manhood, start in the downward course of the common drunkard. They learn to love liquor when young and it grows with them as they grow older. Let us take a look at some of the statistical reports and see the terrible amount of vice and crime that is the result of this nefarious traffic in ardent spirits.

Rum pauperism costs the United States annually $35,000,000. Rum sickness, $1,000,000 annually. The number that die drunkards 80,000; the number sent to prison, 200,000; the number of young men who annually become drunkards, 600,000; the number of children reduced to a state worse than orphanage, 200,000. Only think of it, two hundred thousand little ones upon the cold charities of the world every year. Thousands grow up in ignorance and vice, the girls not having the necessary care, admonition and instruction to shield and guide them, fall victims to the lusts of man. The boys, exposed to all the temptations of vice, grow up thieves and pickpockets and end their career in State prison or on the gallows. I am told that religion costs the United States annually $12,000,000 and crime $40,000,000. Lawyers $70,000,000; Rum, $200,000,000. Think of that, child of God, enough spent for Rum to send a missionary to every dark and benighted corner of the earth.

The local option law may not be adequate to accomplish the desired end, but then it is a step in the right direction and the best we can do for the present is to make use of it. If we cannot have a perfect plan to oppose evil, better have an imperfect one than none at all. It is, or should be an object of every professed Christian to save some from the ultimate ruin of the world. What can you do with a drunken man, can you reason with him? You might as well preach to the stars as to him. What can we do with a man that is enslaved to liquor? I think I am safe in asserting that not one out of a thousand break the chains of their thralldom and gain or regain a respectable position in society. Then why not make use of the helping hand the government holds out to us and with it endeavor to remove the source of so much crime and misery, and one of the greatest obstacles that impedes the progress of the cause of Christ. He is a wise man that knows his opportunity and makes use of it.

CHRIST THE RISEN SAVIOR. NO. 2

"Now is Christ risen from the dead."

Universal History, observation and experience prove that the world lieth in wickedness, idolatry, superstition and impiety, and every kind of vice and misery has, in all ages, covered and desolated the earth. But it hath pleased God, of His infinite mercy, to reveal Himself to sinful men to make known a way in which they might be reconciled to Him and recovered to holiness, and thus to introduce a religion suited to rectify the disorders of the world, and unite the honor of His name with the eternal happiness of innumerable millions. Miracles, and the resurrection of the Redeemer, especially formed a suitable demonstration that this religion came from God and served to arrest the attention of mankind, for alas! sinners in general, are too much concerned about the affairs of this life to notice those things which relate to God and their eternal state. There are reasons assigned for a divine interposition on this occasion. The Jews, the most inveterate enemies of Christianity, preserve with profound veneration and scrupulous care, the books of the Old Testament which have been handed down in the same manner, from generation to generation during a long succession of ages. These books contained a system of prophecy centering in the person and redemption of the Messiah, and among other particulars, His sufferings and death are foretold with clear intimations of His resurrection and subsequent glorious Kingdom. We know also that the gospels were made public in the earliest ages of Christianity, for they are continually quoted and referred to by those writers whose works have been preserved, and from them we learn that our Lord predicted His own death, and resurrection on the third day in so explicit a manner that the Jewish rulers were aware of it and took their measures accordingly. Yet when the body of Christ was delivered to Joseph they were so fully satisfied by what they saw and heard of His being dead, that they made no objection on that ground, but they requested Pilate that the sepulcher might be securely closed and guarded by Roman Soldiers until the third day was past, lest the disciples should steal His body and say that He was risen again.

After all their precaution, the body was gone and they were never able to show by whom it was taken or what became of it. Here let us pause that we may consider the credibility of testimony. One consistent witness of sound understanding and fair character, who has no apparent interest in deceiving, is often deemed sufficient to determine the sentence of life or death, the most important of all temporal concerns. But if three or four such witnesses should agree that they saw such a murder committed by the prisoner at the bar, no sober man could doubt the fact or scruple to pronounce him guilty. Now there were twelve appointed witnesses to the resurrection of Christ, of plain, good understanding, and unexceptionable character; for Peter's denial of his Lord through the force of sudden temptation forms no impeachment of his integrity, seeing he so honestly confessed his guilt and so fully proved the sincerity of his repentance by his subsequent conduct. And when Judas by transgression fell, another was chosen in his place. These witnesses had constantly attended Jesus during some years and must have been competent to know Him from all other men. They were remarkably incredulous respecting His resurrection, and His crucifixion seems almost to have extinguished their hopes. How then can it be supposed that they would have attempted to overpower or deceive the vigilant and valient soldiers, and to steal the body of Jesus. In so desperate an undertaking they would have been sure to excite the combined rage of both the Jewish and Roman rulers and success could only expose them to hatred, persecution and all kind of hardships and sufferings. It is manifest that from the time they began to bear witness to the resurrection of Christ, they renounced all prospects of worldly interest, ease or greatness, and willingly embraced poverty, labor, contempt, bonds, stripes and perils as their portion so that no possible account can be given of their conduct unless it be ascribed to a principle of conscience. The strict and exact morality of their writings demonstrate that they could not be actuated by false principles, for they do not allow, in any case, to do evil that good may come, and they condemn all kinds of impositions with the most decided severity. Is it then possible for human beings deliberately to choose temporal and eternal misery, and to persevere in derided adherence to a plan which on their own principles, insures their damnation in another world as well as a complication of miseries in this present life?

The witnesses of our Lord's resurrection survived that event for a long time, some of them nearly forty years, and John still more. They were after a while, separated into different parts of the world and seemed to have no common interest exeept in the success of Christianity. They passed through a series of the severest trials and almost all of them died martyrs in the cause. But no change of circumstances or situation no promises or threatnings of men, no repeated tortures or impending dangers induced one of them, in the smallest degree, to waver in His testimony. They declared unanimously that on the third morning after the crucifixion a vision of angels told some of their company at the sepulcher that their Lord was risen; that afterwards they all saw Him repeatedly; that they examined His hands, feet and side; and were sure it was the same body which had been nailed to the cross; that He ate and drank with them several times; that at length, after giving particular instructions relative to their future conduct, He ascended from among them until a cloud intercepted their sight of Him; and that two angels appearing unto them, declared He was gone to Heaven. Such an unwavering, persevering testimony of twelve persons whose holy lives, diligent labors, disinterestedness and patient sufferings, evince their sincerity and form complete proof

What to Take Home.—A loving heart and a pleasant countenance are commodities which a man should never fail to take home with him. They will best season his food and soften his pillow. It were a great thing for a man that his wife and children could say of him: "He never brought a frown or unhappiness across his threshold."

"The gospel of the Kingdom" is the burden of every true ministry, the life of every sincere church, the inspiration of every devout soul, and the hope of deliverance and salvation to every lost sinner.

CONVERSATION ON DRESS.

Eld. Well, sister, what shall I do? "Preach the word" as Paul admonished Timothy, or cripple the truth, and come down to pander to the follies of the ages? How can I do otherwise than to proclaim against this thing, when Paul says for women to adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array?

Mrs. A. That is only Paul's opinion, you know that some things which he said were only his opinion.

Eld. Paul says, "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." Wherever he said anything that was not the commandment of the Lord, he has taken express pains to tell us so. Peter also speaks of this matter in a similar manner.

Mrs. A. I was not aware that Peter said anything about it.

Eld. Oh yes; Peter says: "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel." 1 Pet. 3: 3.

Mrs. A. Well they did not mean we should not wear any gold, but that we should not go to excess and pride in these things. I don't think actually, that the Lord cares what we wear, if we don't have our affections on it. I do not believe in going to excess in this thing, I never did care anything about finger-rings, and could see no use in them.

Eld. Why was it not just as easy for Peter and Paul to say, Don't have your affections on your dress, as to say in plain terms, not to "put on" or wear gold. You are aware that when people pattern after another, the tendency is for each person to go a little farther than his pattern. For instance, if you wear those articles you are pleading for, the next one might for four or five finger-rings; and the next one for a bracelet; and so on without limit. Now you say these texts condemn extremes in jewels and dress; and as you question the manner in which I apply them, won't you be so kind as to tell me where to lay down a line of distinction, so that, in instructing the people, they may know what is excess in jewels.

Mrs. A. Well don't say anything about it at all, let every one's conscience be the guide in these matters.

Eld. But sister, you are aware that conscience is the result of instruction. To have a good conscience the mind must be properly instructed. The poor Hindoo mother who throws her child into the jaws of the crocodile, is prompted to it by her conscience. She is instructed that he is the river God, and that his open jaws are an invitation to give her child to her God. Our minds should be instructed by the Bible, and our conscience be such that we should tremble at the Lord's word. We should not seek to please ourselves, and bring God's word to our terms.

Mrs. A. I think it is descending to small particulars to pay any attention to such things, and in dress I think every one should be left to do as they please.

Eld. Well sister, it would be a strange way to train up children, to let them always do as they please. Christians are admonished as "new born babes to receive the sincere milk of the word" that they may grow thereby. How else shall we make progress than by being admonished of our errors, submitting to the Lord's word, and putting away our sins.

Mrs. A. Well, it will only bring the frown of other denominations upon us, to be so particular.

Eld. But are you not aware that the Methodists in their discipline protest against wearing gold, and refer to these testimonies in Timothy and Peter to enforce their positions. If they fail to live up to their discipline that is no reason why we should fail live up to the Bible. On this account, where there is such a tendency with the masses to go into excess in dress and pleasure-seeking. I think it is important for those who would have the Lord's favor, and "shine as lights in the world" to carefully seek in all things to comply with his word.

Mrs. A. Well, I had thought of being baptized and uniting with the Church, but I do not wish to connect myself with a people who are going to watch me all the time. I presume I can find somebody who will baptize me, as for organization I am suspicious of it.

Eld. I presume, sister, there are many who will take in members, and let them do as they please, if they keep up a form of religion; but the question is whether such things are going to stand the test of the judgment. It seems to me it is the proper way to learn all our wrongs here, and put them away, that we may be prepared for the judgment. I should not wish to belong to a Church that watched me to pick flaws with my endeavors to do right, but if they watched over me for good, and meekly tried to instruct me in the right way, above all people, I should consider them my best friends.

Mrs. A. Well, I must be going. Good day.

Eld. Sister do not decide these matters hastily. Pray over them carefully; consider us as your friends.

Religious News.

For 1872, the different Baptist Churches claim 100,000 additions.

BRIGHAM YOUNG wants a kingdom. One of the Sandwich islands, he thinks, would answer his purpose. He is convinced that nothing short of this will save his pet relic from destruction.

The General Baptists seems to be in earnest in making a move towards establishing churches in towns and cities. We know of another church that should imbibe more of this spirit.

EXPULSION FOR COVETOUSNESS.—The American Christian Review, in referring to the statement that men are never excluded from the churches for the grave sin of covetousnes, asserts its knowledge of five men, all in good circumstances and good standing in the community, who were expelled at one time from the Disciples church in Little Flat Rock, Indiana, for that sin. No other charge was made against them. They had refused to pay their proportion of the cost of a new meetinghouse.

The Herald of Truth says: "Thro' a letter from M. C Hazard of Chicago, we are informed that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has succeeded in making an arrangement with the trans-Atlantic transportation companies by which the fare for the Mennonites who wish to emigrate from Russia and settle upon the lands on the line of their road, is reduced to £10,4, or about $50,00 American money. This makes the expense of the journey very much less than usual.

FOREIGN.—Victor Emanuel of Italy is reported in a precarious condition of health. The Spanish Republic has not yet reached unruffled seas. A second ministry has been elected since the revolution, and the aspirants to the throne are becoming more clamerous. The Carlists claim 35,000 men in the field. Families are flying in great numbers to France. An immense fraud on the Bank of England has been discovered. The supposed perpetrators are Americans.

Among other amendments to the Constitution of the United States the following is proposed:

TO THE HONORABLE THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The undersigned citizens of the United States petition your honorable bodies for such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as shall suitably express our national acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source of all authority in civil government, of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations, and his revealed will as of supreme authority; and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all the Christian laws, institutions and usages of the government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

A STUPID ROW.—There has been a stupid row in Alpena, Mich. The small-pox prevailing, the authorities, to prevent contagion, ordered the schools and churches to be closed. The Rev. Mr. Sakkew, of the Catholic Church, refused to close his place of worship, upon the ground that he was "under superior orders."

The Mayor sent a body of policeman to prevent the church from being opened on Sunday, but some of the congregation getting in by the back door, the priest recommended them to set the law at defiance, and come again at 2 o'clock p.m. Trouble and perhaps bloodshed would have occurred had not the matter been laid before the Bishop, who at once ordered the priest to obey the law.

MORAVIAN.—At Bethlehem, Pa., is the principal Moravian settlement in this country, and a unique and interesting community it is. Well to do in this world's goods, the members devote their large receipt almost exclusively to church and educational purposes. Their house of worship is large, and the regular congregation of the village averages a thousand members, who are divided into choirs or societies. One is composed of children, another of boys and girls, another of unmarried women and still another of married people; and each of these societies has its meetings and love feasts from time to time, which are generally delightful social occasions. The Moravians give heed to their music, for a huge choir leads the congregation, and singing occupies a large portion of the service.

THE NEW YORK OBSERVER is discussing the propriety of amending their system of educating men for the ministry. Under the present system the Church is obligated to educate all students furnished by the different Presbyteries whether they seem adapted to the calling or not. The reform contended for is to educate only such as have special abilities for that calling. Notwithstanding the Presbyterian ministry is largely of such as have called themselves, yet they profess a divine calling as the following will show: Every young man called of God to preach, would in good time be brought into the ministry without the aid of a church institution to help him. But as we have the Institution, it must be so administered as to sift out the dull, and educate as nearly as possible only those whom God has called.

WHAT CHILDREN CAN DO.

It is not much that we can give
In doing good to others;
But we in joy and peace can live
With sisters and with brothers.

To playmates all we can be kind,
And fill their hearts with gladness;
Our parent's wishes we can mind,
And crown their lives with gladness.

And more than all we can obey
The precepts of our Savior;
And prove our love to Him each day
By goodness of behavior.

So, whether short, or whether long
The life that is assigned us;
A memory like a pleasant song
We all may leave behind us.

FOUR SERVANTS OF SATAN.

Dear young friends, Satan has a great many servants, and they are very busy, running about doing all the harm they can. I know four of them, and some of the mischief they have done. I found out their names, and I want to put you on your guard against them, for they are very sly. They will make you believe they are your friends. They appear sociable, easy, good-natured, and not too much in a hurry. They seem to wait your own time, and entice you when you least expect it.

"Oh, we want you to enjoy yourselves," they say, "and not be so particular:" and the arguments they use are very taking, at least I must think so, since so many of the young listen to them and are led away by them.

And all I believe, because they did not know, in the first place, who was speaking to them. They were deceived. They did not see it was satan's uniform they had on. Do you ask for their names? Here they are;

"There's no danger." That is one.

"Only this-once." That is another.

"Everybody-does-so" is the third, and "By-and-by" is the fourth.

If you are tempted to leave God's house, and break the Sabbath day to go for a sail or a ride, and "Only this once" or "Everybody-does-so" whispers at your elbow, know it is false. The great evil of one sin is, that you bring your heart and conscience into such a state that you will be likely to go on sinning: for there is not half so much to stop you as there was to prevent you setting out at first. Hold no parley with "Only-this-once," or "Everybody-does-so." Listen to their dangerous counsels, no, not for a moment.

Are you thinking seriously about the welfare of your soul? Has the Holy Spirit fastened upon your conscience the solemn warnings of a faithful teacher, and brought to mind a tender mother's prayer for your conversion? Does the tear start in your eye, and are you almost persuaded to choose Christ and that better part which cannot be taken from you? That is a moment when "By-and-by" hovers near to snatch your confidence and persuade you to put away serious things. It succeeded with poor Felix when Paul preached to him, and the Roman ruler was "almost persuaded to become a Christian." "By-and-by" whispered in his ear. He put off his soul's salvation to a more convenient season, and it never came.

"By-and-by is a cheat as well as a liar. By putting you off, he means to cheat your soul of Heaven. God says now; "Now is the accepted time and the day of salvation." He never asks you to postpone it. He makes no promises and no provisions for "By-and-by."

Dear children, be on your guard against these four servants of satan, in little things as well as in great ones for their only aim is to harm and ruin you.—British Messenger.

HENRY AND HIS HABIT.

Henry Town is a good enough boy in some respects. He is amiable and truthful, and pleasant in his manners, but in matters where he is required to take upon himself any burden of responsibility or trust, he is a broken reed.

"Henry," says his sister, "will you be sure to put this letter in the post-office for me?"

"Oh! certainly."

"Now you won't forget it?"

"No, really I won't."

"It is to uncle Thomas about meeting me in New York, and if he doesn't get it and come to the station for me, I shall hardly know what to do."

"Oh! I'll be sure to put it in," and Henry takes the letter and goes off. He really intends to go to the post-office the first thing, but on the way down he meets a companion, who has something to say about a sailing party, and Henry forgets the letter entirely, until about three hours after the mail. Then he drops it in and thinks no more about it, only to answer, "Oh! yes," when asked if he had done his errand.

The consequence is, that when his sister gets to New York, where she has never been before, there is no one to meet her. She has to find her way to the other side of Brooklyn alone; takes the wrong car, and only finds her friends at the end of a very troubled, distressed anxious day. She is not well or strong; the fatigue and the worry made her ill for a week, and the whole pleasure is spoiled because Henry could not take the trouble to keep his mind on one subject long enough to post a letter.

I might multiply instances of the worry, disappointment, and wear and tear of the tempers and feelings of others occasioned by Henry's habits, but one is enough.

Henry is always very sorry, and never means to do so again; but the trouble is he does not mean not to do so, and I fear he will never reform, unless he takes to heart the lesson, "What thy hands find to do, do with thy might."—Child's World.

MANNERS.

Manners are more important than money. A boy who is polite and pleasant in his manners will always have friends, and will not often have enemies. Good behavior is essential to prosperity. A boy feels well when he does well. If you wish to make everybody pleasant about you, and gain friends wherever you go, cultivate good manners. Many boys have pleasant manners for company, and ugly manners for home.

We visited a small railroad town, not long since, and were met at the depot by a little boy of about eleven or twelve years, who conducted us to the house of his mother, and entertained and cared for us in the absence of his father, with as much polite attention and thoughtful care, as the most cultivated gentleman could have done. We said this to his mother before we left her home, "You are greatly blessed in your son; he is so attentive and obliging."

"Yes," she said; "I can always depend on Charlie when his father is absent. He is a great help and comfort to me." She said this as if it did her heart good to acknowledge the cleverness of her son.

The best manners cost so little, and are worth so much, that every boy can have them.—Youth's Guide.

UPWARD AND ONWARD.

BY LORAIN S. HILBERT.

This should be the watchword of every American boy. Striving against the wrong, overcoming all evil habits, let us persevere in all we do. Let us be fair and honest in all our dealings with every one.

We should be truthful in small things as well as in great, ever working our way upward and onward. Let us remember that, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." If we would win fame we must work for it. It will never do to be idle. If we would make our mark in the world, we must begin while we are boys. It is not necessary that, to be great, we should be rich. Many men, such as Lincoln, Franklin and others, were once poor boys; they worked up and on to high positions in life, esteemed by all who knew them. If others have done it, why should not we? We can if we only try. Let us all, therefore, struggle to this end.

Upward and onward ever,
Battling 'gainst wrong in our youth,
Let us put forth every endeavor,
And struggle for virtue and truth.

VISIT TO THE YOSEMITE VALLEY.

The following was intended for the Youth's Department, but as it will be of general interest to all our readers, we give it a place under this head. We speak for our young readers in behalf of an account of the Geysers and hope sister Kate will send it without further invitation. Ed.

CORDELIA, CAL.
February 22d, '73.

Dear PILGRIM readers:—I have long thought of writing for your edification if Bros. Brumbaugh will give it a place in their worthy paper. I am taking the PILGRIM and think it a good paper. I often see good articles from dear sisters which encourages me to try to write a little. I only wish I was able to do justice to the subject I wish to write about. I know there are very many dear children and others who will never get to visit this country and see the wonderful curiosities that are here. I have traveled around a good deal, and saw many things which I would love to speak about, but I will only give you a short history of our trip to Yosemite Falls and the Big Trees.

I left home August 6th in company with my husband and three little ones, my sister Lou Reader and her husband, and a Mr. George Reader, lately from Illinois. They were out here on a visit and did not like to return without seeing as much of California as they could. We took our conveyance and camped out, as we have no fear of rain here in the dry season. I think this one of the best countries in the world to travel in, we can camp for months and not get rained upon. The first night from home we camped near the foot of Mount Diabalo, a noted Mount. They have numerous earthquakes there and the best coal in the State is found on Mount Diabalo. The next night we stayed at brother Overholsers, on the San Joaquin, where we were kindly cared for. There we met sister Goan, who lives on the Sacramento river, next day we called on brother H. Fry, but did not stay long as they were in the midst of thrashing. We crossed the San Joaquin river and stopped with brother Haines' folks for dinner and spent the afternoon there, had a very pleasant visit and a good time, enjoyed it very much—they have a nice home and are well provided with the necessaries of life. From there we went to brother George Wolf's where we were kindly received by all the family,—that evening brother and sister Pennington came and we had some good singing, Bros. John and Joseph and his wife all being good singers, and being well supplied with singing books. After a season of prayer, we retired for the night, rest-morning, with sister Wolf's assistance, we did some more cooking preparatory to starting, as we knew we would be out several days before reaching Yosemite Falls. They also provided us with some of their nice cans of honey which were quite a luxury. After leaving brother Wolf's we had several days travel among strangers, but we met with great kindness everywhere. I forget how many days we were out, but we traveled 'till we could no farther with our wagons, and then camped for the night. Early next morning our men folks went to the hotel and hired saddles for the day at $1.00 a piece, so we mounted our horses and mules and began to descend. The first half mile was pretty good, but it kept getting worse and worse 'till our trail looked almost like a thread winding around the steep rugged mountains, it was just all we could do to stick to our horses. It was so rough and steep in many places, that several times I began to think we could never make the trip. If our horses had made a misstep we would have been hurled down thousands of feet some places almost perpendicular into the Merced river as it went foaming and gushing below us. There are a great many ladies who have to be lashed fast to the animal they ride, and then just give the animal the rein and not pretend to guide them and they go down all right. They have good steady mules and ponies on purpose for the trip.

My sister and I thought we would rather take the chance than to be tied fast to our horses. It is 2½ miles down into the valley, and the valley is 5 miles long and the scenery on the whole route is so beautiful and grand that it is beyond description. There are thousands of persons visit the valley every year for the purpose of seeing the Yosemite Falls. They are said to be the highest in the known world. There are other Falls in the valley but none so high as the Yosemite. They have a good hotel in the valley and are doing a little farming there, but everything has to be packed down.

I will give a list of altitudes at Yosemite Valley of the principal waterfalls. First cataract 900 feet, Bridal veil Falls 980 feet. It is rightly named, it looks like a long white gauze veil, 'tis beautiful. Next is Yosemite, this is in three falls, first fall 1,609 feet, second 600 feet, third 434 feet, total, 2,634 feet. Varial 350 feet, Nevada 700, South Fork 600, Royal Arch Falls 1,000 feet.

The valley is surrounded with very high mounts, and some of them perpendicular and so smooth nothing could climb them. They all have names, will only give a few. One is called Elcapitor, Indian name, Tuckamula, signifies great chief of the valley, so named by the Indians. About two-thirds of the way up the mountain is a good picture of a man with hat on and side whiskers. It is the work of nature as no human being could ever get there. It is 3300 feet high. Sentiral Dome 4,500, Cap of Liberty 4,000, Mt. Star King 500, Clouds Rest 6,034 feet. As we came from Yosemite Falls we came by the grove of Big Trees, situated in Carveras Co. They are said to be the largest in the world. There are perhaps one hundred or more, and they are all named. Some of the bark off of the mother of the forest was sent to the woald's fair. They have been badly used, some of them dead and others badly burned. One, called uncle Tom's Cabin, was burned so much that my little boy rode in horse back and turned around. The father of the forest has been dead a long time. It is rather the largest of any in the grove, having a length of 480 ft. It is partly burned out for quite a distance. We rode through that for curiosity's sake. There is another large tree cut down and a saloon or dancing hall on the stump of it. We were in it, I believe it is about 31 ft across. We also got to see the Mariposa trees, but they are not quite so large as the Colveras Grove. I believe there are trees in South America that is said to be taller than these, but not near so large around. We collected quite a number of things while out on our trip, were out about three weeks and traveled about 500 miles, we also got to see one of the natural bridges, which is quite a curiosity. We went over it and under it. it is on the Stanislaus river and a very perfect bridge.

Now dear children I have told you of this to show you how many beautiful things God has made for us and to show His goodness, power and wisdom. We know that He is all-wise and has created everything for some good purpose. Although there are many things that we cannot see what they are for, yet they are for some purpose, as nothing was made in vain. Now I ask of you to be good children, read the PILGRIM, for in it you will get much instruction, it is a good paper and I love to look over its pages. If you request, I will give a sketch of the Great Gnysers at some time as I have been there also.

KATE GAMBEL.

Bros. Brumbaugh:—Permit me to drop a few lines to the PILGRIM for the purpose of informing the brethren and sisters that we, according to previous arrangements, had brother H. D. Davy to come on the 8th of February and preach for us. He came according to promise, and delivered thirteen sermons with power and demonstration of the spirit, to the satisfaction of those within and without as was made manifest in a few days, by the surrendering of the carnal mind. Six precious souls came forward and demanded baptism. Many more had their affections taken from earth and placed on things above, and are "counting the cost." O may they speedily get through, and come for refuge into the Kingdom that Christ set up while in the woald.

Brethren and sisters, how long are we going to remember the good counsels and admonitions given by our beloved brother. Let us ever remember them and profit thereby. Let us not be "hearers only" and thereby be deceived, "but be ye doers of the word," then the blessing.

The impressions made were deep and lasting I think, both in saint and sinner. The meetings were well attended, good order and good attention given to the word spoken. Bro. Davy spoke as the spirit gave him utterance, so let God be praised for all the good done by mortal man, and we his subjects, benefitted. Our meeting was held in the brick meeting-house, near Hagerstown, Indiana.

JOSEPH HOLDER.

Dear Editor:—I thought to write a few lines for the PILGRIM, I am well pleased with it and want you to continue it. About Church news, I cannot say much as there is no church organized here. There are 9 members here within ten miles. We had two meetings here this winter held by brother Isaac Hershy. The people were all well pleased with his sermons and want him to come back. The people here seem to be very anxious for the Brethren to come here and locate. The news was before the Rutland Center Farmer's Club that there was a colony of Dunkards coming West, and they made arrangements to meet them in Kansas City to bring them here to Montgomery Co., also made preparations to accommodate them while looking around for homes. Now brethren you can see that the people here are desirous of you coming. Whether this colony is coming I do not know, but was discussed as given, in my presence.

I will now say a little about our country here. We have one of the best countries in the State, well watered and a great deal of good timber, and land is cheap yet. Land sells from $5.00 to $20.00 per acre with good improvements. If any wish more particulars about the country, address, WM. MERRY, Independence, Montgomery Co. Kan.

A TALK WITH OUR READERS.

Five months ago we announced our departure from the PILGRIM Office for the purpose of attending school. Now we are happy to inform you that we are again at home, and as we have been absent for some time, of course we feel like talking a little to our readers. During our absence we were in a measure cut off from the relation which we sustain to our patrons, at least we had not access to the private correspondence, and it is through this medium that we receive our greatest encouragement. If we were to publish the many words of encouragement and approval it would require more space than should be given for this purpose. Our readers can feel assured however that these good words are not lost. They have done much towards strengthening and animating us in our labors in the past. Since our arrival at home, we are informed that our private correspondence this year is full of these words of cheer and encouragement, and indeed the general approval with which the PILGRIM is meeting is all that can be expected and desired. It is true the circulation is not as large as it should be, but there are reasons for this. Money is very scarce and there are many places in the Brotherhood where the PILGRIM is unknown. In view of this we are patient, feeling assured that if we are faithful, and try at all times to be governed by correct Christian principles, our labors, ums; finally be crowned with success. "God helps those who help themselves," and we shall try to do all in our power to make our undertaking a success, and effectual to the furtherance of the good cause, and then if it be in consonance with God's will we may expect His help. In view of the many words of encouragement, and a consciousness of right we look forward with bright hopes, hoping that our brethren and sisters may be moved and stirred up from their lethargy in regard to our periodicals, that they will be more and more impressed with them as means for disseminating truth and exposing error. It is true our periodicals may often be impregnated with impurities, and on this account some object to them. But this is no reason why they should be discarded. The clear sparkling rivulet that meanders through the valleys, and the bubbling spring presents the idea of purity, but as they course their way from their source they become impregnated with impurities; yet impure as they are, the trees, the shrubbery and flowers along their course receive moisture that gives vigor, and besides all this, the thirst of thousands of beings is quenched. So it is with reference to our periodicals. They claim to point the reader to Jesus the great fountain Head from whence issues the clear bubbling stream of the waters of life. The source—the intentions are all right, but as men attempt to convey this truth who are all polluted with sin and uncleanness, it becomes tarnished with the most prominent corruptions of our nature. But impure as it may be, if we have been learning of Jesus, we may, like the tainted waters of the rivulet, give nourishment. Our brethren and sisters may be strengthened, and even the poor famishing sinner may come and drink. Brethren, if we are only honest, and go directly to the great fountain Head for our knowledge, it it does become slightly impregnated with the corruptions of our nature, it may still do its work.

The PILGRIM at times, may have been found to contain a large per cent of dross. Help us readers to make improvement. When you write be sure that you have an object in view, and let that object be the honor and glory of God. Endeavor to feel what you write and also the responsibility. Remember words have power, and a small drop of ink falling like dew upon a thought, produces that which may mold the mind of thousands. If all our contributors will be influenced by the good Spirit when they write, our periodicals must certainly become a power for good.

In conclusion, we make an urgent request that our readers continue their efforts to increase our circulation. This year we will be obliged to spend considerable in order to carry on the publication of the PILGRIM successfully. In this we know that many are anxious that we shall be successful, and will no doubt rally to our aid. A long pull, a steady pull and a pull altogether, is all that is needed to largely increase our circulation.

DAILY GRAPHIC

All the News and Full of Pictures.

THE DAILY GRAPHIC is the title of a newspaper, published in New York, which is achieving the most remarkable journalistic success ever chronicled. It is an eight-page evening paper (three editions daily), elegantly printed, and conducted by the ablest editorial talent attainable.

As a newspaper THE DAILY GRAPAIC stands in the first rank, and contains regularly

The very Latest and Fullest News from all parts of the World.

Its great feature consists in the fact that it is not only a newspaper, but an Illustrated Newspaper as well. Four of its pages are filled with choice reading matter—telegrams, editorials, general and local news, items, gossip, and correspondence on the freshest and most interesting topics. The remaining four pages consist of executed in the most faultless and artistic style, and portraying accurately and fully all leading events within twenty-four hours after their occurrence. Those who have made journalism a study, and fully appreciate the great enterprise manifested in the collection and publication of news by the aid of the telegraph, steam presses, and the development of journalistic talent, have been fond of advancing the theory that the next advance in that field would result in a newspaper furnishing in its regular issues pictures of all current prominent events. That theory is a theory no longer; the newspaper of the future is the newspaper of to-day, and that paper is THE DAILY GRAPHIC. The processes which render this marvellous achievement an existing fact are the result of the most careful study and endless variety of experiments, gradually perfected during the past twelve years. They depend upon improvements in lithography and the application of the photographic camera. By their aid a picture is made ready to print in from twenty minutes to two hours. Costly and elaborate plates, works of art, scenes of interest, are reproduced and pictured forth with equal facility and the most scrupulous fidelity. Illustrations of leading events are engraved and prepared for the press even before the accompanying written narrative or description leaves the hands of the compositor.

For the proper practical working of so great an enterprise, THE GRAPHIC Company was formed, with a Capital of $500.000 in Gold.

months and months before the first issue of THE DAILY GRAHHIC, the most extensive preparations were made, and to-day THE GRAPHIC Company has

The Largest and Most Complete Newspaper Establishment in the United States.

In the great work of illustrating the events of the day an extensive corps of the best known and most accomplished artists are constantly engaged.

THE DAILY GRAPHIC aims to be in its strictest sense a newspaper. Striving always to be just and truthful, it discusses all questions independently and impartially. It is not the organ of any party, sect, or creed. It is always high toned, and contains nothing to offend any taste. Its contents give it an immense advantage over the "old fashioned" papers. The annual subscriber gets a HOPE.

Never despair! The darkest cloud
That ever loomed will pass away,
The longest night will yield to dawn—
The dawn will kindle into day.
What if around thy lonely bark
Break fierce and high the waves of sorrow,
Stretch every oar! there's land ahead!
And thou wilt gain the port to-morrow.

When fortune frowns, and summer friends
Like birds that fear a storm, depart,
Some, if the heart hath tropic warmth,
Will stay and nestle round thy heart.
If thou art poor, no joy is won,
No good is gained by sad repining,
Gems, buried in the darkened earth,
May yet be gathered for the mining.

There is no lot however sad,
There is no roof however low,
But has some joy to make it glad,
Some latent bliss to soothe its woe.
The light of hope will linger near,
When wildest beats the heart's emotion;
A talisman when breakers roar,
A star upon the troubled ocean.

The farmer knows not if his field
With flood, or drought, or blight must cope;
He questions not the fickle skies,
But ploughs, and sows, and toils in hope.
Then up, and strive, and dare, and do,
Nor doubt a harvest you will gather;
'Tis time to labor and to wait,
And trust in God for genial weather.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE CHURCH AND DUTIES OF HER MEMBERS—NO. 1.

I purpose, in these papers, to present to the consideration of my dear brethren and sisters a few thoughts upon the duties and obligations that necessarily devolve upon each member of the Body of Christ in their relative calling and station. First I propose to speak of the laity or private members, so called. Secondly, of the deacons. Thirdly, of the ministers in the first and second degree. Fourthly, of Elders or Bishops, and lastly, of the whole Church in a comprehensive sense as one united body. In the first place then to begin with the,

LAITY.

We would remark that those who are, by way of distinction, so classed constitute the body in the main, and the officers of the church are an outgrowth, in one sense of the word, from the same. Inasmuch as the body of each individual member, born of God, is the temple of the Holy Ghost, so the Church—body of Christ,—should be truly a holy habitation for the indwelling of the Divine light and life. As the ocean is made up of drops of water, so the Church is composed of individual members. If all the drops of water that fall into a reservoir be pure, the whole body of water will be pure. On the other hand, just in proportion to the impure drops that fall in, in the same proportion will the body be impure. So with the Church, the purity of the same depends upon the individual members that compose the body. Just in proportion to the number of working members there are in the Church, in that proportion the body will be an active working body. There are degrees in life and activity. One man may be alive and capable of action to some extent, but because of diseased and crippled members of his body he can barely breathe, and his action is sluggish, and in that condition he can accomplish little or nothing. Another has more of the vitalizing principles of life, his members but little injured by disease, such a one may go forth and brave the dangers of life,—bring any energy into play—and in the end accomplish much. Just so with the Church. If every member of the body is alive and healthy, much may be accomplished, otherwise, if the members are sluggish and sin-diseased, but little will be accomplished in the conversion of the world. What is true in this relation of the whole Church, is true of local churches or congregations. When the vital principles of "pure and undefiled religion" predominates over everything else in the members, the body will be a "light to the world and salt to the earth," but if the light be darkness, great is the darkness indeed. If the salt lose its savor, how shall the earth be salted—how the world be saved from the corrupting influence of sin? Enough has been said, we hope, to show to every reflecting mind that each and every member of the Church has weighty duties to perform, and the obligations resting upon them are of no little moment. Sometimes we come across members who live and act as though nothing more was required of them than to retain their membership in the Church. Being a member of the Church seems to be the height of their ambition. The essence of their religion seems to be wrapped up in "I am a professor," independent of the duties and obligations that devolve upon a possessor of pure religious principles. They live as though nothing was required of them other than what tends to their own individual interest.

Peter in his first epistle says; "Laying aside all malice and all guile, and hypocrisies and envies, and all evil speaking, as new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby, if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming as unto a living stone, * * * ye also, as lively stones, are built upon a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifice, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

Believers coming to Christ, come as to a "living stone" and receiving His spirit, they become as "lively stones" working together in love, that the Church may be a "spiritual house," full of life, zeal and activity. A "holy priesthood"— a "peculiar people" such as are acceptable to God—are truly His people. Believe it then individual member, although you belong to the laity, as a member of the organization to which you belong, you are duty bound to labor, with the rest in the common salvation. Think not that because you are a member in a private capacity, you are exempt from duty such as tends to the building up of Zion. Who in the armies of the living God in ancient days were instrumental, in the hands of God, of bringing about victory? We answer, in a great measure, it was the privates. The captains gave orders but their hopes of success lay in the courage and demeanor of their private soldiers. With drawn weapons of warfare they pursued the enemy close and strong and victory perched upon their banners. So it is with the armies of God's people. The Captain of our salvation may command, the officers of the Church herald the orders but success depends, in a great measure, upon the valor and conduct of the "private" soldiers of the cross. What can or what must the private soldier do may be asked? The answer is, "do what you can," obey the orders of your Captain,—the Lord Jesus Christ. You may live isolated from the body of the congregation to which you belong, yet you have no right to be "off duty." You have a desire for your neighbors to be enlisted in company with you. Occasionally the truth is preached, but the desired effect is not produced. Is there not a cause? Look to it brother or sister, and see if the cause is not in the fact you have not on the "whole armor of God" therefore the enemy shifts you along in the popular current. When your neighbor jests in an unbelieving manner, you may encourage the same by a manner of levity, or perhaps put in a word to help along, when a silent, grave look of reproof might have gone home to his heart. Or when your neighbor "drinks" you drink, just in a sociable way you know! Or when he talks politics and of worldly things, generally you seem to be a fit companion for him. Can you wonder when the faith you profess is preached it falls so cold on your neighbor's heart. The truth may be preached with power, but if there is not a favorable expression from those who profess to be converts to the truth, the preached word falls often dead upon the hearers. Neighbors go on groping in darkness because there is little or no light in the life of the professor, souls are perishing under his very eyes—causes, of a lack of savor in the salt.

We take another case by way of illustration. One may feel very living apart from church facilities but in that loneliness the child of God feels God is nigh, that His eye is upon them, and His ear ready to hear the cries of His children. Only a private member, yet they feel the obligations resting upon them as professors of the holy religion of Jesus. Having on the whole armor of God they live out what they profess, not only the name "professor" is written on their "breast-plate" but also "holiness to the Lord." With meek and lowly heart, chaste conversation and godly conduct, their life is a light for their neighbor, and their walk "a savor of life unto life." When the word is preached, the hearers see a beautiful expression of the Truth in the professor's daily walk, so that others fall in love with true religion and the "lone star" soon has others of a kindred nature within the circle and bonds of the Kingdom of Heaven." The isolated member that has the cause truly at heart is not slow to subscribe to one or more of the Church periodicals, and after reading them lends them to his neighbors, an interest is gotten up, religious subjects are often talked of. The isolated grain of "salt" is at work, both openly and in secret prayer, so that the cause is made to prosper and souls to rejoice in the truth as it is in Jesus.

We now turn to the laity that live in close proximity one to another, and under the influence of the congregation in general. Here sometimes members may be found that live seemingly careless of their duties and obligations, as much as to say, "let others attend to the matters that belong to the Church, I am only a private member,—don't matter what I do, just so I am careful enough to escape censure from the church, or come up to the standard of this or that brother or sister's general religious character." Awake from that dream dear soul and remember there are no blessed promises to the "drones" or nominal professors. You must be one of the "lively stones" or you may never fit into the Heavenly House of habitation. Duty demands you help bear one anothers burdens. You may claim you can stay at home from public worship and do just as much good reading your Bible. That expression has no wider range than your own individual interest or ease. How will it be with the brother who has to bear the heavy cross of preaching the Word when he finds your seat empty? Will he be encouraged? How can he speak fervently of the blessedness of the religion of Jesus, when he remembers those of his flock are seemingly so indifferent? And how about those neighbors of yours, think they will fall in love with that religion you seem to care so little about? Will they go out to hear that one preach or to that house of worship that you do not seem to care enough about to go to any trouble to get there? And again remember many diseases are contageous. The evil of neglecting to attend religious worship or council meetings is of a contageous nature. One member stays at home, then another follows suit, and so the influence spreads the evil, until a coldness—something like a death chill—comes over the Church. The discouraged ministers go through with the form of worship,—to the best they can probably, but under the circumstances their best accomplishes but little. But now we turn to the subject under more favorable circumstances. Suppose every member feels the obligations of their calling—have an earnest zeal for their Master's cause, and goes to work with a will. First, set a watch over their own hearts and have kindled within their soul a love for the welfare of others, especially those of the household of faith. Keep love burning through the medium of private prayer. When the day for going to public worship comes they hunt not for excuses to stay at home—will brave the storm for the sake of Jesus and the duty they owe to God. The ministers heart is gladdened to see them in their seat—their earnestness has influenced others out. Duty demands the members should pray for their preacher as well as others—it is the house of prayer. God is there—the Holy Spirit is there—Jesus in the love and pleadings of His sublime words is there—sinners tremble and turn to God,—saints are "built up." In the outpourings of God's love, grace and mercy "Holy Manna is showered all around." A consummation so glorious that we may even "walk in Heavenly places in Christ Jesus" here can not be brought about without a hearty co-operation of the private members of the Church. Seeing then that it is within your power, through the mercy of God, to enliven the Church and keep burning upon her altar the fire of a Savior's love, watch and pray lest your individual indifference bring the Church into a cold or luke-warm state. In council meetings let any one that can, be out on duty and help cast out Satan if he has found foothold anywhere. "Know no man after the flesh,"—let all things be done with an eye single to the glory of God and welfare of Zion. If the body is healthy and full of love and life, a diseased member, though it be the head, may be brought to a healthy state of action. In pecuniary matters you have no right to say "I have begotten my money and it is mine to do as I will." You are the Lord's steward, be careful then that you waste not His money upon your lust, when the cause demands it, give as the Lord has prospered you, not grudgingly but cheerfully. It is a true adage, "If the able horse will not pull, the willing one must, able or not able." If the rich hold a closed hand on the dollars, the poor must open and give the dimes, or the cause will suffer. In short remember the duties and obligations of the lay members are such that a failure on their part will clog the wheels of the car of salvation, and make the gospel a stumbling block to the world. But a strict compliance with their duties will give such an impetus to the ark of the Lord as to cause her to outride the breakers of persecution,—induce thousands to enter and sail for the harbor of rest. Up, up, then, and to work dear brethren and sisters,—on with the whole armor of God. Keep the sword unsheathed—be not content with the uniform alone, but pray for courage and strength that you may acquit yourselves as becometh valient soldiers of the cross,—fighting under that Banner that always leads to victory.

J. S. FLORY.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN. WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

B. F. MOOMAW.

Having now considered the authority upon which the foregoing institutions are based, and as we think fully sustained the position in which we embarked in this investigation, that for everything that God designed that his intelligent creatures should observe and do, he has signified it to them in language clear and unmistakable, and impressed it by his own illustrious example.

In the next place, we propose to show, that our prerogatives are limited and circumscribed by this charter. He being wise enough to devise his own means for the accomplishment of his purposes, and just in requiring that his authority should be respected, and mighty to avenge himself upon those who shall take from, add to, substitute for, modify or amend them, they having been pre-arranged in the councils of Heaven. "Where is the wise, where is the scribe, where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believed." 1 Cor. -1: 20, 21. "Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unreasonable are his judgments and his ways past finding out. For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counsellor? Rom.—11: 33, 34.

As a suitable commentary upon this subject I quote from Gumbleum's Personal Religion, chap. 10, page 158. "It would be well in considering the various ordinances of Religion we began by narrowly examining their charter, as it exists in God's Holy Word. How shall we ascertain their true character? How shall we know what we may expect from them, and what we may not expect? How, in short, shall we secure ourselves against a false estimate of them, otherwise than by looking into their original constitution? The exact limits of a patent or prerogative granted by the government of a country to any individual, can only be ascertained by consulting the terms of the patent. Let the holder abstract from the public records, and hide away the parchment on which these terms are written, and there are then no powers which he may not assume, on the general vague representation that the patent is his."

In the absence of a proper regard to the principle involved in this general idea, what has the religious world not assumed in all ages from Adam in Eden, to the present day. The adversary is not wanting in ingenuity nor argument to install insidiously into the human mind an infusion of unbelief, if not successful in the first effort, to induce the final and fatal step, as in the case of our progenitors in the garden, yet step by step he proceeds to final success, as in the case of ancient Israel; the commands of God, as revealed in his charter, are superceded by traditions which are of men. This truth is so fully delineated in the Bible that to undertake elucidation of it would appear to be a work of supererogation. Nothing more is necessary than a reference to the history as given in the Bible of that age of the world, as to the conduct of those then living, their final, terrible overthrow and destruction, because of their disregard of the terms of their charter, and the assumption of prerogatives not awarded them. And yet while these facts are fully sustained it must be admitted that those unfortunates are entitled to some respect for honesty of purpose, and purity of motives, or at least for the plausibility of their pretentions: but erred in supposing that the Lord would be pleased and his name glorified by the introduction of helps of their own invention outside of the limits of their charter "upon the vague representation that the paint was theirs," which however was offensive to God and visited by his deep displeasure and awful retribution, as exemplified in the circumstance of King Saul. See 1 Sam. 15th chapter. The Lord commanded Saul to go and destroy the Amelekites, to fight against them until they were utterly consumed, but he kept the king of Amalek, Agag, alive, and permitted the people to take the best of the flocks and of the herds to offer an unauthorized offering at Gilgal; and yet he, as it appears, was honestly under the impression, that he had obeyed the voice of the Lord, see his declaration in the chapter above referred to 20th verse, and was not sensible of his mistake, until too late to make amends, until he had lost his crown, then he was awakened to the fact that it was not "from Heaven but of men." He then confessed that he had sinned, having transgressed the commandment of God, and obeyed the voice of the people, ver. 24. Please indulge our departure at this point, that we may criticise Saul's apology. "He feared the people and obeyed their voice." He, the king of Israel by divine appointment, in the exercise of Royal powers, and feared the people. How is this? Did he fear that they would assassinate him or inflict any personal injury upon him? Certainly not for we have no intimation whatever that his people were mutinous or rebellious. We opine that he simply feared the opposition of sentiment, and that thereby he would risk the loss of popular applause, and his shares of the honors of the gratuitous offering at Gilgal. Here is the weakness of our nature, desiring to be like other associations by which we are surrounded, like the Elders and people of ancient Israel, though faithfully forewarned by the Lord, through his servant Samuel of the consequence of rejecting him, determined to have a king over them, that they might also be like all the nations and that their king might judge them and go before them and fight their battles." 1 Sam.—10: 19, 20.

Again, "when ye come to appear before me" saith the Lord "who hath required this at your hands, to tread courts, bring no more vain oblations, incense is an abomination unto me, your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth, they are a trouble unto me, I am weary to bear them." Isa.—1: 12, 14; Jer.—7: 22, 23; Hos.—6: 6, 7; Mic.—6: 6-8.

Thus it has ever been with the children of men, social in our nature, we yield to popular influence, and step by step move along assimilating ourselves more and more with our surroundings, almost unconsciously until becoming like them, and first in one thing, and then another, accept their ideas, adopt their ways and means, without properly considering "from whence it is, from Heaven or of men," justifying ourselves in the conclusion that the end justifies the means, and so introduce the measures resorted to by our neighboring associations in the use of which they have succeeded in the accession of numbers, In proportion as we have departed from the usages divinely authorized, we notice a departure from the narrow path of humility and self-denial. We may use these human instrumentalities cautiously at first, and whilst under the control of those who first adopt them, they may be and are likely to be so guarded, as not to produce very mischievious results, but passing into second hands, and so on, the departure becomes wider and wider, until we get in the broad way with those popular associations, that have one after another respectively been lost in the broad sea of popular Christianity. We have a very striking example of this truth in the history of what is known as the reformation of the nineteenth century. When that reformation was first introduced, its advocates sternly and steadily objected to all extraordinary means, such as the mourner's bench, promiscuous singing and praying, rubbing the hands, &c., by which unchaste excitement and illegitimate conversions were produced, contending that the word preached, was the only instrument by which genuine conversions were produced; but now, even at this early day, while so far as is known to me, the successors have not introduced the bench, I venture the assertion, that they have adopted so many of those practices, and devised others in the use of which, they excel in producing excitement and premature conversions. The principle that we in this communication have aimed to establish is, that institutions having the sanction of divine authority, will be, and these alone, in the final day, approved by the commander in chief, the command having been issued by him, and delivered to the sons and daughters of men; the reverencing him, and respecting his authority "obey from the heart" is reported back. The Lord, the head of department recognizes, and approves his own work, pronounces the welcome plaudit, "well done thou good and faithful servant enter into the joy of thy Lord." Whereas on the other hand, if we shall add to, or take from the prophecies of the Book, the plagues shall be added that are threatened, and our part taken out of the Book of Life and out of the Holy City, and from the things which are written in the book.

God's Love.—It is the bright sun behind the cloud that gives it the silver lining and golden edging, so it is the genial rays of God's love that causeth us to see, by an eye of faith, joy in tribulation, hope in adversity and in the darkest hour of trial a smiling Jesus bidding us "Be not afraid, 'tis I."—J. S. Flory.

CORRECTION.

In the Pilgrim of March 11, No. 10, page 73, Bro. Moomaw says; "Thus we see in the divine command for this feast we have the verb shall used in the imperative mood seventeen times." Shall, in all the instances mentioned, is an auxillary of the indicative mood, first future tense. For the benefit of writers we will here say that the indicative mood indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question; while the imperative mood commands, exhorts, entreats or permits, and must always be from a speaker to a second person addressed. In the article referred to, the speaker is the Lord, and the persons addressed are Moses and Aaron. After some preliminaries, the Lord says to them "Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel." The verb speak in this sentence is in the imperative mood, while the verbs "shall take, shall be, &c.," in the following sentences are declarations of what the people of Israel are to observe. In the Commission we have "Go and teach" in the imperative mood. The Savior speaking and the disciples spoken to.

We considered it our duty to make this correction, lest some designing reader might censure the author unjustly. It does not destroy the sense and force of his article in the least, for all know that "shall" represents a duty to be performed.

Remarks.—Of many of the sciences it is said, they are stubborn facts, but of grammar not so, as there are more exceptions embodied in it than there are rules. We do not wish to undervalue Bro. Furry's knowledge of grammar as in the main he is certainly right, but at the same time, we are not willing to admit that Bro. Moomaw is altogether wrong. In all such cases we make grammar succumb to the force of language and circumstances, and justify our course in the exceptions. In the indicative mood we have facts. The subjunctive implies a doubt or supposition, and in the potential mood we have possibility expressed, but in the imperative there is command. Imperative is from the Latin imperativus and expresses positive command, hence any word or sentence that expresses a command, we call it in the imperative mood. The word under consideration in Bro. Moomaw's article, though somewhat mixed in person, in every instance express a positive command, therefore call it an auxillary, if you please, and you have it in the imperative mood still, as shall in the instances used, expresses a command. Imperative means to command and mood means manner, he then spoke in a commanding manner.

Again. Our author or grammar says; "When shall is used in the sense of must it belongs rather to the potential mood and when emphasized, to the imperative." In Webster we have; "If the auxillary (shall) be emphasized the command is made more imperative, more positive. To emphasizing makes it more imperative it certainly must be imperative in its most ordinary sense.

Again. In the case of the laws being delivered to the people, Moses was simply God's mouth-piece by which he delivered His messages to the people and in reality, spoke directly to the people, hence in the present tense and second person. In analyzing the sentence, "Your lamb shall be without blemish * * ye shall take it out from the sheep," &c., the pronouns, you and ye certainly do not refer to Moses and Aaron alone, but to the whole congregation of Israel. This certainly strengthens the position that shall may be in the imperative mood and until Bro. Furry shows us that the word shall in the case referred to does not express a positive command we shall hold to our position although we admit that he has the weight of authors on his side.

HOW TO OPPOSE FEET-WASHING.

I am not much in favor of committing sermons to memory, but I propose that if all those who have a desire to oppose Feet-washing upon gospel grounds, would commit the 13th chapter of John to memory, and then preach that, and nothing else on the subject, that no one on earth would ever become convinced that Feet-washing is a nonessential.

I have heard and read many sermons on Feet-washing, but would not give the sermon that Jesus preached on the subject for a million of such.

When you preach your next sermon on this subject, please say what Jesus said. When you oppose Feet-washing, say what your Master said, nothing more. When people ask your opinion on this commandment, say what Jesus did. At the close of every argument introduced against Feet washing, stop just one minute, and give Jesus time to say "YE OUGHT TO WASH ONE ANOTHER'S FEET," and I'll run the risk of ever convincing the people that Feet-washing is unnecessary.

WHEREVER you are, dear friend, though you must be in the world, take care that you be not of it. "Come ye out from among them; be ye separate, saith the Lord, touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." It is only in the lonely path of the true disciple of Christ, who follows the Lamb withersoever he goeth, that you can realize your adoption, and cry, Abba, Father. Come out from the word; confess yourself to be on the Lord's side, and then your fellowship with God shall be sweet beyond degree! Range yourself under the divine banner and by God's grace remain a separatist from the world until life's latest hour. So shall you, like Abraham, be a sojourner with God. "Dwell deep, O inhabitants of Dedan," right away from the world's customs and sins, and above all, from its selfish spirit and grovelling aims! Dwell deep in the solitudes where Jesus dwelt—in the lonely holiness which was fostered on the cold mountain's side, and then shone resplendant amid temptation and persecution! Commit yourself unto no man; call no man master; lean on no arm of flesh; walk before the Lord in the land of the living, and so dwell deep, as did your Lord.—Spurgeon.

THE dark cloud may hover over us, but the cross of Christ will be the lightning-rod that will take the bolt out of it. You have seen people invalids, and after a while, under some tremendous stroke of disease, their entire temperament seemed to be changed, and they come out of that sudden sickness strong men. So it is with many of those who are going along invalids in the Christian life, very weak in the service of God. After they have passed through some great disaster—that disaster having been sanctified to their souls—they become strong men in Christ Jesus. These Christians who are swarthy now—do you know how they got their swarthiness? It was by sweltering at the forge of affliction. Their battle-axe was dull enough until it was sharpened on a gravestone.—Talmage.

PRAYER is a haven to the shipwrecked mariner, an anchor to them that are sinking in the waves, a staff to the limbs that totter, a mine of jewels to the poor, a security to the rich, a healer of diseases, and a guardian of health. Prayer at once secures the continuance of our blessings, and dissipates the cloud of our calamities. O blessed prayer! thou art the unwearied conqueror of human woes, the firm foundation of human happiness, the source of ever-enduring joy, the mother of philosophy. The man who can pray truly, though languishing in the extremest indigence, is richer than all beside; whilst the wretch who never bowed the knee, though proudly seated as monarch of nations, is of all men most destitute. —Chrysostom.

HEAVEN and earth, with all castles of kings and emperors, could not make a dwelling-place for God, but in the man that keeps his word there he will dwell.

Isaiah calls the heavens his throne and the earth his footstool, but not his abode. We may search long to find where God is, but we shall find him in those who hear the words of Christ.

For the Lord Christ saith, "If any man love me, he will keep my words, and we will make our abode with him."—Luther.

WHEN the heart of man is bound up by the grace of God, and tied in golden bands, and watched by angels, tended by those nurse-keepers of the soul, it is not easy for a man to wander; and the evil of his heart is but like the ferity and wildness of lions' whelps. But when once we have broken the hedge, and got into the strengths of youth, and the licentiousness of an ungoverned age, it is wonderful to observe what a great inundation of mischief in a very short time will overflow all the banks of reason and religion.—Jeremy Taylor.

THERE is no receiving of Christ to dwell and live with us, unless we turn all other guests out of doors. The devil, you know, would not take possession of a house till it was swept and garnished; and dares any man imagine that a heart defiled, full of all uncleanness, a decayed ruinous soul, an earthly sensual mind, is a tabernacle fit to entertain the Son of God? Were it reasonable to invite Christ to sup in such a mansion, much more to rest and inhabit there? Chillingworth.

WHEN the church is cold and dead, those hymns which were written by God's saints, in moments of rapture, seem extravagant, and we walk over them on dainty footsteps of taste, but let God's Spirit come down upon our hearts, and they are as sweetness on our tongues; nay, all too poor and meagre for our emotions, for feeling is always tropical, and seeks the most intense and fervid expression.—Beecher.

THE whole world is full of miracles, but our eyes must be pure, lest, because they are so common to us, they become dim.—Luther.

HEIRS OF GOD.

The Christian cannot realize in this world what a glorious privilege it is to be an heir with God and a joint heir with Christ. Those who expect to inherit an earthly fortune, do not mind so much the privations of their present lot. But the poorest child of God is heir to an inheritance, beside which the wealth of this world is as nothing. Although we generally look at this inheritance as lying beyond the vale, yet we may claim the priviliges of an heir. If adverse winds blow, and the waves of sorrow rise high about us, we may rest assured it is because we are beloved children of God that we are thus afflicted. Even if poverty and want become our portion, we need not despair, for our Father hath taught us to ask him for our daily bread, and he has enough and to spare; all the resources of the earth are at his disposal; so if we, like dutiful children, do the work laid to our hands, trusting in him, we may claim the promises of future good.

We may gather something of the exceeding glory of our inheritance, when we reflect that Christ with whom we are joint-heirs, "shall have dominion from sea to sea;" that one day the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord, and he shall reign forever and ever. A mansion in the heavenly city, far more beautiful than any palace of earth, an unfading crown of life, and a kingdom that shall never end; what a glorious prospect is this, and how it should daily cheer and animate the believer's heart.—The Christian.

Religious News.

Rev. F. B. HUDSON, pastor of the Methodist Church, at Lyons, N. Y., was stricken by paralysis while preaching in his pulpit on Sunday morning, March 2nd. A local paper in giving the particulars, states that he had read about half his discourse—his voice as firm and distinct as on previous occasions. Suddenly he stopped, and requested that a window be let down to admit fresh air. For a moment he stood pressing his hands to his forehead, and leaning forward to the desk; then, as if rallying all his strength for the effort, he began again, and uttered the words of his sermon—"These days are passing away," and as the last syllable left his lips he sank back on the sofa insensible. He was taken to his residence, and died in the evening.

AN OLD CHURCH.—"Old Donegal Church" in Pa., was founded in 1722. It still exists, but is very feeble, being in the midst of a community composed almost entirely of Mennonites, and being also only about three miles from the towns of Marietta and Mt. Joy. The Church received a large grant of land from the Penn family, and has now a fund of $8,000, and has regular preaching most of the year in connection with the Mt. Joy Church. The graveyard connected with this Church is an object of considerable interest, some of the inscriptions on the tombstones dating back one hundred and forty years, and some graves without any mark, being even older.

THE PRESBYTERIANS.—The Free Church of Scotland has a congregation in Rome, and for many years the Established Church of Scotland has also had a congregation there during the winter months. The two congregations are now to meet as one. The Rev. Dr. Macgregor, of the Established Church, in Edinburgh has agreed to visit Rome in order to take a term of the Sabbath services.

TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION.—The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "The temperance movement which has just ended—or just begun in this State, by the passage of the bill in the Legislature—seems to be a part of a tidal wave, so to speak, that at present is surging through the Mississippi Valley. In the house of the Minnesota Legislature a bill has passed, and is now hanging tremblingly around the doors of the Senate, to become a law, which in effect is similar to that of Indiana. It puts the power of license in the hands of the community; puts the cost of the license from $50 to $300; provides that every seller of liquors shall give a bond in the sum of $1,000 to $3,000, with two or more sureties not to sell liquor on Sunday, nor sell to any minor or habitual drunkard, and to pay all damages that may result."

CRUSHED BY A FALSE ALARM.—While Rev. Mr. Talmage's congregation was at worship on Sunday night the 2nd inst., in Brooklyn, in the Academy of Music, the cry of fire was raised, and in the consternation following several persons were badly crushed.

The Episcopalians have a theological school in Colorado established by Bishop Randall. The building was erected by a munificent layman of Boston, Nathan Matthews, Esq.

The African Methodist Church of South Carolina held its annual Conference at Georgetown recently. It claims to have 170 preachers 48,000 members.

A Roman Catholic Cathedral is to be erected in Hartford at a cost of $400,000.

BIRTH OF OUR SAVIOR.

SELECTED BY HETTIE L. MOHLER

How much better I'm attended,
Than the Son of God could be;
When from Heaven He descended,
And became a child like me.
Soft and easy was my cradle,
Coarse and hard my Savior lay;
When His birth place was a stable
And his softest bed was hay.

Lo! He slumbers in a manger,
Where the horned oxen fed;
Cold the air and full of danger,
Whistling by His blessed head.
See the kinder shepherds round him,
Telling wonders from the sky;
Where they sought Him, there they found Him,
With His virgin mother by.

From the East the wise men pressing,
In their arms rich jewels bring;
To receive the precious blessing,
Of their long expected King.
Yet to read the shameful story,
How the Jews abused their King;
How they served the Lord of glory,
Makes me angry while I sing.

'Twas to save us all from dying,
Save us all from burning flames;
Bitter groans and endless cryings,
That our blest Redeemer came.
May we learn to know and fear Him,
Love and serve Him all our days:
Then go dwell forever near Him,
Seek His face and sing His praise.

A FEW WORDS TO THE CHILDREN.

Children, have you all homes and kind parents? I presume not. I well remember when my two brothers and three sisters and I formed a family of children with our kind parents, but death has taken the mother, two brothers and one sister, and whose turn will come next God only knows. Do you love your parents? God tells you to love them. Do you obey them and honor them? It is God's will that you should. When you attend school do you try to learn, so you can read God's word and learn of His wisdom? What beauties are contained therein! Be active, enquiring and you can learn who created all things. If you have homes, try to be kind one to another, to father, mother, sister, brother and all, for in Heaven there is no quarreling, no disputing, no bad names called, no lying, no stealing, swearing nor scolding.

So if you wish to get there you must be good children, and not abuse one another. When meeting strangers, speak kindly and make no sport or fun of any lameness, or cripples, but feel sorry for their condition and help them all you can, for if you can not be kind to such here, what would you think of meeting them in Heaven? Those of you who have no settled earthly home, which was my lot when young, perhaps you feel the want of it, but then there is a home prepared in Heaven for all good children. There is no sickness, pain, death, nor sorrow, neither want, all will be happy. What a pleasant sight to see a company of children all enjoying each others society in peace. It makes glad fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers, and is the admiration of visitors.

Do not hurt your playmates. "Do as you wish to be done by;" live in peace; thank God for all His blessings, such as food, clothes, health and strength, kind parents, and all good things. Speak the truth, and if we never meet on earth, if we are good and kind we may above. Goodbye for the present.

THINKING.

There is hardly a fault which the young are more generally blamed for than thoughtlessness. It is natural for boys and girls, being unused to thinking for themselves, and acting on impulse, as they always do, to forget or leave undone things which ought to be attended to. This ought not to be, however. We should have our wits about us at all times.

How often we hear the reply, "I didn't think," or "I forgot." How easily, by a moment's deliberation, might that "I didn't think" have been changed to an "I did think."

Thoughtfulness is an indispensible element of character, and no one can secure the confidence of those about him until he learns to practice thinking. Learning to think is a part of the education of the young, and it is as essential to their full development as any other branch of study. A man without his thoughts about him is like a ship without a rudder—drifting about where the winds send it, just as he is drifted about and driven by impulse to do that which after a moment's care he would have refrained from doing.

Thinking has accomplished much, for everything in the way of improvement requires its exercise. It is only by deep, concentrated thought that so many great ends are accomplished by man. When Sir Isaac Newton was asked how he made so many discoveries, he replied; "By thinking." Now, boys and girls, though it is a natural characteristic of youth to be thoughtless and impulsive, still, we should endeavor to throw off this careless way of doing, and cultivate a thoughtful character; for our success in life depends upon this one thing.—Young Folks Rural.

SERMON TO THE BOYS.—Boys, did you ever think that this world, with all its mines and mountains, rivers, seas and rivers; with all its steamboats, railroads and telegraphs; with all its millions of groping men, and all the science and progress of ages, will soon be given over to the boys of the present age boys like you. Believe it, and look abroad on your inheritance, and get ready to enter upon its possession. The presidents, emperors, kings, governors, statesmen philosophers, ministers, teachers, men of the future, all are boys now.—Young Folks Rural.

Correspondence.

Dear Pilgrim:—As I am in receipt of many letters from the brethren and friends in the Atlantic States North and South, East and West, making inquiries about our country here in the far West, or Pacific slope, I thought it good to answer some of them through the PILGRIM, provided its Editors will publish the same.

We reside in the Northswest portion of Oregon, in the Willamatte Valley, said to be about 130 miles in length, north and south, and about 40 miles in width east and west, with the Willamatte River—navigable for Steam Boats a portion of the year—running through its entire length. Also the Oregon and California Rail road passing through near the center of the Valley. This Valley in many things, reminds me very much of the Shenandoah Valley in the State of Virginia. We have some very good soil, some very poor, some level land, some a very nice rolling elevation, and some very hilly. Our good soil is well adapted to the raising of Fall and Spring wheat, rye, oats, barley, tame grass and vegetables, provided the land is well cultivated, but we cannot raise corn, cane, sweet potatoes, successfully, our nights in Summer are too cool and Summers too dry, yet they raise some of each. We have a very good fruit country, excellent water, clear, cool and soft, and very good water-power for machinery. In portions of the Valley springs are tolerably plenty. Our mountains are covered with timber, such as fir, pine, white cedar, hemlock, &c. Our Valley has some of the above kinds, with white oak, maple, balm, alder. Notwithstanding we are in a Northern latitude we have a very mild climate; true, our winters are very rainy, but not cold. This has been a very mild winter. The winds in Winter are generally from the South, and in Summer generally from the North, very pure air, can see an object a great distance when the day is fair. Our Summers are very pleasant indeed. Land rates here from 8 to 40 dollars an acre, owing to improvements, locality, soil, &c. Near Salem, our county seat, which is also the capital of the State, land is as high as $100,00 per acre, no Government lands or very little. We think we have a healthy country, yet along the large streams it is somewhat unhealthy. We have advantages and disadvantages, some things we like very well, and there are other things we do not like. It is no paradise, far from it, yet upon the whole we think we have the making of a very good country.

Now as regards spiritual affairs, the good Lord is here and is as near and as dear to His children as anywhere, and we can serve Him as well here as in the East, and we think if we live faithful, and the Lord will help, the good work will prosper here. True, we are very few in number, and very much scattered, yet there seems to be a good feeling among the brethren generally. Truly the harvest is great but the laborers are very few. Think of us dear brethren in the East, and when it goes well with you, pray for us. To those of my correspondents who have made inquiries about Oregon, I have given you some of my views about this Valley, and we would be very glad if you would move to this country, settle down among us and help to build up the Church and our country, provided you would like this country. My expenses on the emigrant train from Omaha Neb., to San Francisco Cal., was $50,00 a passenger; from San Francisco to Portland, Oregon on the steamer Steerage, passage $15 in gold, and from Portland to Turner Station, our nearest Railroad station, about eleven miles west of us cost $3,00, making $98 a passenger from Omaha Nebraska to Turner Oregon, boarding and other expenses not counted. This is the cheapest way that I know of to come from the Atlantic States to this part of Oregon. Those who prefer can come on the express train, first class cars, from Omaha to San Francisco for $100,00 a passenger, thence to Portland on the Steamer Calvin, passage $30,00 in gold. Thence to Turner $3.00, or from San Francisco or Sacramento, Cal., to Turner, Salem, or Portland, by overland Railroad and stage, fares from 50 to $90,00 a passenger. The distance to stage about 300 miles.

Now in conclusion, let me say I have given some of my views of this country. Others may come and look at it in a different light, have different views, therefore I can not tell how others might view it. I might say much more about the advantages of Oregon, but let this suffice. For further particulars let the brethren and friends write to me.

DAVID BROWER.

Sublimity, Marion Co., Oregon.

I started with brother David Clapper from Hopewell Congregation, February 27th, lodged that night with brother Isaac Ritchy, next day we went to Sidling Hill Valley, dined with brother Aaron Dishong, and then went to brother Alpheus Mellott's, as as they expected we would come from. I one that day, the roads being badly drifted, thought our arrival would likely be too late for an appointment. The next day, March the 1, had two meetings in the Morgan School-house, one at 10 A. M., and in the evening. Next day, being Sunday, we went to Bro. Daniel Lake's, held two meetings with crowded houses and good attention. Two persons desired to be received into the Church. An occurrence took place just at the commencement of the evening services, which caused some excitement and stopped our proceedings a few moments. A widow woman being sick and by the powerful conviction she was brought under, was thrown into spasms, but quiet being restored we proceeded. After meeting she wished to be received, but her son and daughter opposed, and we thought it advisable in the condition she then was in, not to be too hasty; we advised her to wait till her mind was more composed, but to be careful then not to put it off for a more convenient season, which we hope she will do, as we understand her children are not opposed provided she is in a proper condition, they being friends of the Brethren.

March 2nd. had preaching in Cross Road School House at 11 A. M., and also in the evening; lodged with Br. Jonas Melott, where we stayed three nights. This family made us very comfortable, and we felt at home. Next day we had two meetings at Castner's S. H., but a sale being near by, the day meeting was small. We felt discouraged and wanted to recall the evening meeting, but those present would not suffer it; hence we went to friend — Simpson's, three miles distant for dinner, as we could do no better; no other invitations were given. We were kindly received and had a pleasant friendly interview on Scriptural topics, chiefly on church discipline and ordinances. They seem not far from the Kingdom of God; they invited us to have meeting there the next time we came and bid us God speed in the noble work in which we were engaged. That evening we had a crowded house, good attention and we hope good impressions were made; had an invitation to stay all night near, but as Bro. Jac. Myers from Millstone Point met us here he preferred to go home after meeting five miles distant. So we went along it being moonlight but cold. Stayed all night and the next night also. Bro. Myers is a deacon in that branch of the Church which is under the oversight of Bro. Christian Keefer of the Welsh Run district. The brethren built a comfortable Meeting house here some years ago, called Bark Cabin. Here we had meeting at 10 A. M. and in the evening; had very interesting meetings. This is what they call Little Cove, about five or six miles below Hancock, Washington Co. Md. The members seem to be alive to their interest in Christ. In the afternoon we were called to see an afflicted and aged brother, John Miller, who desired to be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, (James 5th. ch. apt.) which was performed through faith in the fear of the Lord. In the evening after meeting had an applicant for baptism.

March 7th went back to Cross Road S. H. and as it was sixteen miles distant we had meeting only in the evening. Another applicant for baptism but not for immediate admission. House crowded and good attention. Next day went to friend Caleb Winks at Licking Creek. Had meeting at 10 A. M. and in the evening in his house. As many could not get in, there was some disorder outside among the children of Belial in the evening. This is the only place that we observed any notable disorder in all our meetings.

March 6th being Sunday, went to Absalom Melotts, had two meetings in the Turkeyfoot S. H. Met brethren Daniel Young and Geo. Harman from Franklin Co. Bro. Harman led the exercises in the evening. O how we felt encouraged to meet with our fellow watchmen on the walls of Zion, but our stay together was short, only one night at Bro. James Lakes. They had meeting there at 10 A. M. on the 10th, and we had to go eight miles to Bro Daniel Melotts to preach the same hour that day in his house, where we also had meeting in the evening which ended our mission for this time.

Next day went home, found them reasonably well, God's name be praised. Much love was manifested by all and we were treated with much more kindness and hospitality than we deserved. We heartily thank them for the same and pray God to reward them in the resurrection of the just. Calls were repeated: "Come and preach for us" by saint and sinner. Preached 19 times and traveled 194 miles. May our weak labors be crowned with success.

LEONARD FURRY.

New Enterprise, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim:—As it gives me much satisfaction to read Church news, I feel to give some which may be satisfactory to some at least. Having had a desire for some time to visit the brethren in Illinois I, in company with brother Zachariah Troyer, took the train at Walkerton on the morning of the 14th. of Feb. at 2. o'clock. Arrived at Chicago at 7. A. M., visited D. P. Fahrney's office and returned to the Depot just in time for the train at 10 A. M. Made good time and landed at Girard about 6 P. M. Stayed over night with Bro. Jonathan Brubaker and his kind family. On Sunday we met with the brethren for the first time at the Pleasant Hill M. Macoupin Co. Ill. Our dear Bro. and Eld. John Metzker also met with us; met again for preaching in the evening. Eld. David Frantz from Macon Co. was added to our company; met again on Monday evening; two more Elders met with us, Joseph Hendrick from Macon and David Wolf from Adams Co. We continued to labor together morning and evening until Wednesday. Then I went to Montgomery Co., Bro. Metzgar to Sangamon and the other brethren remained till Friday morning. I can truly say this was a season of refreshment to me, meeting with many brethren and sisters whom I had once known, from Va., Ohio and Ind. and forming happy acquaintances with many whom I never saw before. On Wednesday evening and on Thursday I had meeting in the neighborhood of brother J. E. Studebakers. On Friday went to Morrisonville in Christian Co., in company with Bro. Daniel Vaniman and others. Had meeting in town that evening. Next day, met with the brethren in Church council. Here we were met again with bro. J. Metzker. Bro. Abraham Lear was advanced to the second degree. He is the only minister in that district, which is newly organized. Here I would say to the brethren who wish to move west, this is a good country, land can be bought very reasonable and the little flock seems to be in a healthy condition. Had preaching in the evening and on Sunday. On Sunday night, in company with Bro J. Metzker, took the train at 12 o'clock, arrived at Cerro Gorda at 3 a. m, met with Bro. Isaac Barnhart when we got off the train, I went with him to his house, and after breakfast I went to Bro. J. Metzker's and stayed till after dinner. Then we made Bro. J. Hendrix a short visit, went to Bro. David Fratzer's, took supper with them, went to their meeting house and had meeting that evening. This ended our meeting with the brethren in Illinois, and I must say that I feel very thankful to all the brethren and sisters for their kindness shown to us while among them, and further, I was much pleased to see how earnestly they contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and how very zealous they are in keeping up the landmarks which our father's have set.

Dear Brethren:—I will tell you of my situation here in this country. I have been living here for four years and during this time my health has been very bad, and I have had considerable trouble. I have lost my horse and cow and have three helpless children, and have not heard the pure Gospel preached since I have been living in Jackson Co. At this time I am in destitute circumstances. I desire to read your paper if you please to send it to me. I read one of your PILGRIMS this winter, and I would love to have them to read regularly. One of the brethren wrote to me to know if I was still in the faith of the Gospel as I was when I made my baptismal vow. I answer I am and expect to be in the same faith while I live in this world of sorrow. A. E. B.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, such are the frequent requests made of us, what do you think of it? Here is a sister, like hundreds of others, isolated from the Brotherhood, deprived of the benefits of meeting in the sanctury with the children of God. Is there any wonder if such would grow cold in the faith. She desires to read the PILGRIM because, in it she obtains food for the soul and learns of the welfare of Zion. She shall have it and we hope to her it may prove to be the bread of Heaven, but while we thus administer to the spiritual wants of our Father's hungry children, can we not prevail on some of our well circumstanced and liberal brethren and sisters to open their hearts and aid us in the good work? Many could spare from $1,00 to $5,00 without making any sacrifice whatever. "Feed my lambs."

GRANT, Mo., }
March 10, '73. }

Some of my brethren or sisters have been so kind as to send me the PILGRIM to comfort me in my lonely hours. I have been confined to the house and to the bed for months, and how welcome does the PILGRIM come to me. I am now trying to write a few lines for its columns. Afflictions are God's most effectual means to keep us from losing our way to Heaven. Without this hedge of thorns on the right and on the left, we should hardly keep the way. If there be but one gap open, how ready are we to find it and turn out at it when we grow wanton, worldly or proud. Every Christian, as well as all good men, may call affliction one of the best schoolmasters, and with David may say, "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I have kept thy word." Many thousand recovered sinners may cry, "O helpful sickness, O comfortable sorrows, O grateful losses, what would our proud hearts be if all was health and prosperity?" Your sister,

FANNIE BENSON.

Dear Pilgrim:—Another Sabbath is here bringing with it more snow. Every flake is an expression of the Father's goodness to us as they come one after another filling the air with purity. While watching those beautiful messengers I was impressed to write a few lines to my brethren and sisters hoping to say something to cheer them as they journey onward.

I have been a professor of religion forty years of my life, but not knowing what Church suited my views best, did not unite with any until about a year and a half ago, I attended a series of meetings held by our much esteemed and trustworthy brother Moses Baer of Bloomingdale, this State, Mich. By comparing his teachings with those laid down by our Savior, I decided what Church to join and I became a member of the Brethren, feeling persuaded that to live a true Christian life I must obey the commandments in full. May the service of the Lord be our delight, remembering that passage of Scripture from Matthew 28th chapter 20th verse which says, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

A WORD TO ALL.

From present indications we can congratulate our readers in the expectation of more than an ordinary amount of interesting and instructive reading during the present year. With such aids as Furry, Moomaw, Flory, Moore, Worst and a large number of others, we expect to make the PILGRIM all that the Brotherhood can reasonably expect. It is true, we have disappointed a few in not publishing their productions, which we feared might be the cause of engendering strife without being any advantage to the Church, but on the whole the PILGRIM is acknowledged to be as carefully conducted as well could be, under existing circumstances, and we hope the disappointed few, after mature deliberations will justify the course we are pursuing, especially when we assure them that we do nothing out of personal preferences, but for the sake of the glorious cause which we are trying to advocate. We remember the time that we wrote things, under the impulse of the moment, that we sorely regretted afterwards and felt very grateful to the editor for withholding it from the public. Just so we may all do and feel. We claim no superiority over our brethren generally, but our position and relation to the Brotherhood gives us advantages that many others do not have, hence, in a general way, we should be better able to judge what is for the welfare and prosperity of the Church than those who do not have these advantages. Out of the thousands of letters received and those largely from the working part of the membership, we have very excellent facilities for learning the sentiments and wants of the Church. From knowledge thus attained we set our feet upon the "Ancient Landmarks" and imploring divine aid, we endeavor to steer the ship as independent of all personal preferences, not forgetting the advice of those who are our superiors in age and in the divine life.

This week will be noticed the first number of a series of articles by Eld. Flory on "The Church and the duty of her members" for which we ask a careful reading. In a few weeks, we will commence a series of papers containing some fifteen chapters, each titled "A Light to the World," by J. H. Moore. The following we have before us: Chapter I. "The Bible." Chapter II "Obedience." Chapter III "Baptism." Chapter IV "Immersion" Chapter V "Infant Baptism." Chapter VI "Backward and forward Baptism." With these productions, and those of our many other contributors, our patrons can certainly feel hopeful, especially when it is taken into consideration the large amount of Church news and other miscellaneous reading we give each week. In conclusion, we tender our thanks to contributors, agents and patrons for their generous co-operation, and hope by the end of the year we may all feel that the PILGRIM has been for our mutual good.

TAKE THE BACK NO'S.

All subscriptions should commence with the beginning of the volume, as the first Nos. contained some very interesting articles some of which are still continued. It will also make a complete file and make the volume valuable for binding. We can still supply all subscribers with numbers from the beginning of the year. New subscribers are still coming in quite encouragingly and we can assure you, they are welcomely received. We have room for many more, send them along and we will accommodate all.

AN INQUIRER.—To those who who have paid $1.50 for the PILGRIM we will send the Phrenological Journal by sending $2.00 more. The price of the P. Journal is $3.00, the PILGRIM $1.50, making $4.50, we send them both together for $3.50. Now is the time to subscribe.

ASSUMED NAMES.—We prefer that writers give their full names to their productions, but if any through modesty wish them withheld we will gratify them, but in all cases, we must have the writer's name.

POETRY.

SING ME MOTHER'S SONGS.

Sing me the songs that my own mother sung
As she rocked me on her knee;
For the songs my infant ears first heard
Are the sweetest, aye, to me.
Warble them softly, as she used to do
When my head lay on her breast,
Oh! I know of no other place so sweet
Where the weary head may rest.

Sing me the songs that my own mother sang,
And my fevered brow will feel
The soft, soothing touch of her cool, white hand—
Ah! such balm my wounds might heal;
And this bounding heart will be calm for awhile,
And my pulse will throb no more,
And I'll think I sit 'neath the hawthorn shade,
As I did in the days of yore.

Sing me the songs that my own mother sung
In the years of long ago.
Sing them softly; they will ease my pain
As their soothing numbers flow.
And I think I stand by her side once more,
As in childhood's happy days,
Ere these weary feet had yet learned to tread
In the world's lone, gloomy maze.

Sing me the songs that my own mother sang:
They have hushed my feeble wail,
And my childish sorrows they have lightly tossed,
Deep in oblivion's vale.
Even the angels that watched while I slept,
And to dreamland led the way,
Enraptured stood when they heard her melting voice,
As she trilled her roundelay.

Sing me the songs that my own mother sang
In our home so far away,
And I'll think I am lisping my evening prayer
By her knee at the close of day;
And the little cottage will rise to view,
The streams, the meadows, and flowers:
And I saw them then, to my infant gaze,
They seemed like elfin bowers.

THE CHURCH AND DUTIES OF HER MEMBERS—NO. 2.

BY J. S. FLORY.

DEACONS.

The word "Deacon" in its primitive sense meant a servant, one who attended his master, waiting on him at table and elsewhere. Deacons are spoken of in the early Christian Church. In Acts 6th we find some murmured, "because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration." We find it was the custom in those days to have "all things common," so that those who had lands and horses sold them and laid the proceeds at the apostles feet. The needy men, doubtless, came forward and got what they needed, but the widows were neglected; the apostles had much to attend to as ministers of the Word so they could not—or it was not expedient they should leave the Word of God, and serve tables, hence the necessity to choose men to attend to this matter. They chose seven men from among themselves—that is the multitude of disciples chose the men. The nature of the calling demanded they should be men of "honest report and full of the Holy Ghost." The qualifications of Deacons are set forth by the apostle Paul in first Timothy, 3: "Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, * * * ruling their children and their own house well." While it is stated by Paul, "Let the deacons be the husband of one wife," we do not understand him they must necessarily be married, but if married let them have only one wife at a time. From what we have quoted above relative to the qualifications of deacons, it will be readily inferred the office imposes weighty duties and solemn obligations upon those that are called thereto. Their duties may be defined to consist, in part, to that of being treasures, and to distribute to the needy or to any object the Church may order,—to attend to the "Church visit" as often as the Church directs, in consequence of this duty they are often called "visiting brethren,"—to superintend the preparations at our Communion meetings that everything may be in readiness at the proper time and in order. To those then is often and in general laid the unpleasant task of visiting members who may be in an unreconciled state with each other, or members who may have committed offense against the Church in their careless walk and conduct, and report the matter to the Church. Liberty is generally given to the deacons to read the Scriptures in public at our seasons of public worship, to pray also at said meetings, and in some places to bear testimony to the word preached. In some places, especially where ministers are scarce, liberty is given to the deacon to "open meetings" by giving out a hymn, exhortation to prayer, &c., in like manner close meetings in accordance with the wish and liberty given by the minister. And in cases where the minister fails to attend appointmente the deacon is priviliged to read a chapter, give an exhortation, and close by singing and prayer. Of course these liberties vary in proportion to the number of ministers present and the ordinary customs of the congregations. Deacons wives are sometimes called deaconesses, and in many things the same duties devolve upon them that do upon their husbands, especially when their own sex are the persons to be attended to. Paul says also of them "Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things."

The calling of the deacons is a calling of an official nature, therefore they must feel their duties in many respects are different from the private members. They wield an influence of no small effect. In fact a corpse of live energetic deacons may engineer life and prosperity in the Church. Deacons, if in your official duties, walk and conduct you manifest a spirit in harmony with your required qualifications, and use your office well, you purchase to yourselves "a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus." The more you are exalted by the Lord the more you should become humbled through the grace of God. Duty requires you should cultivate a spirit of prayer in your families as well as abroad. In matters of trying to bring about reconciliation between parties, let patience, love and prayer persuade your hearts. Labor and admonish in such a way that the parties may feel you are in earnest about their eternal interests. Feel if possible, that the salvation of precious souls may hang upon the efforts you are making and your labors of love. Know that personal influence goes along way, therefore try to so live that your influence may be a strong argument in matters requiring admonitions. It makes the heart sad to have to hear, as we sometimes do, that deacons give good reason for transgressors to say to them in answer to their advice, "Physician, heal thyself, then talk to me." No wonder Paul would have them grave, honest, not given to much wine &c. He would have them models of Christian character in whom the noble characteristics of the Son of life and glory, were exemplified in their daily lives. It is the duty of all to love not the world nor the sinful things of the world, but to those in office this should be considered in the fullest sense of its importance. If those who are in official stations set good examples by their daily walk and conversation, with propriety and a greater show of success they may expect their admonitions to be successful in keeping the branches trimmed of superfluous outgrowth,—such things as tend to the overthrow of the Christian graces. The privileges and opportunities that necessarily accompany the office of deacon are such that they may, as instruments in the hands of God, do much toward keeping the Church in the "unity of the spirit" and the prosperity of Zion depends in part upon how they use the office of the deaconship. Also the converting influence of God may be made to penetrate the heart of the unregenerate through their labors of love. Time spent in the performance of their duties is not time lost, it is as treasures laid up in Heaven. May the deacons with their wives, remember the blessing of "a good degree" is to those who "use the office of a deacon well." Not such an capity degree as is conferred by men upon one another in the secret societies, but a degree to be conferred by God. "A good degree" in the favor of a Savior's love,—"a good degree" with Him "of whom the whole family in Heaven and earth is named." "A good degree" amid the "stars" of Heaven,—yea, "a good degree" with those that shall wear the crown of glory and walk the streets of the new Jerusalem. In the language of Paul to the saints, bishops and deacons at Philippi, we would say; "Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ!"

TO THE UNCONVERTED.

"And it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—9: 27, 28.

It is evident that the apostle in the above named chapter, is treating, in the first place, on the first covenant which stood in meats and drinks and in diverse washings and ordinances imposed on them till the time of reformation. Now we learn that on account of the weakness and imperfection of the law: the comers thereunto could not be made perfect, although they were obedient in offering divers sacrifices and offerings and burnt-offerings and offerings for sin; yet there was a remembrance made of sins every year. This was because the law was a mere figure or shadow of good things to come, but we thank God we live under the new covenant; for it is able to make us wise unto salvation, for it was not possible that the blood of goats and calves could take away sin, hence it pleased the Father of the universe, to send his Son, in whom dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, to offer himself once for sin; and by so doing he hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. Hence it is in the gospel of Christ that we learn that here we have no continuing city, and that it is appointed unto men once to die. Therefore we wish to warn the unconverted man and woman, to flee from the wrath to come and take hold of eternal life, while it is yet called to-day with them; because death will soon come, and when once the icy arms of death encircles around us like the sable curtain of the night, then all creature help will fail. Therefore I earnestly entreat you my dear reader, to seek the Lord while he may found, and call upon his name while he is in the way, that he may have mercy upon you, in the present time and in eternity. Oh think of eternity, of incomprehensive eternity; without beginning or end! While you are in health! the time to serve the Lord. Jesus calls for you today by saying: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest, take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." My dear reader, this is the rest I desire you and me to enjoy after death, that we may reign with Christ and the saints, where we shall feast upon joys that are unspeakable and full of glory; and in order to enjoy that rest, we must believe in the Lord Jesus as our only Savior, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Now dear reader, in the exercise of faith that works by love, the heart or mind is entirely changed from evil thoughts to good thoughts, and instead of thinking about evil things, we will endeavor to do good to all men as far as lays in our power. It is repentance that changes our conduct, from evil works to good works, such as God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them, and by being baptized in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, we are brought into the kingdom of God's dear Son, in whom we have redemption through his blood, according to the riches of his grace; even the forgiveness of our sins, &c. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment, so we learn in the last clause of this verse that death is not the end of man, for Christ will sit upon the throne of His glory, and separate the righteous from the wicked; the righteous he will place on his right hand and the wicked on his left hand, &c., Matt.—25th chap. There we shall be able to discern between the righteous and the wicked, and him that serves God and him that serves him not. Christ once offered to bear the sins of many. Now the reason why Christ was once offered to bear the sins of this world is this, that Adam, our representative in sin, by disobedience fell from that state of holiness wherein he was created; hence it was not possible, that fallen man could be restored again into the favor and friendship of God without a mediator, and Inspiration teaches us that there was none found in heaven or on earth, that could redeem man from the dilemma in which he placed himself by disobeying God's holy law, save the Son of God, therefore Christ came into this world of sorrow, and became obedient unto death even to the death of the cross; and in doing so, he hath brought life and immortality to light, that whosoever believes in him should not perish, but have eternal life. Now dear reader, by the above we learn, that by the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, and by the obedience of Christ many may be made righteous. Oh, dear sinners, remember how God loved you, and gave himself in the person of his Son to reconcile you again into God's favor and friendship. Then look to the tree of the cross, and remember that our redemption cost the blood of Christ. Oh how the Lord of glory suffered for you and me; we soon will have to leave this place of abode, and go to the spirit land, from whence no traveler hath returned; and dear reader, remember, that not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven.

Now to them that look for him (that is for Jesus,) shall he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation. According to the signs given by our Savior, we may look for him to make his second advent soon: and if so, brethren and sisters, let us labor to enter into the rest that is prepared for the children of God. Oh, let us all take warning, by the admonition of the Lord, when he saith, "be ye also ready, for in an hour when ye think not the Son of man cometh," and when he comes he will gather his elect from the four quarters of the earth, and they that have been faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and ascend up with those who are resurrected and meet the Lord in the air and ever be with him in glory.

Now, dear reader, if this will find its way to you through the PILGRIM, I hope you will find some encouragement in it to press on toward the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus. May the grace of God, and the Communion of the Holy Spirit, rest upon the Israel of God, is my hearts desire and prayer.

I find by reading the PILGRIM that the brethren have good meetings in some places. I hope that the time is not far distant when those good meetings, may be more general all over the world, that much good may be accomplished in these last times, for Christ's sake and so Amen.

HENRY GARST.

CHRIST THE RISEN SAVIOR.

"Now is Christ risen from the dead."

that in any other case he who should not be satisfied with it would be deemed skeptical almost to insanity.

This is, however, but a very small part of the evidence afforded us in this important affair. Saul, the persecutor, was a man endowed with superior talents, cultivated by education, and possessed of peculiar advantage for rising in the world of which he was evidently availing himself while gratifying his implacable enmity to the gospel, yet was he all at once converted into a most zealous preacher of that faith which he had attempted to destroy, and renouncing all his former principles and worldly prospects, yea, exasperating above measure his powerful patrons and employees, he spent all the remnant of his days in the most self-denying labors, hardships and sufferings, endured with the greatest alacrity for the sake of Christ and the gospel, and at length sealed his testimony with his blood. How can this fact be accounted for unless we allow the truth of his narrative concerning the manner of his conversion, and if that be allowed, the resurrection of Christ is demonstrated in this chapter. This man declares that Christ appeared after his resurrection to above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remained to that time. This was one appeal to nearly three hundred living witnesses of that truth. But no one ever attempted to disprove the truth of his assertion, though false teachers would have concurred with open enemies in such an attempt, had it been practicable. The testimony of the apostles to the resurrection of Jesus, implied a charge of the most complicated wickedness against the rulers of the Jewish Nation. These had power in their hands and were ready to vindicate their characters and punish those who thus accused them. This might readily have been done had they produced the Roman soldiers in court to testify that the body of Jesus had been stolen, or to state in what way it had been removed from the sepulchre. But in fact they had bribed the soldiers to circulate a self-contradictory report on this subject which would not bear investigation, and when St. Matthew soon afterward charged this publicly upon them, and declared that story was generally current among the Jews, to that time no one attempted to deny or disprove the charge. In every case of this nature silence must be construed into a confession of guilt, and if the rulers could have accounted for the removal of the body without either admitting the charge of Matthew or our Lord's Resurrection, no doubt can reasonably be made, but that they would have done it in the most public manner. Every reflecting person must perceive that the evidence is completely satisfactory, provided it can be made clear that their books were published at the time to which they refer. To obviate therefore, every doubt and without engaging in an argument I would inquire at what subsequent time it could have been possible to obtain credit to writings of this description. If manuscripts said to have been long concealed in some library, be produced, or published as the work of an eminent author, who flourished two or three centuries ago it immediately is subjected to a severe scrutiny, and imposture in such cases seldom escapes detection. But writings which contain a circumstantial narrative of things not done in a corner, but in the open view of mankind, during several years connected with an epistolary correspondence resulting from them, could never have obtained the least credit in the world.

If published after the times referred to, with an express appeal to mankind that they all have been familiarly acquainted with, then such an insolent attempt to persuade whole nations out of their senses and understanding must have excited universal astonishment and indignation, or had it been possible to convince a few individuals that they had received these books from their ancestors, and been taught from infancy to revere them as the writings of the apostles, when in fact neither they nor any other persons had ever before seen or heard of them. The effrontery of the deceivers and the credulity of the deceived, must have constituted an unprecedented event and marked the age in which it occurred. As therefore no time can be mentioned when any attempt of this kind is so much as hinted at by either Christian, Jewish, or Pagan historians, we might become confident that the writings in question extant, and well known in the church from the very period in which they are said to have been published, even had we no other evidence. But no impartial man of learning can be imposed upon by any pretense of this kind, having access to abundant proof of another nature, that the books of the New Testament were extant in the early ages of Christianity, and this argument is principally adduced for the benefit of those who have neither leisure nor advantages for these investigations. We should also remember that on the day of pentecost, immediately following the resurrection of Christ, the Holy Spirit was poured out on the assembled apostles with such extraordinary circumstances as drew together vast multitudes who then resided at Jerusalem. In the presence of all these witnesses they spake fluently and correctly in the language of several countries from which their hearers were collected, though it was certainly known that they had not the opportunity of learning them, and this miracle together with Peter's sermon on the occasion was made effectual to the conversion of three thousand persons. The gifts of tongues and of working miracles in the name of Jesus were ever after continued to them and were frequently exercised in the most public and undeniable manner before numerous witnesses; enemies as well as friend. The same powers were likewise communicated to many others by the laying on of the Apostles hands. The time, places, occasion and circumstances of these extraordinary transactions are frequently specified in their writing. Thus the inhabitants of many cities and countries were appealed to, and the enemies of Christianity were challenged to disprove their pretensions, but none ever attempted to do it for the Jews themselves do not.

PRAYING WITHOUT CEASING.

During a series of meetings, held by brethren D. F. Good, J. F. Oller, M. Miller and G. Mourer, there was much said on the subject of prayer. I read an article lately on praying without ceasing which I think worthy of being published.

"A number of ministers were assembled for the discussion of difficult questions, and among others it was asked how the command to pray without ceasing could be complied with. Various oppositions were started, and at length one of the number was appointed to write an essay upon it to read at the monthly meeting, which being overheard by a female servant, she exclaimed, 'What, a whole month wanted to tell the meaning of the text! It's one of the easiest and best texts in the Bible.'

"Well, well, Mary, said an old minister, what can you say about it? Let us know how you understand it. Can you pray at all times?

O yes sir.

What, when you have got so many things to do?

Why sir the more I have to do the more I can pray.

Well Mary, do let us know how it is for most people think otherwise.

Well sir, said the girl, when I first open my eyes in the morning, I pray the Lord to open the eyes of my understanding, and while I am dressing I pray that I may have strength equal to my day; when I begin to kindle the fire, I pray that God's work may revive in my soul and as I sweep the house I pray that my heart may be cleansed from all its impurities, and while preparing breakfast I desire to be fed with the hidden manna, and the sincere talk of the word, and as I am busy with the little children I look up to God as my Father, and pray for the spirit of adoption, that I may be his child, and so on all day; everything I do furnishes me with a thought for prayer.

Enough, enough, cried the old divine, these things are revealed to babes and often hid from the wise and prudent. Go on Mary, to pray without ceasing. As for us, my brothers, let us bless the Lord for this exposition, and remember that He has said the meek will guide in judgment."

Dear brethren and sisters, if we all could pray without ceasing what a blessing it would be to us. We would not have room for so many unnecessary things, we would be so much happier.

THE GRAVE.

Dear Pilgrim, have you ever thought of the solemn word, "The Grave?" Oh how solemn. Who is it that has not followed some near friends to the grave. Dear pilgrims let us all try and be ready to meet the pale white horse and not be alarmed at his coming for we will all have to go to the grave whether prepared or unprepared as we are going down every day, and methinks when I see the coffin lid closed for the last time over these smiling faces, can it be that this is the last look forever in this world. Oh how solemn to think over these solemn thoughts while we are traveling to the grave, for God is no respector of persons. Thus it is that death often runs from the sickly to the healthy and from aged to the strong man in his prime, from the miserable wretch who longs for the grave to the smiling babe in its mother's arms. He pours his putrefying breath and leaves nothing in that mother's house but lonesomeness. All that is now left you is the little grave. How sad and lonely is the mother who is called to weep the loss of her departed infant, who is called to give up that loved one whose smiles were so bright and fair as she lays it in the cold damp earth and returns home to her house of mourning. There she sees her empty cradle, no friend can fill the place of her lost one.

Young mother, what can friendship say
To soothe the anguish of the day?
I've felt it all, alas, too well, I know
How vain all earthly power to hush thy woe.

I've sat and watched by the dying bed,
And burning tears of anguish shed.
I've gazed upon the sweet but pallid face,
And there I've tried some comfort to trace.

I've listened to the short and struggling breath,
I've saw the cherub eye grow dim in death
Like thee I've veiled my head in gloom.
And laid my first born in the tomb.

A LEAF FROM MY KNOWLEDGE DRAWER.

Jesus never did anything that was not necessary; it was not necessary for him to go into the water to be sprinkled: but Jesus did go into the water: therefore he was not sprinkled.

Those who obey Jesus the best love him the most, and those who love him with all their heart, obey him with all their might.

Those who refuse to be baptized, do not follow in the foot-steps of Jesus, since the way that Jesus trod lay through the gate of baptism.

The Bible never once calls either sprinkling or pouring baptism; hence if either sprinkling or pouring is baptism, those who wrote the Bible either did not know it, or refused to tell what they did know.

Our English word baptism is from the Greek word baptismo, the meaning of which is dipping; hence "One Lord, one faith, one dipping."

Our English word baptize is from the Greek word baptizo; the meaning of which is dip or immerse.

If Paul referred to single immersion when he said "one baptism" then that method of baptizing must have been in use at that time. But single immersion was not invented until nearly 300 years after Paul's death. Therefore he did not refer to single immersion when he said "one baptism."

J. H. MOORE.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT.—Exclude light from a plant and it becomes sickly and unprofitable, so with the soul devoid of spiritual light and influence, it soon becomes sickly and unprofitable, and is cast out into "outer darkness" where there is "weeping and gnashing of teeth."

The plant that grows in the light and warmth of the sun is clothed in verdure,—flowers expand and fruit matures. So with the soul that is lit up with "the light of the world" it flourishes in the verdure of a life "hid in Christ." The christian graces bloom in great beauty, and fruits immortal are gathered when the eternal harvest comes.—J. S. Flory.

HAVE A FIXED PURPOSE.—Small is the number of human beings who follow any definite or particular plan during life. Millions spend a long and healthful life without having accomplished comparatively anything. A large majority of mankind set out at the beginning of maturity, without a fixed purpose, and while numbers come out almost anywhere thousands end life the next thing to nowhere. Have a fixed purpose in life, and stick to it. Though you may not be great, there is a noble chance to be wise and useful, and these are the secret corner stones of true greatness.—J. H. Hoare.

SCRIPTURES.—A noble book! All men's book! It is our first, oldest statement of the never ending problem,—man's destiny, and God's ways with him here on earth; and all in such free-flowing outlines,—grand in its sincerity, in its simplicity, in its epic melody, and repose of reconcilement.—Carlyle.

I HAVE read it through many times; I now make a practice of going through it once a year. It is a book of all others for lawyers, as well as divines; and I pity the man who cannot find it a rich supply of thought, and rule for conduct.—David Webster.

Selections.

THE Lord, our Shepherd coming out to hunt the lost sheep, puts on no regal apparel, but the plain garment of our humanity. There was nothing pretentious about it. I know the old painters represent a halo around the babe, Jesus, but I don't suppose that there was any more halo about that child than about the head of any other babe that was born that Christmas eve in Judea. Becoming a man, he wore a seamless garment. The scissors and needle had done nothing to make it graceful. I take it to have been a sack with three holes in it, one for the neck and two for the arms. Although the gamblers quarrelled over it, that is no evidence of its value. I have seen two ragpickers quarrel over the refuse of an ash-barrel. No! in the wardrobe of heaven, he left the sandals of light, the girdles of beauty, the robes of power. The work of saving this world was rough work, rugged work, hard work; and Jesus put on the raiment, the plain raiment, of our flesh. The storms were to beat him, the crowds were to jostle him, the dust was to sprinkle him, the mobs were to pursue him. O Shepherd of Israel! leave at home thy bright array; for thee, what streams to ford, what nights all unsheltered! He puts upon him the raiment of our humanity, wears our woes, and while earth and heaven and hell stand amazed at the abnegation, wraps around him the shepherd's plaid.—Talmage.

THE Christian wants to know no new thing, but to have his heart more elevated above the world, by secluding himself from it as much as his duties will allow, that religion may affect this its great end, by bringing its sublime hopes and prospects into more steady action upon the mind. Recollection is the life of religion.—Cecil.

BUT what is a trust in God good for that departs when you need it, and comes again only when you can't get along without? What is a ship good for that is safe in the harbor but unsafe on the ocean? What is a sail good for that is sound in a calm, but split in the first wind? What patience is that which only lasts when there is nothing to bear? Courage, when there is no danger; firmness where is no pressure; hope, when everything is before the eyes—what are all these worth? But such is not the trust which most Christians have in God. It has no virtue in it. It is like a lighthouse that burns only in daylight, and is extinguished at sundown.

SOME malady which you do not understand troubles and alarms you. The physician is called. Thinking that the illness proceeds from a certain inflamatory process on a portion of your skin, you anxiously direct his attention to the spot. Silently but sympathizingly, he looks at the place where you have bidden him look, and because you have bidden him look there, but soon he turns away. He is busy with an instrument on another part of your body. He presses his trumpet-tube gently to your breast, and listens for the pulsations which faintly but distinctly pass through. He looks and listens there, and saddens as he looks. You again direct his attention to the cutaneous eruption which annoys you. He sighs and sits silent. When you reiterate your request that something should be done for the external eruption, he gently shakes his head, and answers not a word. From this silence you would learn the truth at last, you would not miss its meaning long.

O! miss not the meaning of the Lord when he points to the seat of soul's disease: "Ye will not come." These, his enemies, dwell in your heart.—William Arnot.

A JUDICIOUS silence is always better than truth spoken without charity. The most powerful remedy against sudden starts of impatience is a sweet and amiable silence. However little one speaks, self-love will have a share in it, and some word will escape that may sour the heart and disturb its peace for a considerable time. When nothing is said, and cheerfulness preserved, the storm subsides; anger and indiscretion are put to flight, and nothing remains but a joy pure and lasting.—Francis de Sales.

To be despised, reprehended, or accused by wicked men, is pleasant to a man of good heart; but to suffer blame or ill-treatment from the virtuous, or from our friends and relations, is the test of true patience. Be patient not only with respect to the subject of the affliction which may befall you, but also with regard to its accessories or accidental circumstances. We must preserve the whole interior of our breast always sweet.—Francis de Sales.

ONE WORD.—Madge had a spoiled day. It was just one little word that did it all. Madge had sprung out of bed that morning determined to try to do good; but when Ned happened to spill his coffee on her new dress, she forgot her good resolutions, and declared that he was the most provoking fellow in the world. Then Ned grew angry and "answered back," and after that everything went wrong all day, for never a day goes pleasantly that begins with angry words.

DEBATE.—There will be a debate four miles north of Marysville, commencing on Tuesday, April 8th, at half past nine o'clock a. m. to continue four days, between A. C. Hanger of the Christians, and J. J. Moss of the Disciples, on the following questions:

1. "Do the Scriptures teach that repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, without baptism, are for remission of sins?" A. C. Hanger affirms.

2. "Do the Scriptures teach that baptism is as essential for remission of sins, as repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ?" J. J. Moss, affirms.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM. — Rev. J. L. M. Curry, LL. D., of Richmond, Va., recently delivered a lecture in Hanson-Street Baptist church, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the subject of "Baptists and Soul Liberty," in which he says: "For their championship of religious liberty the Baptists have suffered ignominy, insult and persecution from the State and from other denominations. They have been imprisoned in Berlin, butchered in France, oppressed in England whipped in Massachusetts, sent to jail in Virginia. They have been banished, burned, starved, drowned, and slain by the sword, for maintaining that God alone is Lord of the conscience. In Virginia the House of Burgesses taxed its ingenuity to the utmost to devise punishments for those who preached the gospel without Episcopal ordination. These facts are recorded by historians of other denominations, and the records of jails in Virginia to-day contain the proofs of Baptist faithfulness and martyrdom."

EVANGELIZATION IN LIBERIA.—Three are waiting to be baptized in Monrovia, Africa, and twelve in Caldwell. At the Baptist Mission in Few Georgia eighteen were baptized a few Sabbaths ago. Seven at Freeman station were also candidates. Most of these converts are native and half civilized Congoes.

JEWISH CONVERTS.—Sixty years ago, there was hardly a Jewish convert to Christianity in Great Britain. Now there twenty thousand converts on the Continent and three thousand in England, of whom one hundred are clergymen of the Church of England. In the University of Berlin twenty-eight of the professors are converted Jews.

THE JAPAN MISSION.—When the missionaries of the Reformed Church reached Japan, before they had time to learn the language, a door of usefulness was opened to them the Japanese youths, who were eager to learn the English language. Soon Bible classes were formed in all their schools. The presence of so many Japanese studying in our American schools is a direct result of their labors CHURCH DESTROYED. — During the prevalence of a severe storm on the 2nd inst., the church of Little Beaver, Presbytery of Shenango, Penn., was blown down. Services had been held in the morning, and was announced for in the evening; if a congregation had been present at the time of the calamity, there certainly would have been a great loss of life. The building was repaired and renovated some two years ago at considerable outlay. Rev. David Harrison, of the Presbytery of Blairsville, had just been called to the pastorate. The loss will fall heavily on the people, who will receive the sympathy of others.

Constance the scene of martyrdom of John Huss and Jerome of Prague, had just been the scene of a demonstration in favor of the Old Catholic cause. On Sunday, Feb. 9th, Professor Michelis and Friedrich addressed an enthusiastic meeting of between two and three thousand people from all parts of the land bordering on the lake, and with such effect, that the next day a plebiscite was taken of the Constance Catholics, when 653 declared their non-adherence to the Infallibility party. The scene, so report the papers, was most exciting, all work was stopped, and the greatest interest stirred up: the priests had sent out fly sheets, urging the people to vote against the Reformers, but in vain. The Swiss reform movement had infected the neighboring Badeners, and they flocked to the poll. Two Churches are forthwith to be demanded from the Government.

Bells and Church Divisions.

A writer in the Baptist Weekly says: A very hard-hearted clapper in an old church tower professed the intensest distress because its bell was hopelessly cracked. Many people thought it a pitiable position, and wished the sad-hearted clapper a better bell. But just then the Ghost of ancient Diogenes, the sage, floated in through the window, and whistled most angrily: "Master Clapper, cease your noise, and remember, in the first place, you cracked the bell; and, secondly, nobody would have known it had you not told them" I have observed often that those who bemoan divisions in a church are those who make them; and I also observed sometimes that they who make them are most ready to publish the fact; I have observed another fact, viz., that all clappers are not as good metal as the bells they crack.

Youth's Department

SPEECH OF "KING ALCOHOL."

DEAR FRIENDS AND COADJUTORS:—Let me first briefly consider what I have done in the past. As I turn the pages of history, and glance back adown the ages, I almost feel constrained to ask: What have I not done in the past? From my very birth, I have trod the earth, conquering and to conquer. I have brought ruin to kings and to kingdoms. I have crushed poets and scholars, sculptors and scientists, orators and artists, as worms beneath my heel.

I have crushed the best feelings of the human heart. I have brought the gray hairs of the aged to the grave in sorrow. I have made widows weep and orphans mourn. I have separated families, broken the hearts of wives and mothers, and blighted the lives of little children. I have caused vice, crime and ignorance. I have caused starvation, disease and death. I have changed men into demons. Wherever I have gone, there have also gone slavery, war and bloodshed. I have stalked in the halls of legislation, and blasted the fair hopes of friends of learning. I have built poorhouses and filled them with paupers. I have built jails and prisons, and filled them with criminals and convicts. I have built asylums, and peopled them with orphans. I have erected scaffolds and caused man to murder his fellow man; to take a human life, to blot out all that strength and courage which make him famous among men; "all the probabilities in life of a gifted man; the renown, the position, the pleasures, the profits, the keen, ecstatic joy, that never could be made up,—all ended quite," nothing left but the unsightly corpse, which must soon be buried from sight. All this have I done, and then smiled as I fastened the rope around his neck that was to launch him forth into eternity.

At present, I am spreading disease, desolation, death, misery, vice, crime, jails, prisons and scaffolds, and filled orphan asylums throughout the civilized world. I know it is said that free schools, colleges, universities, seminaries, and, in fact, all places of learning, science and art, the press and the pulpit, are retarding my progress. No doubt but they will retard my progress in every way possible; they are my enemies and ever have been. But they cannot stop me. Stop me!

They might as well attempt to dam up the Niagara, or let the ocean into the heart of Vesuvius. I never was more prosperous than at the present moment. Hear what they themselves say of me. "He is yearly destroying 600,000 lives in the United States alone. He is yearly sending to prison 100,000 men and women. He is annually sending to the poorhouse 200,000 children." (A large per cent. of these children will grow up in ignorance and want, and eventually consent to become my servants). "He is yearly causing 300 murders to be committed; he annually causes 400 suicides. He annually bequeaths to private and public charity 200,000 orphans." All this, in United States alone!

When my enemies are forced to make this acknowledgment, who says my power is waning? Nor is this all. My traffic against the laws of God and man is rapidly increasing. I am yearly gathering strength and marshalling my forces for the conflict that is surely approaching—the conflict that is either to leave me victor in possession of the field, to scatter my seeds of hell at pleasure, and to my harvests of drunkenness and vice at will, or to witness my utter annihilation, to see me lie down to sleep my last sleep, to hear the rattle in my throat, to see my eye swim in agony (blessed sound and blessed sight to the friends of temperance, peace and love), and see me buried so far from the memories of men that to future generations my name will be unknown. But until that day does come, until the last hour of my existence, this shall be the motto, written in letters of blood upon the black banner under which I march: "To make countless thousands mourn."—The Young Folks Rural.

CULTIVATE THAT PLANT.

You have a plant on your window—a rare plant. You expect that in due time it will bring forth a flower. You are careful of it. You attend to it regularly. You think of it often, and supply its wants. You watch its growth and developments. You show it to your friends. In short, it is your favorite—your nurseling, and the hope of your heart.

Now, my young friend, we find no fault with what you do. It is rather a taste which we would encourage: for the heart is always improved when it loves, and is interested in something that is lovely. What we wish to say is this: you have within you such a plant, which, if properly cultivated, will bring forth a far lovlier flower than any earth has ever yielded. Your own spirit may be made to blossom in heaven, covered with all the graces of the Spirit. Cultivate it carefully. Have it always in your thoughts. Watch its growth; labor for its improvement; make it the favorite, and hope of your heart. It is of more value than many flowers.

The same bread feeds angels and and men, souls in glory, and travellers in grace.

In Memory of Sister Sarah Furgason, Dec'd.

The subject of this notice was born on the 16th of November, A. D., 1850, being the third child of our esteemed Bro. Robert and sister Susan Furgason. Surrounded by the hallowed influences of a christian home, she grew to the age of womanhood, and entered the gay society that is in the world, and is so attractive to the young mind, carnally inclined to imbibe the errors that are cast abroad for truth at the present day. Still her heart was of a religious and God-fearing turn, and she manifested a disposition to do the bidding of Him who saith, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

Her first religious impressions to which she gave heed so as to inquire for the ways of salvation, were received at a protracted meeting conducted by the "Brethren in Christ," or as they are more familiarly known, "Shumakarians." She entered into Church relation with them, and continued that union until after her health began to fail, and then her mind still remained for a while apparently unchanged, as to her future welfare for time and eternity. Neither knew we any change in her mind religiously, until during the winter of 1872, when Bro. Jesse Calvert, from Milford, Ind., was with us, and preached to all that assembled the sure testimonies of the Lord. It was then that the messenger of the Covenant came to her once more through his preached gospel and in silent meditation, that caused her mind to undergo a change, when she concluded to change the Church relations and made application to be received into the Church, and afflicted as she was, in her affliction, with dropsy in its loathsomeness, and quite weak, in the midst of the cold, on the 23rd of January, A. D., 1872, she was conveyed to the water in a sleigh, and then we led her down into the liquid water and there, according to the appointment of her divine Lord, she was baptized, and though the water was at the freezing point; with a warm heart and strong faith in the promises of the Savior, she endured as a faithful soldier of the cross of Christ, and was enabled to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Before Bro. Calvert bade us farewell she was annointed with oil in the name of the Lord according to the direction of the Lord, James—5: 14, 15. Meanwhile all that skill and kindness could do was done to relieve her sufferings. Tapping was resorted to by the physicians and was performed successfully eleven times, and thirty-two gallons of water taken from her. This all along, gave her more or less relief until the last time, which was not so effective, as it appeared that death had marked her for his own, and on the morning of March 4th, the sorrow stricken family and some waiting friends gathered in her room, round her bed, to see the king of terrors do his work. Her last hours were peaceful, as upon the bosom of Jesus she leaned her head and realized that "Jesus can make a dying bed feel soft as downy pillows are."

There lay the body of clay, lifeless, to be laid on the cooling board by kind though reluctant hands. On the following day the remains were escorted to the narrow house by a large escort of mourning relations and sympathizing friends. There she lies among the remembered dead. Yes there all that is mortal of sister Sarah sleeps the long, dreamless sleep of death till the "Lord himself shall descend from the heavens with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." And dear father, mother, brother and sisters, friends and relatives, old and young, she being dead yet speaketh to you in well-known accents, which exhort you, to choose the Savior she has chosen, to cultivate the virtues which she has recommended, to live disinterestedly, live for immortality.

"It is not all of life to live.
Nor all of death to die."

On Sunday the 10th of March the friends and community generally assembled at our meeting house, to listen to the funeral services of our sister which we conducted as God gave us utterance from 2 Cor.—5: 1. And we had as interesting an audience as is necessary to have on such an occasion as this.

It seems, it is sad to give sister Sarah up at the youthful age of 22 yrs., 3 mos. and 18 days, yet we have the bright anticipation of meeting her once more, not on any earthly shore, not beneath any changing sky, but on the sunny shore of the river of life, beneath the smiling presence of God, and with her roam the Father's house of many mansions where parted friends will meet again to exchange kindliest greeting with each other.

"When, O, thou city of my God,
Shall I thy courts ascend,
Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbath's never end?

"Apostles, martyrs prophet's there,
Around my Savior stand,
And soon my friends in Christ I'll ev'n,
Will join the glorious band."

STILL ONWARD.

Dear Pilgrim:—I feel encouraged now, and desire to inform you and your many readers of our pilgrimage here in Missouri. It is now just nine years since I penetrated my way through, the centre of northern Missouri, westward into Kansas; at that time not knowing of any brethren anywhere in Mo. I learned since however, that there were a few members in Knox and Schuyler counties, and a few in Clinton Co., and one sister in Cedar at that time. When the war closed emigration began to pour into this state from the East, North, and West, and congregations were soon organized here and there throughout the state. But up to four years ago our district was composed of Mo., Kansas, and I believe Nebraska. Last May this State was divided into two districts after having composed one district for three years. The districts are called North and South Mo. districts. On the 7th of this month—March—the North Mo. district met for the first time, and organized for council, choosing for moderator, brother George Witwer, and for clerk brother Eli Metz, for assistant clerk and corresponding secretary C. C. Root. Of the ten congregations of which the district is composed, six were represented, all by delegates. Out of the six churches, ten ministers were present, and four absent. What an interesting council would North Mo. afford were it fully represented! Twenty three ministers according to the proportion of the churches represented, besides other delegates and members. Now according to the above statistics is not the word onward an appropriate motto for pilgrims here. But to this date of our pilgrimage here let us rear up a pillar in our hearts and call it Ebenezer. COR. SECRETARY.

ROSEVILLE, O. }
March 11, 1873. }

Bros. Brumbaugh:—I have read some eight or nine Nos. of the PILGRIM and I can truly say that I am much pleased with the paper. We think that there might be much good accomplished if we could induce our neighbors and friends to take the PILGRIM or some other one of the Brethren's periodicals. Brethren and sisters we can all do something toward enlarging Zion's borders. There are not many of us but what have some friends or neighbors out of Christ, and Oh! let us think for one moment; are we using every means in our power to bring them into the fold of Christ? If we are not it is high time we make an effort. Let us be up and adoing while it is called day for when the night cometh no man can work. Brethren and sisters let us be alive in the cause of our Master. Oh may we let our light shine so that our friends and neighbors may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus and learned of Him. Let us remember there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance. Let us use every available means in our power to bring sinners to Christ, and not hide our talent as did the slothful servant, but let us improve it. Yes, improve it to the honor and glory of God and the salvation of souls. Let us be willing to spend and be spent in the cause of our Master and ever remember that our work will soon be done. God grant that all may live and work as we will wish we had done when we come to die that it may be said to us, "come up higher." NOAH HORN.

Dear Pilgrim: — This evening through the mercies of God, I am spared and am enjoying one of the best of blessings, good health, and am thankful this evening that the great privilege is given me to correspond with so valuable paper as the PILGRIM. What a great blessing it is to weak humanity that through the silent pen we may converse with distant friends.

Dear PILGRIM, since it is your motive as well as mine to work in the Master's cause in trying to build up Zion, we will put our trust in God and work together for good hoping that if this is worthy of your columns that it may find its way to some lone heart, and that to do good. I believe there is work for you and me to do as well as for all others who love to see sinners come to Christ. I am young in the Master's cause and it is a sore regret to me that I did not give my heart to God at an earlier time than I did. Dear PILGRIM, the friend of sinners, press onward and upward, strive that you may send glad tidings of joy to every heart and home, and God grant that you may hurl the Gospel news to every family when fictitious reading covers mantle and shelf. Time may not be long any more, therefore dear brethren and sisters, let us work for Jesus. The best we can do will not repay those drops of blood that stood on our dear Redeemer in Gethsemane Garden. We cannot repay the great agony the Savior underwent for us poor sinful creatures. We do not deserve Heaven as home if we think of ourselves alone, when there are thousands that know not Christ. A Christian's life is marked with trials and troubles on the way, and many temptations are in our path daily, but our trials here will only make it brighter there if we prove faithful to the end. What if the waters may be deep, dark and rapid. What if they do threaten to engulf us in their angry waves, is not God on the other side? Yes he is there on that evergreen shore, and beckons us come on. If we only trust in him his grace is sufficient for us all. He has promised to be with us and will lead us safely through the valley and shadow of death—and when life with all its sorrows and cares are over we may meet those dear old Fathers, those dear old Mothers and all those loved ones gone before, where crowns of life are laid up for all those who love God. May we all pray that there may be at least one star in that crown for us, and may we all meet in that better world where parting will be known no more, there to sing God's praise through endless ages of eternity on Canaan's peaceful shore.

DIED.

WAGONER.—In the North Fork of Wildcat Church, Pyrmont, Carroll Co., Ind., February 28, 1873, sister Catharine, wife of brother David D. Wagoner, aged 21 years, 8 months, and 8 days. Funeral services by Elder Isaac Cripe and Samuel Ullery.

She leaves a sorrowing husband and two little stepsons to mourn their loss. The evening previous to her death she was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord.

CATHALINE D. MICHAEL.

MILLER.—Near Dayton, Ohio, Jan. 24, '73, brother Joseph B. Miller, aged 27 years, 6 months and 24 days. Disease strangulated brain. Funeral service by brethren Nead, Brubaker and others, from Rev. 14: 13.

The noiseless footsteps of death crossed the threshold and removed the center of family attraction and delight. Brother Miller was afflicted several months, and suffered much. He bowed in humble submission to the afflicting hand of Providence, and was resigned to the Master's will, to live or die. Seeing the will of the Lord concerning him indicated a departure to the spirit land, he arranged his temporal affairs, providing liberally for his dear, but now bereft companion, whom he committed to the "widow's husband" above. In the early part of his illness, he called on the Elders of the church, and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. He calmly met the approaching message, and resigned his departing spirit to the care and keeping of the Savior.

Whilst in the tomb our father lies,
His spirit rests above;
In realms of bliss it never dies,
But knows a Savior's love.

W.

FISHER.—In the Monticello District, White Co., Ind., Feb. 4, '73, Bro. Samuel Fisher, formerly of Franklin Co. Va., aged 48 years and one day. Also Feb. 2, '73, Elizabeth F., daughter of the above, and sister Rebecca Fisher, aged 8 years, 1 month and 9 days, both died of brain fever, being sick only a few days.

On the 6th their remains were conveyed to their last resting place by a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors, and both laid in one grave. Truly a solemn scene to see father and daughter lie side by side in the cold embrace of death, warning old and young to prepare to meet their God. The occasion was improved from the words, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain," by brother Jos. Amich and the writer, and we hope the warning will not altogether be in vain. May God graciously smile upon the bereaved widow and the rest of her family, who have had to undergo some severe trials since they made their home among us. In the Spring of 1868 one of their sons was killed by lightning, and in the Spring of 1872 one died with brain fever, and now father and daughter at one time are taken from our dear sister. O that the remaining children may strive to meet them in a better world, where no such solemn trials are to be endured, but where friends can meet with immortal bodies, and sing, O death, where is thy sting! O grave where is thy victory!

MISNER.—On the same farm, old mother Misner January 22, and on the 25th, a little grand-daughter of hers.. Funeral improved by the writer.

EDUCATIONAL.

In a communication to the Pilgrim several months ago, we noticed briefly the propriety of the Brethren in the East making a move towards the erection of school buildings, and the establishment of a school that would meet the apparent want of the Church. Of late this question seems to be more agitated, and the project in some localities meets with a degree of approval, that promises fair for a move in this direction. In view of this we are stimulated to again take up our pen, and drop a few thoughts relative to this important project.

We are aware there are those who differ from us, as to the propriety of having a school under the supervision of the Brethren, but we always regard the opinions of others with deference, and are not disposed to look upon our own as always being right, and those of others as always wrong. We hope then that those who think differently, will allow us the privilege of giving our sentiments without any unpleasant reflections.

Some of our aged brethren look upon schools as an innovation, and one too, that is likely to bring about direful results. We do not by any means, censure them for having these fears, and indeed they are not without grounds. There is a tendency to drift into the popular current in reference to this matter, and if we will allow ourselves to move with this current, it will certainly result in the downfall of our glorious Zion.

We will notice briefly some of the objections that are brought against schools. Says a brother, "Colleges lead pride into the Church." We agree that Colleges might lead pride into the Church as well as might many other things. But Colleges has never led pride into the Church of the Brethren, nor is it likely they will very soon; therefore the result of colleges cannot exist, and brethren, we think, would better not make a positive declaration in reference to a thing that does not exist, nor was never known to exist. We have a school that, as far as known to us, is in successful operation, but the term college is really, we think, not appropriate. There are hundreds of institutions in our land to-day denominated colleges that are far from being such, and would we not, brethren, better adopt the name "Brethren's School," and avoid high sounding titles, especially when such titles are not strictly appropriate? We do not mean by this to cast any reflections on those who are immediately concerned in the school already in progress, as it no doubt meets their ideal of a college. We have one school in the Church, and we do not know what effect it is producing, but we feel confident that if it is nursing pride, the fault rests with those who have charge of it, and not in the school. Pride may be coming into the Church, but it is most likely entering through a wider door than that of schools. There are many ways through which pride may enter the Church, and might it not be that the watchman have conceived the idea that this is the way, while other places are left unguarded.

But will school lead pride into the Church? If our schools are properly conducted, and under the supervision of those who are influenced by Christian principles, there certainly cannot be as much danger as is anticipated. It is a well known fact to all, that we are greatly influenced by those who surround us, and a school under the auspices of the Church will certainly throw its influence in favor of the Church. It must have an influence, and if that influence is not for the Church, it is because it is devoid of the principles of the Church. Pride is governed greatly by surrounding circumstances. We see more of it in some localities than in others, and in some churches than others, all of which depend on the nature of the prevailing influence. Then let the influence of our schools be against pride, as well as other evil, and its influence must certainly have a salutary effect. There are hundreds of our fraternity and their children attending school, and is it not evident to every thinking mind that if these were sent to a school under the influence of the Church, that they would more likely inculcate its principles? If then, the principles of the Church are to fight against pride, which they certainly should be and our schools be governed by these, may they not be a means to keep pride out of the Church?

Again, it is said to be something new, and therefore some object to schools. Schools among the Brethren may be something new, but whether they should have been so is question upon which we might differ from some, but we will not discuss it at this time. The subject and the discussion of it, however, is nothing new, and indeed it is becoming old enough, if there be any virtue in age, to demand some attention. The subject was agitated years ago, and nearly as much accomplished then as now. Schools are nothing new. They have existed for centuries, and we as a Church have, to a limited extent, availed ourselves of the advantages to be derived from them. This we may still continue to do, but unless we will ourselves take hold of the work of education the surrounding influence will certainly lead many, that might be bright and shining ornaments in the Church, away from it. This fact has been so frequently demonstrated that it ought to cause every one to reflect seriously on this subject. Many parents have learned to their sorrow the power of the influence exerted over their sons and daughters while attending school. We can call to mind a number of instances in which brethren's children have united with other churches, all of which their parents attribute to the influence brought to bear upon them while at school. Now if this influence can be avoided, should not the Church make an effort to do so? The Divine injunction is, "Be harmless as doves and wise as serpents," and would there not be wisdom in trying to protect our youth from the influence of the world?

There is an idea extant among part of the Brotherhood at least, that were we to establish schools the design would be to prepare our brethren for the ministry, and that our ministers would finally drift into the same channel with other churches. It is to be feared that there are a few who might favor an idea of this kind, and it is perhaps the sentements of this few, though very indirectly expressed, that forms a basis for this idea. But if there be such at all, they are certainly very few, at any rate this is not the idea, and we can assure you, brethren, that were this so, we would be among the number that would oppose schools. We do think that mental culture might be an advantage to some of our ministers, and we have heard a number of them regret their deficiency in this respect, but if mental culture can be made available in meeting and contesting with the great enemy of souls, our laity need it as much as the ministry. Our ministers are as watchman on the walls of Zion, but when it comes to the contest the laity must help fight the battles. When the great Captain of our salvation wants more watchman, He will call them through the instrumentality of the Church, and if we keep the apostolic method of calling our ministers, we need not fear these innovators.

Now brethren, we have given our opinion in reference to schools in a very brief form, and hope we are understood. Our desire is that the propriety of the Brethren having schools, which may screen our youth from the contaminating influence of the world, receive some thought, and that whatever may be done, will result in good, and tend to the prosperity of the Church, and the furtherance of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

1 THESS. 5:17.

Pray—for the year is ending,
The last thou ere may'st see;
And the life thou would'st be mending
May be never more to be.

Pray—the New Year will open
With hopes that must deceive;
And many a heart be broken,
That's now too proud to grieve.

Pray—for the tempter trieth
The wiles that failed before,
In every path there lieth
The last year's snare and more.

Pray—for death's poisoned arrows
Are flying thick and fast;
And this year's coming sorrows
May be greater than the last.

Pray—for the dark wave's sighing,
That overwhelms the whole;
And winter winds are sighing
A requiem for thy soul.

Pray—now the Savior's waiting
To show thy sins forgiven;
And the Holy Ghost entreating
To seal thee heir of Heaven.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD.

What is Safe and what is not Safe; What is Right and what is not Right.

BY J. H. MOORE.

Chapter I.

THE BIBLE.

The Bible should be our guide in all religious matters, pertaining to the salvation of sinners. This book we know is right, whether other books are right or not. When we get and obey the Bible we get and obey a book that all religious denominations admit to be safe; a book the correctness of which none will question. When we obey this book, we obey a book that all admit to be right, and therefore must acknowledge that our conduct is right, so far as it agrees with the rules of the book. Though other rules found in other books, may be too short to reach heaven, those prescribed in the Bible are not. Though other books may be wrong, the Bible is not, and never can be.

We accept the Bible as our rule of faith and practice. All admit this to be right. Many try to prove that the books that contain the rule of their faith and practice are right, because they are so near like our book. There is no dispute about the Bible, but about their books. We all know that the Bible is both safe and right, and it makes no difference what becomes of their books of discipline. The Bible as a rule of faith and practice does not contradict itself, but their books of faith and practice do from the fact they don't agree. If we adopt the Bible as the only rule of our faith and practice, it makes no odds what they say about other rules, they cannot condemn ours unless they condemn the wisdom of heaven itself. It makes no difference how much they oppose other books they cannot oppose ours.

We are not to be judged by the rules in other books, but by those contained in the Bible. If other books contain the same rules that are found in the Bible, then all right; the more of such rules the better the book, but it can never be better than the Bible. It is not questioned whether the rules in the Bible are right, but are those right that are not in the Bible? It is by the rules in the Bible that we are to be judged in the last day, and not by those that are not in the Bible. Though other books may not be opened on the day of judgment we know the Bible will. People do not say that our rule is nearly right, but they will admit it to be exactly right. They do not say that it is as safe as any, but it is safer than any other. They do not say that the Bible is as good as any book, but it is better than any other. There is not a commandment in the world that has anything to do with the salvation of sinners, that is not in some shape or form found in the Bible, though, there are commandments of men found in other books, that are not in any shape or form connected with the salvation of any person. The Bible contains all the laws that pertain to our salvation though other books may not. When we are in possession of this book we are in possession of all the laws and rules that are demanded in order to secure the salvation of sinners. Furthermore, when we get the Bible, we get the whole truth respecting religion, and nothing but the truth—our entire duty toward God and man. In this noble volume we have all that God requires at the hands of his children, and nothing that he does not require. There are no non-essentials in the work; God is not the author of such productions. We have all that he has commanded, and nothing that he did not command. God never required men, or set of men, to do that which he did not want them to do, nor to obey a law that he did not want them to obey. He does not demand at our hands that which he did not intend that we should do. He never put laws in the Bible to be violated, they were put there to be obeyed. There is no use talking about non-essentials in the Bible, there are none there; the rules were put there to be obeyed.

Chap. II.—OBEDIENCE.

God never punished men simply because they obeyed his commandments. It never was unsafe or wrong to obey all the commands of the Creator, but it has always been unsafe not to obey them. It is not a question whether it is safe to obey the holy book? But is it safe not to obey it? All will agree that God will not punish a man for obeying all his commands, but the important item is will he not punish him if he does not obey them? All will agree that the man who obeys the Bible is not only right but safe who, but then is a man either right or safe does not obey it? God has in times past punished men for not obeying his commands, and as he is unchangeable in his manner of dealing with the children of men, it certainly follows that he will do the same in the future.

It is not questioned whether or not there is a place of happiness? All agree that there is a place reserved in the future for those who love and serve God. This ground is undisputed, none has the least reason to doubt this;—but then is there a place of punishment in the future for the wicked? is the question that we wish to settle. There are those who state that there is no place of future punishment, though it is mentioned in the Bible. The same revelation that proves that there is a heaven in the future, also states that there is a hell. Strange to conclude that the good book means just what it says when speaking of heaven, and reverses the order when speaking of hell, and means something else. You show me a man who don't believe in a future punishment of the wicked, and I will show you a man who does not obey the Bible entire. Whenever I find a man who obeys from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the Saints, I always, without failure, find one who, not only believes that the righteous have the promise of eternal life, but that there is a place of future punishment reserved for those who obey not God's holy commandments. That the righteous occupy safe ground has never been questioned by any, but do the wicked occupy grounds that are either right or safe, is the point to be settled, this is the doubtful ground; this is the unsafe ground if there is any to be found. If there is none here, then there is no such a thing as unsafeness in the universe. If there is no danger then, no one can be hurt and we may all as well be still. Even those who believe that all mankind will be saved anyhow, whether they obey the gospel or not, are all the time preaching their doctrine as tho' a man had to believe it in order to be saved.

I see no use in crying fire! fire!! when there is no fire. What is the use of telling people to flee the wrath to come, when there is no wrath to come? What sense would there have been in Noah's building an ark to save himself and family from the flood, if there had been no flood? What would be the use of Jesus telling us to fear him who is able to cast both soul and body into hell, when there is no hell? How in the name of all reason could the rich man die, be buried, and then lift up his eyes in hell, when there was no hell? How could he be in torment when there was no torment to be in? How could there be a wide gulf between him and Lazarus when they were both in the same place? Neither Christ nor his apostles ever taught that there is no hell, and that all mankind will be saved whether they obey the gospel or not. Being that all agree that there is a place of happiness in the future—a fact which all admit—now then the question is, who shall enjoy that happiness in the future world? That those who obey the gospel will, is admitted by both saint and sinner. This much is settled. Then we know that they are safe whether any body else is or not. There is not one particle of doubt about this. The righteous then are safe whether there is any hell or not. If there is no hell then of course they can never go to any place but heaven, and if there is no hell then their home is in heaven anyhow But now comes the fearful question; can those who do not obey the gospel be safe? This is where the doubts come in. There are no doubts respecting the destiny of the righteous, but that of the sinner is all uncertain. There is but one way for him to escape future punishment, and that is if there will be no punishment in the future. The righteous we know are safe, but sinner what say ye of your condition?

To be Continued.

THE CHURCH AND DUTIES OF HER MEMBERS.—NO. 3.

BY J. S. FLORY.

THE MINISTRY.

Probably the most prominent meaning of the word minister is servant. Joshua was called the minister of Moses. Elisha the minister of Elijah, also they are termed their servants. Servants not menial, but honorable, and in due time succeeded to the station or office of their masters. John Mark was minister to Paul and Barnabas who themselves were ministers or servants. Hence we call these servants, ministers who explain and promulgate the word of God in a public manner, and conduct the services of God in a manner agreeable with the liberties and license granted them by the Church. That there are degrees in the office or calling of ministers in the Church militant, the Scriptures fully testify. The Church has adopted regulations in this matter that seem to work well, and we have no doubt they meet the approbation of God, being, so far as we can see, in harmony with the tenor of the Gospel. For sake of distinction we may call the degrees first, second and third. In certain points their duties are the same, but in others of a special and relative sense they differ. Without stopping to inquire as to the why and wherefore of making those distinctions, we will pass on, and in the first place speak of the duties and obligations of those in the

FIRST DEGREE OF THE MINISTRY.

Under this head we may be a little lengthy in way of giving advice, inasmuch it has been requested that I do so, and that too by such as feel the cross a heavy one, and knowing we had to pass through the trying ordeal, ask for counsel, which we will cheerfully give so far as our judgment and experience in the matter will admit of. We are conscious of the fact, and would say to our brethren, it is no "childs play," to stand up between God and man to attempt to preach the Gospel. The duties and obligations of the ministry are such that we never could see how any man, feeling the weight of responsibility attending the calling, could stand forth voluntarily a candidate for that station. But when the Lord, through His Church by the prompting of His Holy Spirit, calls you, dear brother, to that high and holy calling, it is your duty to bow in humble submission to His will. Jonah tried fleeing from duty, but the Lord overtook him in a summary manner. Our advice is, yield to the voice of the Lord Paul like, and say "Lord what will ye have me to do?" And in obedience to the command of Jesus, "Go preach my Gospel." go fully impressed with the great responsibilities and importance that cluster around the sacred office. Notwithstanding your privileges as a public speaker may be to some extent circumscribed, the limits of your field of action is all sufficient for present purposes. Do all you can in the station you are placed and you will find not a little to do. You may herald the tidings of salvation to a ruined world, at such places and times, as your brother minister higher in office, or the Church may give liberty. Learn to submit to the will and judgment of your elders in office or the wish of the Church. While undue forwardness is to be avoided, we also would advise you to guard against unnecessary backwardness. The most commendable state of deportment is between the two extremes. We here might speak of certain things worthy of note by those who are just putting their hand to the work of the ministry. You should have enough self-confidence to overcome timidity and that want of self-trust which so often stands in the way of duty. On the other hand beware of that spirit of exaltation and self dependence that seems to chill the hearers. Dedicate yourself to the Lord; put your dependence in Him. Having no special qualifications of your own that you may pride in, so much the better. Borrow no man's words, no man's gestures nor no man's deportment; simply be yourself in the stand and out of it. Just as certain as any one tries to appear in somebody's garments other than their own, just so certain will the audience discover that they don't fit the speaker. Let me whisper in the ear of the youthful servant in the calling of the ministry, the secret of all secrets to efficiency in their calling. It is often and earnest prayer to God in closet. It is the golden key that unlocks God's storehouse of love, grace and mercy, and fills the soul so full of "Jesus crucified" that he may go forth as a vessel fitted and prepared for the Master's use, and then having a confiding trust in God, the gold and silver truths of God's word may be handed out to the "poor and needy" souls,—the Holy Spirit, more strained, will give the "true ring" to the sound of the blessed Gospel. Solemn earnestness will sweeten the "Bread of Life" to hungry starving souls. We would earnestly recommend a careful study of the Scriptures. In studying certain subjects, gather up the "fragments;" become familiar with their relative and analogous bearings. Fill the mind with matter, store the house full of material, such as solid Scriptural truths, and imagery in harmony with God's revealed scheme of redemption; but when it comes to sermonizing leave that arrangement to the Lord, through the medium of the Holy Spirit, who from a well stored mind may readily send forth the precious seed into the hearts of the hearers.

Avoid a tedious manner of discoursing; also beware of falling into the habit of using repeatedly, stereotyped sayings. A straight line is the nearest way to a given point, so the plain simple truth is more readily sent home to the heart in a plain simple manner. Roundabout flourishes, lofty flights and glowing pictures will do to fill up the vacuum of expansive minds that are destitute of Jesus and Him crucified!

Long sermons are sometimes allowable with the experienced, but with the beginner they are seldom looked upon in a judicious manner. Of all other things, especially avoid personal allusion to other denominations by way of censuring them for their doctrine. Such a course is bad enough if indulged in by the "chiefest Apostles." Also avoid the tendency to be harping continually upon such doctrinal points that are subject to great controversy. I have learned by experience, the better way is to labor to get the world to see they are woefully diseased by sin, and when they see their sickness and look to Jesus with a longing desire to be healed, then tell them how to take the antidote.

Speaking in a monotone—the voice at the same pitch—either high or low is to be avoided. A variation in the voice is more effective and easier on the speaker. A contracted habit of some nature is often injurious to the efficiency of the minister; and sometimes it is let run on until it becomes almost as a second nature. To avoid such objectionable habits, let it be mutually agreed with brethren that they tell each other of their faults or objections others may find in them that they may guard against them, or let brethren that see these things in others tell them. Surely they should love brethren for this kindness. We will remember of a brother, almost a stranger, who told us of a habit we had contracted of using a word many times out of its place. We were ignorant of the habit. Our attention called to it, we labored against it until we overcame it. I shall ever love that brother for that kind act.

Again, we would say to young ministers, make but few apologies, it often is worse than time lost. If you don't feel like speaking or that you can not say anything to profit, the congregation will know it soon enough without you telling them. If you feel like speaking they will doubtless know it. When you speak, if possible, throw the promptings of your very soul into your words. Cultivate a passion for souls, and preach as though your words were your dying counsel to dying persons before you. Learn to know when you are done and then quit!

Being a minister of the Lord to preach the everlasting Gospel, look well to your ways. Now, if not before done, is the time to lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily beset us. Now is the time to labor diligently that you may be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Personal influence is of the utmost importance. If of a godly nature, it will tend to preparing the heart of your hearers for the reception of the good seed. Otherwise, and it will tend to forging the shackels of satan tighter upon the sinner. Here is a duty and obligation you should ever keep before you; to so walk that others may be influenced to come to Jesus. Oh! think of it; a careless and crooked life may cause precious souls to fall into eternal burnings. How then shall you meet your God! having preached the Gospel and then be yourself cast away! Join not arms with the world, be not a "party man" in the broils of political contention; stand aloof as one crying aloud to sinners to flee the wrath to come. A watchman chosen to stand upon the walls of Zion should be careful how he goeth down into the valley of Achor to hunt the "Babylonish garments," "gold" or "silver" that belongeth to the enemy! In other words beware of the entanglements of the world and the danger of riches.

In conclusion, we would say to those who feel they are too weak and unworthy to fill a station of so exalted a nature, put your trust in God who is "strength." Wherein ye lack ask of God who giveth bountifully. Ever say,

"Father I stretch my hand to thee,
No other help I know."

Be faithful over the few things God hath entrusted to you and he will make thee ruler over many things; and say "enter thou into the joy of the Lord."

A CHRISTIAN'S LIFE A HAPPY ONE.

That the life of a true Christian, in the main, is a very happy one, we need not to tell an humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, for he certainly has experienced and tasted that the Lord is gracious; his great burden of sins, as a ponderous load, has been removed; his stricken conscience set at ease, and his poor, troubled, sorrowful soul made to rejoice in the God of his salvation. He hath tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come; hath tasted of the heavenly gift, and has partaken of the Holy Ghost; hence furnished with the necessary equipment to carry on the holy warfare of his Christian pilgrimage with celestial joy and angelic delight. Behold his weapon! They are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds; casting down imagination, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

His stand is a noble one; first against his own flesh and blood, then against principalities and against powers; next against the rulers of the darkness of this world and spiritual wickedness in high places, and above all, against the cunningly artful devices of the arch-traitor, the devil, the enemy of God and men. His loins are girt about with a snow-white linen girdle of truth, with a bright, glistening golden breastplate of righteousness; his feet shod with shoes of clemency, pity, mercy, and benevolence, well furnished with the Gospel of Peace; with the glittering, brazen helmet of salvation; the ever-ready and unmistakable shield of faith; the anchor of souls, to withstand the breakers, quicksands, rocks, and quench the fiery darts of the wicked; and with the two-edged weapon, the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God. Thus furnished the Christian goes forward with joy, courage, delight and consolation; hath nothing to fear, though the heavens tremble, the earth reels to and fro, the fountains of the great deep may open, fiery streams may issue forth, boiling water shooting up, the airy elements charged with electricity, may dart the flashes of lightning from pole to pole; the mighty crashes of thunder may shake the earth from center to center; the dreaded pestilence may rage and sweep away its thousands, yet amidst all these terrible judgments of God, the staple christian is protected, for he has entered the ark of safety. The God who overrules the universe, rides upon the clouds, and is reigning in the gloomy deep, surrounded with light and darkness, is his God; and he, in whom dwelleth all the Godhead bodily, is his salvation. Though the iron hand of death would enclose his frail body, and oring his mortal remains to dissolution, yet the pains of death cannot hold him, for his lively hope is in Christ, who loosed the pains of death and triumphed over the grave, led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. If the Christians life is a life of pleasure, cheerfulness and enjoyments, as I have shown in my former article, why are men so negligent, careless and unconcerned? Even Christian professors, that named the name of Christ, live like the world, so destitute of christian vitality, that even their actions, deportment and rule of life is condemned by the moral worldlings in truthfulness and punctuality. O, brethren and sisters where are you found? Let us examine ourselves closely whether we are on the side of vitality, or on the side of formality. May God forbid that the devil should use any of us as an instrument to be a stumbling block to pure and undefiled Christianity. There are certainly enough without us, and yet it is to be feared, numbers will be weighed in the balance and found wanting.

Permit me to ask some questions and let every one answer the same by his own acts: Have you solemnly and sincerely repented of all your sins and cherished a decided hatred to every thing that is evil? Did you join the church of God for the sole purpose of honoring and loving God and to promote his glory? Can you love your enemies, pray for them that persecute you, bless them that curse you, feed your enemies, give them to drink and clothe them when necessary? Do you pray that part of the Lord's prayer, "Deliver me from evil" consistently, by using every effort by moral suasion on your part, to remove every evil with which you are surrounded, and your neighbor, and your children your neighbors children, who may not be strong enough to withstand these evils, or will you stand neutral and see them one by one ensnared thereby and drawn down the road to hell? Will you assist by liberally throwing in your mite for the purpose of spreading the pure Gospel, to enlightning benighted souls, who by a spurious Gospel are led to perdition? Have you a family altar erected and gather your children around your own fireside regularly to admonish them to refrain from evil, pray with them and thus bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? Is the worship of God your chief delight, and has the service of the Lord the preponderance over earthly things? Are you one of those who leaves the seat in church vacant, when weather is unpleasant, or perhaps you feel a little tired; you and your horses overworked in order to accumulate wealth which many times proves a curse to the children?

Pardon my digression. Happy as the Christian is while tabernacling in the flesh, while doing the commands of the Lord, and even under affliction, crosses, trials, temptations, sorrows and disappointments, which seem strange to the carnal minded, yet tenfold more happy is he in eternity. The christian lives for eternity, his aim is to enjoy God in felicity; he lives in anticipation of realizing that blessed hope of a glorious immortality, where Christ, the hope of glory, will lead him to fountains of living water, and God shall wipe away all tears from his eyes. O, that blissful hope! The soul reviving hope! May I be permitted to see the day, so long desired, and anxiously waited for, and endured so many trials, hardships, crosses, mockings, and derisions in anticipation of being found worthy, through the atoning blood of my Savior, to realize his presence at his coming. May I rejoice, seeing him brilliantly arraigned robed in glory, decked with majesty, clothed with power and splendor, accompanied with Saints clothed in white linen, seated upon white horses. O, heavenly beauty! Victorious army! Seraphic brilliancy! Almighty conqueror! King of glory, mighty in battle; "the Alpha and Omega; thou wast dead and art alive. Behold thou livest for evermore; thou hast the key of hell and death. Amen. Unlock death and open the portals of heaven and give admittance to thy humble unworthy servants in order to assist in swelling the music of the Angelic choir in heaven in company with the redeemed, the full fruition of happiness, glory, joy, peace, and love. May God prepare us for that happy meeting. LEONARD FURRY.

HOME.

By the term home is generally understood the place of abode, the dwelling house; but its import may be properly confined to the family circle, the place where kindred spirits are assembled, those who are near and dear to us, by the ties of nature, as well as those who are allied to us socially or by the ties of christian unity. Where these are and remain is home, no difference how unattractive the surroundings may be. It is the society of the good, those who have correct moral principles, those in whom love, as emanates from God, is the ruling power, that give a place its lustre. The most beautiful mansions in which love is not the predominating element, is indeed a dark and gloomy spot. Home in reality is the family circle in which love warms every heart.

Home! home! how much feeling is embodied in this little word. Speak the word and the sound vibrates on chords that make music for the soul, —music that has no sadness, music that falls, like evening dew, on the withered flower. It animates, it revives, it stretches out every wrinkle in our drooping desponding natures and the downcast forlorn countenance becomes all radiant with hope.

There are perhaps few words that have a more pleasing thought than the word home, and especially is this so, when we speak of our eternal home. The thought of our earthly home is a pleasing one, but when we lift the curtain and take a look beyond this time, although our vision is clouded by fogs and mists, we see a home that is more glorious. It is the thought of this home that fills the soul to the brim with ecstasy. The feelings of joy awakened from a contemplation of this home is limited to a certain class of individuals. There are many, very many, who cannot look beyond this time with the assurance of having a home there, and to such, the word home, as viewed from this standpoint, can have no charms. It is a dull, meaningless word, and although, like the grain of wheat, full of life and vitality, the pod in which is embodied that which will nourish and enliven the soul, yet there is no soil in which to germinate and develop itself. The word home, in order to produce an animating effect, must have a soil in which to stretch out its tiny fibres,—a heart rich in goodness and warmed up by the Son of Righteousnes.

To the Christian,—those who have enlisted under the Banner of Jesus and are battling for truth and right is the word home an endearing appellation. When the fight is the hardest, and Satan's darts are being hurled at us with a sure aim,—our souls wracked with pain and the inner man becomes languid, then the thought of this home gives us courage and nerves us afresh for the contest. O what a glorious thought! This world is truthfully a dark and thorny desert, and while encountering with the ups and downs, we can look beyond to the time when we shall arrive at home,—a home where, if we were to travel from pole to pole, take all the pleasures this life can afford, and multiply each through endless years, they would not be worth one minute of time in our heavenly home.

There are positions in life in which the word home becomes doubly endearing. We appreciate our earthly home more when away from it, and especially is this so when in adverse circumstances. So it is with those who, like the prodigal, have wandered far away from their heavenly Father's house. They come to want; the vain and perishable things of this life will not satisfy the soul, and a longing desire is felt for the Father's house wherein there is bread enough and to spare,—bread upon which angels feast,—bread that strengthens and supports the soul. This is the feeling of many a poor famishing soul, and it is in this condition the thought of home is a pleasing one indeed.

Reader, are you making preparations for your arrival at this home? Are you complying with the conditions that will warrant you an inheritance there? Do you look forward to the time when you will arrive there with pleasure? Surely when we think of the blessedness of that home and the joy to be realized there, we should truthfully feel that this world is not our home. J. B. L.

"PAPA TEACHES ME."

"If I were old enough, I would smoke cigars, mamma," said a boy of six summers, as he stood looking out at the window.

"O no, my son, smoking is not a nice, cleanly habit, it is injurious to health, leads people into other bad habits, and into bad company. Besides, it wastes a great deal of money that might feed and clothe poor little wretched children, or give the Bible to those who have never heard anything about Jesus, our Savior. Don't you see that such a useless, wasteful habit would be very wrong, my dear boy?"

"Yes, mamma, I did not think of these things, but papa teaches me to smoke, and he is good."

"Papa teaches you? He would not teach you a bad habit for the world. What makes you say so?"

"He smokes himself, mamma!"

Christian father, is the fine promising boy, growing up by your side, upon whom you look with joy and pride, to be impressively taught by your silent example, to begin a career of self indulgence, which will lead him by slow, but sure steps, to idle lounging, sinful expenditures, evil company, and perhaps to profanity, intemperance, and the worst of vices? O stop, stop, when you are nearest to God in your closet, and consider well your ways, consider them especially in reference to your child. Think how potent is the influence of your example, even in little things, in this forming period of his character, and how lasting is its power. A wrong step now—a little step into the path of doubtful self-indulgence, and out of the path of unquestionable moral rectitude, your child will be quick to see, and the sight may be a death blow to pure, unyielding moral principle, in his heart forever! O, Christian parent, you would not, as you fear God, for any present pleasure, peril the temporal and eternal future of your confiding child.—The Christian.

TO YOUNG MEN.

Prove worthy of your charge. Into your keeping will soon be given all the vast and grand machinery of this great era of progress. The fairest heritage of earth is yours; its mineral resources to hammer and forge; its agricultural wealth to garner; its seas to whiten with commerce; its growing mind to guide and control, and, more sacred trust, the upholding and sweeping onward of banners of Christianity, shaping the destinies of nations for coming time.

Your work is to be done only by vigorous and persistent endeavor. Think that every hour you spend in a frivolous manner is time belonging to imperative duty. Every act by which you mar and blacken the physical being is theft from the life given you by God. Every word no matter how light or trivial, may exert an influence for good or evil. Open ears are ever around you catching and treasuring the merest words. See that such treasures are good.

Men are like planets, ploughing along their separate orbits, free and yet guided and held in their pathway by the influence of others. Look to it that your guiding influence shapes to the true course.

Fill your position whether high or humble—fill it to the uttermost. Crowd to the brimming measure every requirement of your duty. Know that the highest meed of praise is one's own approbation of the still small voice of God, saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Young man, go forth and God speed! Be true to yourself and God, and the people shall rise up and call the blessed.

A RIGHT KIND OF RELIGION.—We hear much about experimental religion—a religion of feeling, a religion of work, of action, of theory or idea, but the religion we want is a religion of faith. That is the kind of religion well pleasing in the sight of God, the religion the heart wants, the religion that comforts the soul—the religion the church needs—the religion necessary to the conversion of the world. That religion which is the result of an implicit and abiding trust in God through faith—not simply assenting faith, but such a trust and belief that takes God at his word and "works by love" and produces not only rest, peace, hope, joy, and happiness, but a holy life full of works in perfect harmony with God's word. Such a religion of faith that shows to the world entire consecration to Jesus and him crucified. Having such a religion "profession of religion" sinks into insignificance along side of possession and confession is but the shadow—possession the substance.—J. S. Flory.

Commentary upon commentary. If the Word of God is not understood, it will not be for want of what are called helps. We see it stated in a London paper that Rev. Professor Plumpre, with the assistance of several scholars and divines, is engaged in the preparation of a work on an extensive scale, illustrative and explanatory of the various books of the Bible.

GOD'S LOVE, NOT MINE

Some years ago two gentlemen were riding together, and as they were about to separate, one addressed the other thus: "Do you ever read the Bible?" "Yes, but I get no benefit from reading it, because, to tell the truth, I feel I do not love God." "Neither did I," replied the other; "but God loved me." This answer produced such an effect upon his friend that, to use his own words, it was as if one had lifted him out of the saddle into the skies. It opened up to his soul at once the great truth that it is not how much I love God, but how much God loves me."

Religious News.

Bro. F. P. Loehr says: "Prospects are flattering all around us; our preaching is admitted to be the Word of the Lord, and although there are but two of us that go to preach from home, we are seldom together, but fight the battles single hand, even without an "armor bearer." My wife formerly went with me, but this winter I am alone. You will know that I answered the call of brother Moses Moist near Albion, Michigan, I was there twice, and on the 17th of next month I promised to be there to baptize. I know not yet how many, but this much I can say that many people that were disgusted at all professors and their preaching, expressed their unaffected approbation at my preaching and desire me to come back often. One man that would not let any preacher come in his house, although his wife is a Methodist, after hearing me the first time, expressed his approbation and desired to be visited, which was done to mutual satisfaction, and when I was there the second time, he sent me one dollar to pay expense of coming there again. At the series of meetings we held near Almena, in this Co., a certain woman was baptized whose husband had threatened to shoot the preacher who would do it and also his wife in case she would be baptized, but now attended our meeting and brought his wife to the water in all kindness where she was immersed. I relate these things to show you how much good could or might be done if proper exertions were used. But in preaching to the world it requires almost more self-denial than a man of three-score years and ten is capable of enduring. I might with great pleasure travel among the churches in old settlements like a nearly worn out plow in cultivated soil, and be kept from rusting, but cannot stand hard knocks and pushing." &c.

Those who would visit the Holy Land, and go up to Mount Zion before the holy quiet of these sacred regions is disturbed and desecrated by the sound of the locomotive, must start upon the pilgrimage soon. The surveys for the projected railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem have been completed, and the plans were sent off on the 7th inst. to the Minister of Public Works at Constantinople. The Pope and the chiefs of the Greek Armenian, and Jewish faiths, not only in the East, but even Paris and London, have been informed that 1,500 tickets for the journey from Jaffa to Jerusalem and back will be annually and gratuitously placed at their disposal for the use of poor pilgrims. How many tickets are to be distributed among poor Protestants we do not learn.

Egypt is no longer "the basest of kingdoms." Recent information shows that some of its cities have increased with more than American rapidity. When Napoleon the first was in Alexandria the city contained 7000 inhabitants, in 1842 this number was nearly nine times as great, twenty years later the population had risen to 164,000, and the consular reports for 1872 place its population at 300,000. The increase throughout Northern Egypt has been in a like proportion, and the country now contains more than five millions of people. This is due in a good degree to the British overland route to India, and the enterprises of French engineers and agriculturists.

Abraham Jaeger, a converted Jewish Rabbi, has prepared a volume on Judaism and Christianity giving his own experience in coming into the light of truth. He and his book are highly spoken of by the good men of Chicago who knew him personally, and the warm feeling, strong purpose, and thorough learning evinced in his volume commend it to the Christian public.

The Committee now revising the Constitution of Pennsylvania has adopted a provision that "no appropriation, except for pensions or gratuities for military services, shall be made to any person or community, nor to any denominational or sectarian institution, corporation or association for charitable, educational, or benevolent purposes."

The Lutheran Sunday school of Mifflintown, Pa., has thrown out of its library all such books as are commonly termed "Sunday school novels," and the managers express their determination to buy no more books of that character for their library.

The religious excitement in Geneva, Switzerland caused by the preaching of Father Hyacinthe, is increasing. The reverend gentleman is meeting with great success, and the Ultramontanes are much exasperated.

GOD BLESS THE LITTLE CHILDREN

God bless the little children,
We meet them everywhere;
We hear their voices round our hearth,
Their footsteps on the stair;
Their kindly hearts are swelling o'er
With mirthfulness and glee;
God bless the little children,
Wherever they may be.

We meet them 'neath the Gipsy tents,
With visage swarth and lean,
And eyes that sparkle as they glance
With roguery and fun;
We find them fishing in the brook,
For minnows with a pin,
Or creeping through the hazel bush
The linnet's nest to find.

We meet them in the lordly hall,
Their stately father's pride!
We meet them in the poor man's cot—
He has no wealth beside.
Along the city's crowded street
They hurl the hoop or ball;
We find them 'neath the pauper's roof
The saddest sight of all.

For there they win no father's love,
Nor mother's tender care,
Their only friend is God above,
Who hears the orphans prayer.
But dressed in silks or draped in rags,
In childish grief or glee,
God bless the little children,
Wherever they may be,

BEND OR BREAK

I was on a visit to a friend in the country. His house stood beside a little stream, on both sides of which were trees growing. At the back was a range of hills, down which the wind swept at times with great power. One of the days of my visit, the night set in with signs of a storm. And a stormy night it was. The wind roared, and whistled, and the sound was louder as it rushed through the trees and swept them two and fro.

When morning came, we found that though the storm had ceased it had left evidences of its violence. Flowers and shrubs, where much exposed, were torn, and in some cases battered to the earth. Leaves were hurled together into corners, branches were torn from the trees, and in one case a large elm was broken down.

One of the ladies of the family had gone into the garden to see how it had fared with her flowers; As she did so, two little girls passed. The younger of the two had seen the tree, and had told her neighbor about it, and they were discussing its fate. How had that tree been broken and blown down, was the question, while the other trees around had stood? "O," answered the elder, "when the wind came and blew harder and harder and harder, the tree said 'I won't bend;' and so, as it wouldn't bend, the wind broke it and tore it up; but the others said, 'I'll bend;' and as they bent they were not broken or blown down." When informed of this on the lady's return, I thought, There's a good lesson for some of my little friends, and I must tell the story to them.

It had better been for some boys I know if they had said in their heart, "I'll bend," when their parents sought to train them right; but they would not yield, and now they are broken. O, how sadly! And some at school wouldn't bend but rebelled, and were punished and expelled, and they are broken now. And some, when affliction came upon them, would not yield their hearts to God, as He wished, but hardened their necks; and they have been brokeo. And some, who were servants to others, would not bend to the will of their masters, though it was right; and they are now as useless as the broken tree.

A proud rebellious spirit is not a good one. It is sure to bring him who cherishes it to wreck and ruin. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall. Better yield obedience than be stubborn. Better "obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right." Better do your duty to those you have engaged to serve, as the Bible bids. And it is better far not to "despise chastening of the Lord. Yield your will to Him. This will keep you from bending when you ought not, and save you from being broken and ruined when you should have bent and persevered.—Early Days.

EYES AND NO EYES.

You have all read the story in the school books of the two boys who went over the same road, one with his eyes open and the other with his eyes shut. It is old, but worth remembering every day. So many things worth knowing go on right under our eyes without being noticed.

I knew a man, I think I may have told you of him before, a busy man, who had very little time for reading or study, but whose mind was a perfect store-house information on almost every subject.

"How does it happen that you know so much more than the rest of us?" I asked him one day.

"Oh," said he, "I never have time to lay in a regular store of knowledge, so I save up all the bits that come in my way, and they count up a good deal in the course of the year."

That is just the thing; save all the bits.

"That boy," said a gentleman, "always seems to be on the look-out for something to see."

So he was; and, while waiting in a newspaper office once for a package, he learned, by the use of his eyes what he never could have guessed, that slips rooted best in nearly pure sand.

"This is lapis lazuli," said the jeweller to his customer, "and this is 'chrysoprase.'" And the wide-awake errand boy turned around from the door to take a sharp look, so that in future, he knew just how those two precious stones looked. In one day he learned of the barber what became of the hair clippings; of the carpenter how to drive a nail so as not to split the wood; of the shoemaker, how the different surfaces of fancy leathers are made; of a locust, that his mouth was no use to him in singing; from a scrap of newspaper, where sponges are obtained; and from an old Irish woman, how to keep stovepipes from rusting. Only bits and fragments of knowledge, but all of them worth saving, and all helpful to increase the stock-in-trade of the boy who meant to be a man.—Picture Magazine.

SPEAK CORRECTLY.

Boys and girls should learn to speak correctly while they are children, for it will be hard to correct wrong habits when they become older.

"The other day a little girl asked: 'Shall you go to-morrer?' The answer was, 'I dunno.' How much better to pronounce the words, and to say to-morrow and don't know. Never say, sech fine apples; but such fine apples. Jest as live is another improper expression. You should say, just as lief. And don't say, I ain't. There is no such a word as ain't in the English language. You should say I'm not, or it isn't.

"I heard a boy say, 'I never saw sech figgers' That was very bad pronunciation. Another said, 'I can holler louder than you;' but a bright little fellow replied, 'I don't think I can holler at all, though I can halloo so as to be heard a quarter of a mile.'

"Now, children, try hard to speak properly, and never use such words as these:

To-morrer	Ain't
Dunno,	Holler,
Sech,	Figgers.

"There is one mistake which almost everybody makes in saying 'He don't.' It is well enough to say 'I doat,' or 'they don't,' but it should be, "He doesn't.

BOYS, DO YOU HEAR THAT?

A New Orleans paper tells of a printer who, when his fellow-workmen went out to drink beer during working hours, put in the bank the exact amount he would have spent if he had gone out to drink. He thus kept his resolution for five years. He then examined his bank account, and found that he had on deposit $521.86. In the five years he had not lost a day from ill health. Three out of five of his fellow-workmen had, in the meantime, become drunkards, and were discharged. The water-drinker then bought out the printing office, went on enlarging the business, and in twenty years from the time he began to put by his money, was worth $100,000. The story, whether new or old, teaches a lesson which every boy and young man should lay to heart.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news. Obituaries. Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim:—I feel like giving a little Church news for the satisfaction of those who may feel interested. Nine years ago I visited, for the first time, this State, Michigan, in June, and found a few members in this Co, Vanburen; preaching several times to general satisfaction. Winter following, that is in 1865, wife and I came back here again and spent the month of February, being good sleighing all the time, yet not very cold, so we concluded to move here, which was done the latter days of April, when we found less than 20 members, and until this time there was no church organized in the State, although there was a small number of members in Cass Co., the south-west corner of the State, who were under the care of Jacob Miller de'd, and David Miller from St. Joseph Co., Ind. The whole number known at this time was considerable less than one hundred.

We had meeting every Sunday here and there through the Summer seasons, and in Winter went forth in the sleigh with some brother or my wife, looking up the scattered lambs in the counties of Alegan, Kent, Ionia, Barry, Clinton, Eaton, Calhoun, Kalamazoo, St. Joseph and Cass. There are members scattered all thro' the State, besides such as cannot join in with the popular churches, especially such as came from Pa., Ohio and Indiana. Many of the Eastern people are disgusted at all so called Christian religion, but when they hear our doctrine they desire us to preach for them. There are a goodly number of places, where in one years time small churches could be established by holding series of meetings, as the people desire to have, for say they, we would like to know the whole truth, how you believe and practice, and you cannot give full satisfaction in one or two meetings at a time But you see, dear brethren, the field is too extensive for one or two laborers, so a large portion of the harvest is not gathered, the seed is sown by the reading of the Word of God, it only wants the minister to gather them in bundles or organizations, and with the influx of emigration, Michigan might count its thousands of the meek followers of Jesus.

There are now at this time six or seven organized churches with about five hundred members, and less than twenty ministers, of whom four or five are ordained. There is a move made to apply to next District Meeting to be struck off into a separate district, as the distance to D. M. is too great for those North of us to attend.

Now if there are any of the ministering brethren that may not have elbow room, where ten or twelve are sitting behind the table, come over to Michigan. The harvest is whitening and the laborers are but few, and although this is a Northern clime yet the hearts of the people are warm if touched with the Gospel fire.

We are no respector of persons, the black, the white, the rich and the poor are all seated around the table of the Lord, as well as at our home board. The above will answer those inquiries who say, "What is Bro. Loehr doing?" He is wearing out gradually, but his zeal for the cause is unabated, and his love to the Church is not measured. F. P. Loehr.

MAINE MISSION.

The attention of the churches of the Estern and Middle Districts of Pa., is hereby called to the Maine Mission." Below I give extracts of a letter in my possession, from which it will be seen that there still is a desire among the people there to have "the way of God expounded more perfectly." There are still other facts set forth in those letters, more encouraging than those given below, but of such a nature that I deem it not expedient to publish them, but will submit them to the meetings of both districts when in session, and whatever more may be obtained during the intermediate time will also be laid before them My opinion is, there is still a work for us, as a church, to do in those remote regions that ought not to be neglected. But it requires a sacrifice of the enjoyment of home and friends, which are just as near and dear to the minister who goes, as to any one else. And it requires means at the hands of the Church, so that those willing to make said sacrifice, and approved of by the Church, may be brought on their way; hence this appeal is made to the churches to give the subject their prayerful attention.

The first letter under date of Dec. 22, says: "There is still a hungering for the word of life. I often hear people say, I wish those ministers from Penna., were here to preach to us the things pertaining to our everlasting well being." Same letter: "All the people to whom I showed your letter say to me; send him my best respects—tell him he must come back," &c. Under date of March 16, the same correspondent writes as follows: "After giving the result of another visit they have had since we left, he says: "But there are a number here that would be glad to see you and hear you preach the word, and if you will write what inducements and encouragements you wish held out, I will make enquiry and see if they can be given." I replied to the above enquiry and will give the result at the proper time.

EXPLANATORY.

We are sorry to intrude on your valuable paper with a subject destitute of spiritual food, and ask your indulgence and the pardon of your readers this once yet. Your concluding remarks tingled somewhat challengingly, induced us to explain. The phrase, "the imperative mood," we understood technically; and as such thought the writer to have used it. Substitute an for the, and that technicallity is in a manner erased,—and then we would prefer manner instead of mood, as the latter term is invariably connected with grammatical modifications of verbs in manner. Hence technically so used.

But if intended according to your expression to "make grammar succumb to the force of language and circumstances," we have to yield. The grammars are very prolific in exceptions, and indeed must be; yet when they come to the formula of parsing, all yield to the same technical terms. For instance, shall in the indicative mood, 2nd person, 1st future tense signifies command; while in the 1st and 3rd persons, determination Must in the potential mood, 2nd person, present tense, signifies command more emphatic yet; while 1st and 3rd persons, stern necessity. We confess to be ignorant of the author who places any of those auxiliaries in the imperative mood technically. So we looked at the subject. Are we wrong? S. B. Furry.

Martinsburg, Pa.

Remarks.—We are strongly in favor of words having but one meaning. We become cognizant of each others ideas, wishes and wants by the use of combination of sounds, either vocalized or represented by characters. These sounds, when combined, are called words, representing distinct ideas. Imperative is expressive of the idea of a command, and shall, when used in the sense of must, as in the cases referred to, implies a positive command, therefore becomes imperative, hence we simply contended that Bro. Moomaw's expression, according to the force of language and the circumstances, was admissable. We were aware that, according to the technicalities of grammar, our position was not tenable, although Kerl says that shall, when used in the sense of must, does not properly belong to the indicative mood but to avoid troublesome distinctions is so considered. Therefore we still affirm that shall in the cases referred to is used in an imperative sense and may be so considered. In making our criticism we had an object in view which we hope both parties understand and now drop it, hoping that we have done justice to both without doing any injustice to ourselves.

Dear Pilgrim:—I feel like writing a little which I hope you will give place in your columns. I am a reader of the Pilgrim and would not like to do without it, as in it I read so many letters from sisters and others which gives me much pleasure in reading. Sisters, I feel like encouraging you to write more. Perhaps if we were all more interested in the Pilgrim's welfare and labor more for it we might give considerable aid to the editors.

I will now tell you how I came to join the pilgrim band. I was baptized when an infant and brought up in the Lutheran faith and became a member of that Church. While on a visit among my relatives, I was told that there was to be a Dunkard meeting in the neighborhood, and that there were to be some baptized and that we would all go and see the sight. We all went and indeed we did see a sight, one that I never saw before. After the baptizing was over we had some conversation about these strange people, and as I was a good reader at that time, I argued that their baptism was right according to the Scriptures, which gave occasion for them calling me a Dunkard but I cared not. After a short time I again returned home and months and years passed away with the convictions received at that meeting resting upon my mind, finally my father was called to the spirit-land leaving a poor mother and eight children to be cared for in a cold and pitiless world. My former convictions still bore heavily upon me and I went to the Brethren to live and provide for myself. They took me often to their meetings and once to a Lovefeast, the first one I ever attended. I noticed closely to see how their practice would correspond with the Word, and when I beheld how beautifully the primitive order of the Gospel was carried out, I was astonished that I stood where I did. Eld. John Metzgar and others spoke so much of Jesus and so perfectly illustrated the divine precepts and principles of religion, also the love and compassion of Jesus, His forbearance, forgiveness, meekness, holiness and simplicity that I was perfectly charmed, and was pursuaded that it was impossible for any to read His history with an unprejudiced mind without acknowledging that He was none other than the one spoken of by the prophet who said: "His name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father and the Prince of Peace." One more text, "How oft would I have gathered you under my wings * * * and you would not." "And ye will not," sounded loudly in my ears until I was constrained to cast my all on Jesus, and my lot with the people of God.

Then I was young, but now I have passed my two score and my sight is beginning to grow dim. My life has been a mixture of sorrow and joy but day by day I am nearing deliverance and can truly say "the Lord will never forsake the righteous, no never.

Dear sisters, do not grow weary in well doing, as we have the promise that we shall reap if we faint not.

"If you meet with troubles and trials on the way, Cast your burden on Jesus and don't forget to pray."

S. W. Bollinger.

SMITH.—In the Woodland Church, Barry Co., Michigan, March 15, '73, sister Mary, wife of brother Isaac Smith, aged 35 years, nine months and 24 days.

She leaves a sorrowing husband and five children to mourn their loss, which is not without hope. Daniel Brower.

☞ WHEN MONEY is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ EVERY subscriber for 1873, gets a Pilgrim Almanac FREE.

HELP US.—Through judicious advertising we have daily calls for sample copies of the PILGRIM from places where the truth, as we preach it, was never heard, and we fondly hope it may be the means of planting the standard of Christ in many new sections where Primitive Christianity was never preached. Brethren and sisters you can greatly aid us in the good work by sending for sample copies and distributing them to such as may receive them gladly. For this purpose we always keep a supply on hands. We will send them by the hundreds if you will be kind enough to just send us money enough to pay the postage.

The postage on PILGRIMS is one cent for every two copies, or eight cents per pound. Brethren and sisters continue to labor to increase our circulation. There are hundreds and thousands that would be benefitted by reading the PILGRIM. Subscriptions may commence at any time and run one year, or back No's can still be furnished.

WE are informed that on the 23d of March a son and daughter of Eld. David Long and a daughter of Bro. V. Reichard of Manor Congregation, Md., were inducted into Christ's kingdom by holy baptism. We should have scores of such reports every week as there is no reason why any sane person should remain in the employ of satan who has no reward to offer but misery and everlasting destruction.

IN CORRECTING our galleys we found a number of mistakes. They are corrected as far as possible but if there should be any more, please let us know as soon as possible so that all corrections can be made and all receive their papers. IOWA'S RESOURCES.—We have just received a pamphlet of over 150 pages, giving the manufacturing, agricultural and industrial resources of Iowa, with reliable information to capitalists seeking the best fields for investment, also, valuable information for emigrants seeking new and desirable homes. Any person desiring a copy may obtain it gratuitously by addressing A. R. Fulton, at De Moines, Iowa. Secretary Iowa State Bord of Immigration.

AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER.—The last number of this Journal contains an able article by one of its editorial committee, Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., on Early Conversions, and a variety of choice, selected and original articles. Intelligence, Book Notices, &c., besides twelve pages given to the elucidation of the International Lessons.

It is published by J. W. McIntyre, No. 4 South Fifth Street, St. Louis, at $1.50 a year. Single copies 15 cents.

SCRIBNERS MONTHTY for April is on our table. One of the leading articles is "An Hour among the Greenbacks" which is well worth a reading as it gives, in detail the whole process through which the much sought for pieces of paper are made to pass. There is one signature which no doubt almost everybody noticed, but few have had the pleasure of deciphering. That mysterious chirography when translated is F. E. Spinner, the treasurer. He is a rare specimen of humanity but you can learn much of his character by reading the April No. of Scribner. It also contains many other papers that are both interesting and instructive. Terms $4.00 per year.

Address, Scribner & Co., 654 Broadway, N. Y.

It is said that the emperor of Germany is of the opinion that he and other monarchs of Europe are reaping a larger harvest from his overwhelming victory over Napoleon III. than is cojovable. From that followed a republic in France, and from that republic, he thinks comes the new one in Spain. This is more than he fought for. However, unless there are fewer changes in their ministries, and a manifestation of more stability in their government, it is probable that the conquering William's peace of mind, so far as the establishment of republican governments in Europe is concerned, will be fully restored.

LIFE.

At the portals of the morning
Stood a child with dainty feet,
All about him golden sunshine,
Pearly dews and blossoms sweet;
And with tender, dimpled fingers
Plucked he flowers fresh and fair,
And the overhanging branches
Showered the dewdrops in his hair.

Looking forward o'er life's pathway,
Saw he broader fields of green;
Skies with snowy clouds so fleecy,
Here and there blue shreds between;
And with swiftly flying footsteps,
Started he for fields more bright;
But in vain he hurried onward—
They were always just in sight.

Warmer, brighter grew the sunshine,
Broader, rougher grew the way;
But with green fields just before him,
Nothing could his footsteps stay,
So he wandered on 'till manhood
Took the place of childhood fair,
Then he threw aside his flowers,
Wiped the dew-drops from his hair.

Onward, onward, toiling, striving,
Helping others with his might;
Learned he that the blooming green fields
That are always just in sight
Lay beyond the cold, dark river;
Here we only longing wait,
'Till the Master calls us over,
And unbars the pearly gate.

The noontide sunbeams o'er him fell,
Then came the evening calm
With its golden, golden sunset,
The dying day's sweet psalm.
The boy from the morning portals,
At even with snowy hair,
Crossed when the Master called him,
To the green fields "Over there."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

R. F. MOOMAW.

In our examination of what we regard as the institutions of men we propose to begin with Freemasonry, as probably the most ancient, and no less honorable, humanly speaking, than any other in the catalogue of these associations. In pursuing this subject it is my desire to treat it in all fairness and to exercise the largest degree of charity possible. As a moral institution I have no doubt but that it has accomplished a great deal of good, and if persons are not inclined to adopt the Bible as the all sufficient and infallible rule of faith and conduct perhaps they would do well to associate themselves with this order, for doubtless if the precepts of Masonry, so far as what is revealed is concerned is consistently followed it will have a very beneficial effect upon the moral character, by restraining the natural passions, and inculcating the practice of virtue by limiting the desires and inordinate affections and cultivating the higher order of our nature in the exercise of the principles of justice, benevolence and charity, and the establishment of the golden rule, "doing unto others as we would," our circumstances being reversed, "that they should do unto us." As to the secrets and mysteries of the order what they teach is altogether a different matter. Of what is done by them in secret, as Paul would say, "it would probably be a shame even to speak," all that we can know about it is that the most strict precaution is used to prevent them from being known, and our Savior says that "light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil."

We introduce here a scrap on instructions to Masons, when in presence of strangers who are not Masons.

"Before those who are not Masons you must be cautious in your words, carriage and notions; so that the most penetrating stranger shall not discover what is not proper to be intimated. The impertinent and ensnaring question or ignorant and idle discourse of those who seek to pry into the mysteries and secrets committed to you, must be prudently answered, and managed, or the discourse wisely diverted to another subject as your discretion and duty shall direct." For the purpose too the lodge room is always in an upper room to prevent being seen through the windows. Why this guarded secresy I never could define, if their works were lawful or good. "If there is light why put it under a bushel? Why not put it on a candlestick that its reflection might illuminate the world around, but a thought has occurred to my mind while contemplating this subject, that this secresy is the secret of success else why the astonishing progress of the craft? There being no public declamation nor lectures, but very few tracts or published documents of Masonic literature, little or no effort made by the members to induce persons to initiate, but men ever curious to pursue and possess that from which they are barred like our progenitors in the garden become more and more anxious and finally make the fatal step, from which when once taken it is impossible to recede, and so when once initiated into the craft, there is no remedy that will effectually relieve them, but are joined to their idol of man's invention as we assert. Whether our assertion can be maintained against the arguments advanced by its votaries who claim for it the sanction of divine authority the sequel will show. We propose then to review these arguments that we may see how far the premises are supported, "whether it is from Heaven or of men."

One week ago to-day we wrote the foregoing, was taken quite unwell, unable to set up, consequently had to suspend, but now through the mercy and grace of God, I am able to resume. One hour in the past my mail messenger arrived bringing in the PILGRIM dated March 25th, glancing over its pages my eye soon fell upon brother S. B. Furry's criticism of my language used in a former communication, and his criticism criticized by Bro. editor. so I looked upon the subject when I said that the verb shall was used in the imperative mood, that God was really the person speaking, Moses, Aaron and the children of Israel the second person, or persons spoken to, Moses simply the instrument through which the Lord spake, and had it been necessary to have used an indefinate number of instruments, in my opinion it would have made it no less imperative, just as the command of baptism and every other Christian duty has been communicated to the children of men through an unlimited number of instruments and yet the command is no less imperative. But I will leave brethren Furry and PILGRIM to discuss questions of grammer, and I will try to pursue a little further the train of thought on the subject of institutions human and divine.

Freemasonry being the subject now under consideration with a view to the discussion and settlement of this question it becomes primarily necessary to enquire what Masonry is. At the present day it has two meanings under the style of operative and speculative Masonry, by the former it is according to the explanation of Masons. Made to conduce to man's temporal wants by furnishing shelters from the weather, and by the appliances of architectural symmetry, varied by the tastes and talents of succeeding generations, has imprinted its existence in every country and clime where civilization prevails, by those magnificent structures which are the pride and admiration of every nation.

By speculative Masonry, we mean virtue in its most extended sense, as taught by the daily exercise of brotherly love. Relief and truth, and which compells the initiated to subdue the passions, act upon the square, keep a tongue of good report, maintain secresy and practice charity. It is so intimately connected with religion as to lay its professors under the strongest obligation to pay to the Deity that rational and heart emanating homage which at once constitutes their duty and happiness. Reasoning, then from this acknowledged data it will not be necessary to detain the reader with a long account of the origin of Masonry. Certain it is, and must be, that when the first man was found in the image of God, the principles of Masonry as a divine gift from Heaven were stamped upon his heart by the great architect of the universe. It is worthy of remark that it is claimed for Masonry, that it is a divine gift from Heaven stamped upon the heart of man by the great architect by which he is enabled to provide shelter from the inclemency of the weather, &c. As in the case of Adam when expelled from the garden of Eden, built an habitation for himself and family, and no doubt, say Masons, instructed his descendents in the science and its application, to whatever craft was convenient for those early times. Cain also being pre-instructed in the principles of architecture built a strong city and named it after the name of his oldest son Enoch, whose race following his example improved themselves not only in Masonry but made discovery of several other useful arts. Seth, Mathuselah, Noah, Nimrod or Belus, are all claimed as patrons of Masonry.

From Shinar the science, say they, were carried to distant parts of the world, notwithstanding the confusion of the dialects, and which is presumed to have given rise to the universal practice of conversing without speaking and communicating between Masons by tokens and signs. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph and Melchisedec are all claimed as belonging to the craft. That the Israelites practiced Masonry in Egypt is a well authenticated fact from the Bible (Masonic language.) We read they were trained to the building up of two cities with stone and brick, for the Egyptians, and it was unionbtedly the design of the most High, to make them expert Masons, before they should possess the promised land.

The city of Tyre was built by a great body of Sidonian Masons from Gabala, under a grand master and a number of princes.

In after times Ahibal king of Tyre, repaired and beautified that city, and so did his son Hiram being also a Mason. He became one of the principe architects of that stupendous edifice which has been and always will remain the admiration of the world, viz: Solomon's temple. So much for the pretended divine authority for such an institution or organization, if indeed there is any proof of an organization in all the testimonies introduced. So far, I cannot perceive any, simply that men were endowed by their creator and maker of all things, with a mechanal talent capable of being cultivated as circumstances from time to time seemed to demand. If this constitutes Freemasonry I would ask are not all mankind Freemasons? Have those calling themselves Masons more or have others less of this endowment? Have not the females of our race their share of mechanical genius? Why then are they excluded from its secrets and mysteries? No, nor does it stop here, upon the same hypothesis do we not plainly see that the inferior animals come in for their share of the honor of Masonry. Passing by the red man of the forest with his Booth or his wigwam, his moccasin and well arranged strings of beads, &c. We invite attention to the beaver, the otter, the muskrat, and many other of the inhabitants of the water and the woods. The eagle too, wisely selecting his site beyond the reach of danger, displaying the most consumate skill in the arrangement of its building for the comfort and protection of its tender brood, and among many of the more inferior of the feathered tribes do we discover an equal share of Masonic or if you please architectural skill. Coming next to the insect family, we introduce the honey bee as a great past master Mason who surpasses all others in architecture, in the methodical arrangement of his habitation for the comfort and convenience of his colony.

So much then for the divine authority for the craft as exhibited in the organization of operative Masonry but it must pretend as a basis in some way or other to have the sanction of divine authority, or else the pious portion of society would not for a moment entertain a favorable thought toward it and could not be induced to participate, but as we have said in a former chapter of this essay all these pretended evidences of authority from Holy Writ is merely a necessary afterthought and never was thought of as a foundation originating the craft, even of operative Masons, much less speculative, according to the present form. We next propose to show the true origin of the craft from Masonic history.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD.

What is Safe and what is not Safe; What is Right and what is not Right.

BY J. H. MOORE.

Chap. III.—BAPTISM.

It is never questioned whether it is safe to be baptized, but is it safe not to be baptized? Other things considered, we know that a man does right when he is baptized, but the doubtful point is, does the man do right who is not baptized? We know that it is not against the Bible to be baptized, but then is it against the Bible not to be baptized?

In the time of the apostles we know that there were persons in the Church who had been baptized, but the point to be settled is, were there any in the church who were not baptized? It is a simple fact that a man can be baptized into Christ, but can he get into Christ and not be baptized? The former is not only admitted to be right but it is safe, while the latter is neither right nor safe.

We all agree that God will never condemn a man simply because he has been baptized, but then will he not chastise him if he refuses to submit to this institution? Christ says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." This much is then settled—that the man who both believes and is baptized shall be saved from his sins. Then the point is, has a man the forgiveness of his sins who simply believes and is not baptized? If he has, then all the devils are safe for they also believe and tremble, Jam.—2: 19. Peter said on the day of Pentecost, "Repent and be baptized every one of you * * * for the remission of sins." Acts—2: 38. Why must they be baptized? Ans. "For the remission of sins." Was it either safe or right to submit to Peter's instruction on this occasion? If it was not then the Pentecostians did wrong for "they that gladly received his word were baptized," Acts—2: 41. Were not they on safe ground when they believed, repented and were baptized? All must answer they were. Well then were those safe who simply believed and were not baptized? Here is where the doubts come in. There is not one particle of uncertainty about the baptized believers, but about the unbaptized. God has promised pardon to all those who believe, repent and are baptized, and no one doubts this—that the penitent baptized believer has been pardoned of his past sins; but the question is has the man received pardon who is not baptized? This is the only point of doubt in the entire matter. We are certain that we are saved from past sins when we have faith, repentance and baptism, but have we the promise without baptism? is the turning point. The man who takes the former we know is safe, but is the man who adopts the latter safe? This is the question for every man to answer who has never been baptized There are simply two positions and two only in this whole matter—one is to be baptized and the other is not. The first we know is safe, no one doubts this, but then is the latter safe? Here are all the doubts. Then friendly reader which position will you occupy? You know that both Christ and the apostles were baptized, and further, you know that they occupied grounds that were both safe and right, now then are you willing to stand side by side with them, or will you refuse to be baptized and occupy grounds that are exceedingly doubtful? Jesus says: "If ye love me keep my commandments." John—14: 15.

THE ENJOYMENTS OF A CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Man in his natural state or carnal mind has no proper conception of the beauty of a true christian religion; the glorious enjoyments it affords, the happy feelings, encouragements, and the consolation in the proper exercise therein to be realized. O, when the love, the sacred flame that issues from the fountain head warms up the soul of its possessor with kindness and love towards his brethren and sisters who like him have embraced the religion of Jesus Christ, love divine, as a powerful magnet will draw them together closer and closer till a like feeling pervades them all; whether joy or grief, gladness or sorrow that they will "rejoice with them that do rejoice; and weep with them that weep; bear with one another in adversity, and guard one another in prosperity." Actuated by this God-like principle the church will prosper, God's blessing will be dispensed over it, the Holy Spirit will dwell in it, and joy and peace will be the habitation thereof. O who would not desire to have a dwelling place upon Mount Zion, a seat in his holy temple, a title in the sanctuary of Jehovah; in order to swell the music of heaven; peace be within its walls, and prosperity be within its palaces. Sooner be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than dwell within the tents of the wicked. Beautiful is the church upon Mount Zion which can not be moved, yea, the gates of hell can never prevail against. Such is the glowing description of the church of God and the permanancy thereof. Delightful is worship in the beauty of its holiness. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren and sisters to dwell together in peace and unity and worship the great God and praise his holy name in the city of our God in the mountain of his holiness." Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. We, as thy children in our adoption have thought, yea, experienced, of thy loving kindness. O God in the midst of thy temple, according to thy name O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth. Come sinner, yea come all the ends of the earth and be saved, for the Lord's right hand is full of righteousness. He is no respecter of persons. All who are willing to abandon sin, fear him, worketh righteousness and accept of the condition of pardon shall be accepted of him. Then let Mount Zion rejoice, let the daughter of Judea be glad when the number of God's children be multiplied because of his righteous judgement. O brethren and sisters, God's children, redeemed of the Lord, cleansed through obedience to his word, your sins washed away by the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, properly applied to your soul by walking in the light of the Lord, by keeping all his commandments. Come yea now, see the glory of the church, view the beautiful serving of God, walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof. "Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces that ye may tell to the generations following." For this God, whom we serve is our God forever and ever; he will be our guide even unto death. "He maketh us to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth us beside the still waters; he restoreth our souls; he leadeth us in the paths of righteousness; for his name's sake, yea, though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death, we will fear no evil; for thou art with us, thy rod and thy staff they comfort us." If this be the glorious comfort and the blessed enjoyments of the children of God, why so few enlist under the gladsome banner of King Emanuel? Is it not evident then, that the unconverted have poor conceptions of the kingdom of God? The reasons may be various but one grand reason which centers in all others is, because the "god of this world has blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." They do not desire the service of Jesus. Unbelief, the devil's book and battering ram to tear down and break into fragments the worship of the true God by teaching them that a historical belief in God alone is sufficient to save them, without any practical faith accompanied by a strict obedience to all the commandments of our Lord Jesus Christ. Mystery Babylon, the great, the mother of Harlot, with her daughter through the deceitful doctrine of unessentiality and optionality leading millions to ruin and everlasting burnings. Only look and believe in Jesus and all is right, no matter how you drop and how you live; the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life you need not abandon. Drinking saloons, tippling houses, lotteries, gambling, celebrations, festivities, circus shows and theatre houses ill fame, playing the harlot, cursing, swearing, together with the practical denying of the sufficiency of the Gospel for salvation, by associating, and uniting together in secret order, swearing to their secrecy the most dreadful and abominable oaths the prince of darkness could invent, and this all under the cloak of christianity. Such is the doctrine or at least allowable by these emmissaries. These adherents of these abominable vices are all practical infidelity, and no comfort and permanent enjoyment, when uniting with them can possibly be realized. But dear children, who by one spirit are all baptized into one body and thereby made the children of one God thereby becomes one family; consequently one common interest in that high calling. O let us be knit together in love the center attraction, the bond of perfection, the fulfillment of the law and the glueing liquid which cements us together as one heart, one body and one soul here on earth, will bring us home to rest and gather us together in heaven where full fruition of our love will only be realized. True we have our troubles here, sorrows to endure, conflicts to meet, all is not sunshine. Clouds and darkness roll over us; adversity treads on the heels of prosperity; tempest follows serenity; troubles succeeds joy; temptation often comes after feeling the presence of Jesus and enjoying his smiling countenance for a little season; but amid all these trials when we look through the dark vista with an eye of faith to our future abode in heaven we can still rejoice, knowing that all things work together for our good if we love God. Hence to my dear brethren and sisters in Fulton Co. We sang together the the glorious songs of Zion; we felt love flowing together centering in Christ our head, we labored together in the cause of Christ, and we have felt the sweetness of heaven. Now let us hold out faithful to the end is my prayer.

FEASTING.

This is a prevailing custom among a certain class of people in our larger cities, and wealthy country towns, and also among the rich in farming communities, and in fact we are scarcely at liberty to say anything in reproof to it, for fear of hurting the feelings of some of the frequenters and indulgers in this evil if I may be allowed to call it so. However the words feasting and festivals has become a little obnoxious to the ears of some of the religious populace, and in order to obviate this difficulty they in some localities, call them social meals, dinners or suppers, by adopting this or a similar modest name, the most of Christians have adopted the custom. This thing of modifying terms is a great fort of the enemy of men. Look at the word gambling. There is scarcely a religious sect in the country that does not consider gambling and gambling shops the very filth of a civilized community, even the laws of our beloved country speaks against the great evil. And of late the word has been modified to such a degree that church members and preachers not only take an active part in it but encourage the practice. That monster is now named Fair instead of Gamble, and to take all the evil stench away thay have recently christened it Church Fair, allowing the monstrous practice of gambling to be carried on in the house solemnly dedicated to the service of God. To the honest christian man or woman the change of name has no bearing from the fact that the practical part is near about the same.

No dear brethren and sisters the name has not much to do with these things, it is simply a hiding place and that only for the time being. I do not want you to draw the conclusion from the above that I class feasting with gambling as being of equal magnitude for evil. I brought up this subject to show how eager men and women are to rush into evil, that, under one name they discard, speak, pray and preach against, they will under cover of a more mild name, in works and practice show forth the very thing that the first name indicated.

But to feasting, I still hold however, that there is an evil in this practice, name it what you will. That a considerable change has taken place in the manner of preparing and conducting these meals, I will admit, and I shall give the honor to those that it belongs to, the Good Templars, with their uniting zeal for temperance, have in many cases been the cause of having the wine cup dispensed with on occasions of this kind. Oh how many young men and young ladies too, have laid the corner stone of a drunkards life at the banqueting table of their father and mother, uncle, or rich neighbor. I admit that the more considerate have improved a great deal in this respect, and because the wine glass is smited they say the evil is entirely away. Let us see. It has a strong tendency of leading our children into pride and arrogance, making them of an aristocratical turn of mind, overlooking the absolute wants of their poorer neighbors children, and in after life they will do just as their progenitors did, and by doing so make their poorer friends and neighbors feel very uncomfortable in their community, and not only so, but it follows them into our churches and Sunday Schools, in many cases keeps such from singing and praying with us, and laboring with us in the Sunday School. This may seem strange to some of you but be assured there is too much of this among the so called religious world.

But again, I consider them wrong from a Biblical standpoint. Under this head I include all those dinners and suppers or feasts that are now becoming among neighbors including members of our own beloved church. You no doubt are ready to say, "we can do as we please with that which we call ours." This is true, you can make just as many feasts, or dinners and suppers as you please and there is none can say aught against it. This is not the wrong or where the evil lieth. Would to God there were more of our rich brethren willing and ready to get up these feasts, for in this the evil does not seem to be if our motives are good, pure and Biblical. But I am persuaded to believe that, taking the Bible and the general practice now prevalent among the people, the motives are not prompted of true Christianity. For I am of the opinion that just as soon as the feast is projected, every one or nearly so of the party, are also pointed out, and who are they? Invariably such that are able to repay again! Who dare deny? Dear brethren and sisters, if you of your abundance feel like making a feast that your souls may be blessed thereby, go by the Savior's directions on this subject and you will receive a blessing, and if you think you cannot do so, rather have none at all, than to have them in direct opposition to God's word, and thereby commit a sin. Hear the Savior on this subject. "Then said he (the Savior) also unto him that bade him, when thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Luke—14: 12–14.

Living up to the above order of things we are sure of obtaining a blessing. It may be possible that some of those that freely indulge in these things will answer me by saying we are not doing these things with the expectation of receiving a blessing from God, but do it simply as an act of friendship or charity, expecting to have the compliment returned, at some future time. Brethren, such arguments or excuses may do for the world to make use of, it will never be becoming a true child of God. And if this is the object for getting up these feasts, they are doubly sinful. In the first place you call not the proper subjects, and in the second place you violate the apostles injunction, hear him, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." I Cor.—10: 35. Whenever we do a thing simply to gratify the wishes of men we come short of glorifying the name of God. The better plan brethren for us to do in this matter, is to weigh it in the scales of Biblical knowledge and if we can't do it to the glory of God, do it not at all. First for your own sake and second, for the sake of your dear children and thirdly for the sake of your poorer neighbors, for remember while you and your select party may be sumptuously feasting, your poor neighbors and their children may not even have a crust of bread with which to stay hunger. Ye rich forget not the poor, for God is the Maker of us all.

THE BITTER SPRING.

A little river in Scythia, Herodotus tells us, has a marvelous sweetness in its waters until a certain bitter spring mingles with it. Henceforth its waters are all tainted and unfit for use.

What a type of the young heart is this stream at first; and how like that heart when one corrupt teacher has beguiled it, is its course after meeting the spring. One wicked lad in school has well nigh destroyed all the rest. Some gray-haired men seem to spend their lives in destroying our youth. "Their sleep is taken away except they cause some to fall."

I have seen a youth urged and pressed into a bar-room, with great mirth and jesting, by a party of young men. He hung his head and went most unwillingly at first, but he soon became a regular visitant there.

An infidel merchant took great pains to instil his view into the minds of all in his employ. Any young man of especial intelligence was sure to receive his most marked attention. His books were loaned freely and pressed upon him, and he did not rest until he felt he was fairly won to infidelity. He has gone to give up his account; but he could not bury his influence. It was like a poisoned well whereof hundreds may drink to their eternal death.

Christ says of such a corrupter of youth, "It were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." That was a terrible punishment sometime inflicted on malefactors, but it was light compared with what God has in store for those who cause to offend these little ones.—Int. Mess.

THE SWEETNESS OF HOME.

He who has no home has not the sweetest pleasure of life; he feels not the thousand endearments that cluster around that hallowed spot to fill the void of this aching heart, and while away his leisure moments in the sweetest of life's joys. Is misfortune your lot, you will find a friendly welcome from hearts beating true to your own. The chosen partner to your toil has a smile of approbation when others have deserted, a hand of hope when all others refuse, and a heart to feel your sorrows as her own. Perhaps a smiling cherub with prattling glee and joyous laugh, will drive all sorrow from your careworn brow, and enclose it in the wreathes of domestic bliss.

No matter how humble that home may be, how destitute its stores, or how poorly its inmates are clad; if true hearts dwell there, it is yet a home—a cheerful, prudent wife, obedient and affectionate children, will give possessors more real joy than bags of gold and windy honors.

The home of a temperate, industrious and honest man will be his greatest joy. He comes to it weary and worn but the music of the merry laugh and the happy voices of childhood cheer him. A plain but healthful meal awaits him. Envy, ambition and strife have no place there, and with a clear conscience he lays his weary limbs down to rest in the bosom of his family, under the protecting care of the poor man's friend.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

Oh, how shallow a soul I have to take in Christ's love; for let worlds be multiplied, according to angels' understanding, in millions, till they weary themselves, these words could not contain the thousandth part of his love! O that I could join in among the throng of angels, and seraphim, and now glorified saints, and could raise a new love song to Christ before all the world! I am pained with wondering at new-opened treasures in Christ! If every finger, member, bone and joint were a torch burning in the hottest fires in hell, I would that they could all send out love praises, high songs of praise for evermore to that plant of renown, to that royal and high prince, Jesus my Lord.

Oh that my hairs, all my members and all my bones were well tuned tongues, to sing the high praises of my great and glorious King! Help me to lift up Christ upon his throne, and to lift him up above all the thrones of the clay kings, the dying scepterbearers of this world!

FOR US.

It is a blessed thought that the Bible was written for us. That the Spirit of God looked along the ages and saw that in such an event or circumstance of life, we should need just such counsel and help. And then he inspired men to write it down. Not for our good only, but for thousands who have gone before and who will come after. No promise is there but has been proved thousands of times, no warning, but many have taken it home.

It is like a good chart, which has everything on it, that a mariner in every sea may need. Its truths never wear out. Says one who has been a deep student of it, "The Bible will bear a thousand readings, and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and carefully, is the surest of finding new wonders there."

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS.

The following is an extract from the Cincinnati Gazette and goes to show in what an awkward position our multiplicity of names place us. It is perfectly absurd for us to be known as Dunkards, Tunkers, Old Brethren, German Baptists and "The Brethren." By common consent we have universally acknowledged the name "Brethren" which is applicable and significant of our fraternal feeling as a church. Why then cling to that meaningless name (when applied to us) German Baptists. If we would have any respect for the meaning of the terms it would be far more consistent to call ourselves English Baptists, but neither would be appropriate and we hope our brethren will, at their Council, District and Annual Meetings, agitate the question until we adopt the name "Brethren" and acknowledge none other.

In regard to statistics returned in the census, it may be stated generally, as a proposition, that the census statistics fall in almost all instances below the facts. The reason is obvious; those who take the census and its statistics cannot put down anything but what they find and know. It is very evident they can not find and know all that is true. For example: There are several quite numerous religious sects who do not know their own statistics. This is to be regretted, because a religious society with any organization whatever ought to koow its own churches and its own members. If it does not, how can it maintain its own discipline? For example, the society of the "United Brethren" in Ohio claim (as stated by their officers) two hundred more churches than are given in the censos; but those could not be found. Hence they are not in the census. So the "Methodists," as contradistinguished from the "Methodist Episcopal," claim more churches than census gives them. The most curious case of error in the census is putting the "Christians" and the "Disciples of Christ" under the same head as "Christians." In the introduction to the census, it is said that it was impossible to separate; that some of the churches did not know themselves what the difference was! That may be, and yet the difference is both definable and palpable. The churches properly called "Christian" were founded about a century ago, the first church in this country being founded in, I think, 1763. Of this church there is only one in Cincinnati—the Bible Church of Dr. Summerbell, on Center street. The "Disciples of Christ," which is their official name, are what are called "Campbellite Baptists," that is, they are mainly those who separated from the regular Baptist Church under the preaching of Campbell and his disciples. There were some others, mostly known as "New Lights," who came out in the extraordinary revivals in Kentucky and some other states sixty years ago. There are in all seven varieties of Baptists, most of whom are contained under the head of "Regular Baptists," "Disciples of Christ," "Christians," "Free-Will baptists," "Tunkers" and "Mennonites. I give these examples just to show under what difficulties the Deputy Marshalls labored to give not only the numerical view of the churches, but a just view showing their real and distinctive differences.

Ohio.—The state statistician of Ohio has been delving in the census reports, and other official unofficial documents, in search of the truth about the churches in that state. He finds the number of church organizations to be 6,489; church edifices 6,282; church organizations without edifices, 206. The Presbyterians have about 800 congregations; the Congregationalists, 200; the Methodist Episcopalians, 1,900; other Methodists, etc., 250; Baptists, 500. The Presbyterian is the wealthiest denomination in proportion to its members; and the Methodists wealthiest in the aggregate. Mr. Mansifield says, further, that the Roman Catholics have in Ohio, in round numbers, three hundred churches; their number, according to the Roman Catholic Almanac is about two hundred and fifty thousand. As that is less than a tenth part of the population of the state, nobody need feel alarmed about them.

Statistics.—The total number of churches belonging to the Congregational church in North America is 3,366, of which 3,263 are in the United States, and 776 of these last are vacant. The number of ministers is 3,264 in all, and 3,201 are in the United States. The net increase of the denomination for the year is 61 churches, 6,862 members, 2,145 Sunday School scholars, and 77 members The greatest number of churches are in Massachusetts, being 503, followed by Connecticut, 294; New York, 253; Illinois, 241; Maine 239; Iowa 213; Ohio, 204; Vermont, 201; New Hampshire, 187; Wisconsin, 182; Michigan, 180.

Philadelphia. — The assessors' estimate of the value of Moravian churches, as lately published gives the following figures; First church, including cemetery, $50,000; Second church, $28,000; Third church, $2,500; Fourth church, $5,900. Together, $86,400, which is about 25 percent less than their market value, so we are assured.

Bible Revision.—The Old Testament Revision Company having gone a first time throogh the pentateuch, have now arrived in their final revision at the Book of Numbers. Many members of the company are favorable to an immediate publication of the Pentatench.

The Rock Creek Church in east Tennessee, composed of emigrants from Wales, although without a pastor, keep up regular Lord's day convocations, weekly prayer meetings and singings. They are not ashamed to sing, pray nor talk of Jesus.

WATCHING FOR PAPA.

She always stood upon the steps,
Just by the cottage door,
Waiting to kiss me when I came,
Each night, home from the store.
Her eyes were like two glorious stars,
Dancing in Heaven's own blue,
"Papa," she'd call, like a wee bird,
"I's lootin' out for you."

Alas! how sadly do our lives
Change as we onward roam;
For now no birdie voice calls out
To bid me welcome home.
No little arms stretch out to me,
No blue eyes dancing bright,
Are peeping from the cottage door,
When I come home at night.

And yet it comforts me to think
That when I'm called away
From scenes below, to those of bright
And everlasting day,
A little angel at the gate,
With eyes divinely blue,
Will call with birdie voice, "Papa,
I's lootin out for you."

KIND WORDS.

When I was quite young I learned the value of kindness. Previous to this I considered it but a duty to be performed by men and women only, to each other. As an example of this, I supposed if a person were sick, her neighbor should sit by her and talk in such a manner as not to be rude; or if a person were sad or had trouble, his neighbor should sympathize with him.

I was nine years old when we moved to a village where we knew no one. The first woman with whom we got acquainted was one of those persons who deem their neighbors inferior to themselves. Accordingly we (our family) had formed an opinion of each person in the place, from what she had told us. This person was rough in her manners; another kept an unclean house; Mrs. C. wasn't accommodating at all.

At school I did not like the appearance of my schoolmates. I chose one of these as my friend in all things. At no time was I so happy as when in Ella's company. This was in June, and there were many flowers in a slough near the schoolhouse, that we used to gather after school.

One day when Ella took her dinner to school she wanted me to ask her mother if she might go with me after flowers that day. What! ask that woman who walks past with her head so high, and looks so hateful? At last I said I would. After dinner I went to her. "Mrs. Ferris, please may Ella go with me for flowers after school?"

"Yes, most certainly she may," she answered pleasantly.

Dear friends, have you any idea how I felt as I went to school? I told mother of her gentle reply. From that time until now I never have paid any attention to slander, and ever after Mrs. Ferris and my mother were firm friends.—Young Folks Rural.

THE DEVIL'S WORKSHOP.

Where is the devil's workshop? Is it in the "bad place?" Let us tell you where it is. It is in the idle mind. Think of that. The wicked one finds out every idle mind, and goes into it with all his tools, and begins to work. What kind of work does he turn out? Oh, he makes a good job of it. Let us see. There are evil thoughts, bad feelings and bad passions. He makes the boy or girl think about wicked things, feel vexed at everything and everybody; nothing goes right with them. They cannot do things and have things like others. They are disappointed, cross, sour, whine and whimper about everything. Nothing suits them, nothing pleases them, and they want nobody to love them. They don't care. They don't want to get their lessons, don't want to practice, don't want to go to school, don't want to do anything. Hate brothers and sisters, won't obey papa and mamma, quarrel, fight, pout and scold, and do many other bad things.

Did you ever see a little boy or girl in this condition? If you did, you saw the kind of work the devil does in every idle mind, for an "idle mind is the devil's wokrshop." Whenever you find yourself thinking, and feeling and acting this way, put your mind to work on some hard study, pleasant book, or useful employment.—Young Pilgrim.

DON'T BOYS.

Don't be impatient, no matter if things do sometimes go wrong.

Don't give the ball a kick, and send it into the nearest mud-puddle, because it won't go straight when you throw it. Don't send the marbles against the fence, and break your best glass alley, because your clumsy finger could not hit the centre. Don't break your kite-string all to pieces, because it will not bring your kite down from the tree with the first jerk; it will take you full three times as long to get it down afterward. Don't give your little brother an angry push and a sharp word, if he cannot see into the mysteries of marble-playing or hoop-rolling with the first lesson. You were once just as stupid as he, though you have soon forgotten it.

What in the world would become of you if your mother had no more patience than you? If, every time you came to her when busy she would thrust you off with a cross word? Dear, kind, loving mother, who never ceases to think of you, to care for you; who keeps you so nicely clothed, and makes such nice things for you to eat! What if she were to be so impatient that you would be half the time afraid to speak to her, to tell her about your troubles in school and at play! Ah, how you grieve that mother by your impatience and crossness!

CONSISTENCY.

Dear Pilgrim:—Consistency is a jewel I think all should possess, for without it we would often be left to doubt and in darkness. We often find portions of Scripture that do not seem to exactly harmonize, but with this little jewel we can connect one passage with another so as to form a perfect chain, and they then become easy of comprehension.

I want to notice in particular, one verse of Scripture found in the first epistle of John, 2 chapter and 15th verse. It reads as follows: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world, if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." Now I ask, is there not anything in this world that we should love? What does other Scriptures tell us concerning love? Does it not tell us to love our children, our husbands, our wives, and even our enemies? And are they not often times of the world, and entirely wrapt up in it? It seems necessary to at once call forth the little jewel and it will tell us we must love God better than all things else. And it says that love from us is due, in a certain degree, to all God's creatures, but we should not love the vain amusements, and pleasures of the world, nor anything that is sinful. We should hate sin and shun it, knowing that when it is finished, it bringeth forth death.

Many other portions of Scripture might be brought forth and compared in this same manner, but I think there is enough already to show us how much the jewel of consistency is needed to reconcile one passage of Scripture with another. And not only is it necessary to reconcile Scriptures, but also church custom, order, &c., by comparing the same with Gospel authority, and then find out which seems to be consistent with Gospel. Then as a matter of course, the inconsistencies will in a manner be brought to light. We will now take into consideration the Churches that think the subject of dress of so small importance that it is beneath their notice, consequently their members indulge in all the vain and frivilous fashions of the age and of wearing of gold and of costly apparel. Is this consistent with Paul's first epistle to Timothy, 2:9-10. They read thus: "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but which becometh women professing godliness with good works." I think many will say at once, that their custom of dressing is indeed very inconsistent with the Gospel.

I will next notice the Seventh day Adventist. They claim to be, strictly speaking, a Bible people, having no Discipline but the Word of God. Nevertheless they are obliged to except of Ellen G. White's visions, as being a later revelation from God. No matter what the vision may command, the Church must obey or they will be called to an account by a special vision for them, pointing out their faults, &c. As a Church, their Christian character cannot be gainsayed. Mrs. White claims that, in a vision, the Church was to wear a certain style of dress, and an angel gave her the pattern. The womens dress is to be short with pants of the same material, they also wear a short sacque, a plain white collar, but no ornaments allowed. They have no particular style for male members clothing. I would ask, is it necessary for us to have a special revelation to make our peace, calling, and election sure with God? Let us hear what Paul says in 2 Tim. 3: 15 15 17, and see if this vision government is required or consistent. "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation thro' faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Now if we can be made perfect, and be thoroughly furnished unto all good works through the Gospel, would it not be very inconsistent for us to look for anything farther? There cannot be anything better than that which will make us perfect. Again we see that consistency is indeed a jewel. As I have been noticing other Churches, it seems right for me to look home, or to the Church of which I am a member, called the Church of the Brethren. Although I have been a member only about one year, yet I think I understand at least, a portion of the rules and order of the Church, this much I do know, the established order is to have our garments made after a particular style and the sisters are required to wear a cap as a covering as found in 1 Cor. 11. Here our sister presents an argument relative to the covering which she will please excuse us for omitting, as we believe after she has been in the fold awhile longer her views will be changed. To try to make it appear that the hair is the covering refered to by Paul is evidently out of the question. The subject is prayer, and the requirements of the woman is that she be covered. If the hair is the covering meant, it certainly is a grave question to know how our sisters would put that covering on and take it off again on those special occasions. We are in favor of any reasonable amount of forbearance in such cases, and would advise that our brethren lead in such cases instead of driving.—Ed.]

And now in conclusion, I would say to the Brethren, those that hold office and claim power to enforce order. If any cannot see that it is required of them by the Gospel, do not I beseech you, add insult to injury by saying that because they do not fully come up to the order, they have not God in their hearts, or He would work to the on'side. Who is it that judges the heart? Is it not God? I feel thankful that we are not left to the mercies of man, neither are we to be judged by men, but the God whom we adore is full of love and tender mercies. It is Him that justifieth, who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance: If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that as he is Christ's so are we Christ's. Brethren and sisters, one and all, let us as the followers of Christ, have our words and acts correspond with His example of love mercy, and forbearance. Then with consistency we may claim to be His children. As a lover of God, His people, truth, charity and justice, I claim to be, though very unworthily, a sister. M. J. COBLE.

Dear Brethren: After a long silence as usual, I again direct my thoughts in a practical form to the sanctum of the PILGRIM. It looks rather selfish I confess to receive its precious weekly visits without so much or so little as a word of cheer or welcome, coming as it does with its pleasant smiling face teeming with good things such as a hungry soul loves. I wish to say privately brethren that you are a head and shoulders above your former selves in the superior quality and mechanism of your paper, and although it does not contain as much as it could be made to carry, yet that defect is abundantly redeemed by the wisdom and forbearance of its management, the excellence of its contributions, &c. The old fable of the retort of the lion on the fox is apropo at this point. You remember that.

Well as the Lord has blessed me with restored health, it does not become a greatful heart to refuse a public acknowledgement. I am now in a better condition as regards the body, I think, than I have been for some time, but I had to pass through a severe furnace of affliction. Nervous dyspepsia is not the most acceptable ill that flesh is heir to, but as we have not the liberty to choose the rod that our Father chastises us with, we will not quarrel about the means, but pray that the end or purpose might be hallowed to the glory of the loving Father and the winnowing and purifying of the soul.

My restoration is the work of the Lord through the agency of means which are abundantly at his command, of which I will write in the future, and now it behooves me to use the blessing thus confered to the advancement of the cause of truth. May the Lord of the Vineyard give me grace to serve him faithfully and effectually.

Your Fellow Servant,

Dear Friends:—I came across a few pages of one of the WEEKLY PILGRIMS, and in it I saw a piece, "How to oppose Feet-washing" by J. H. Moore, referring to what Jesus said in the 13th chapter of John. Man to be honest, must admit Feet-washing to be right because Jesus said so. Now what does Jesus say about the Lord's Prayers, also about moral laws or the government of Cesar? Now we propose that where there is no simplicity there is no law as simplicity makes purity. If Christ is truthful can man get to heaven and not obey his commandments? God is honorable and just. He is the author. Now one more question. Can man obey the law of God and not confess his sins? also what does St. John mean in Revelations by the City of Babylon the old whore? If you give this an insertion in your paper and send me one for three months I will be pleased to come and see you at times.

"Remove not the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set."

A CORRECTION.

The following we received from the associate editor of the Baptist Record and as we wish to do justice unto all men, we insert it hoping that whatever misunderstanding may exist between Elder Flory and friend Ellison may be amicably adjusted on Christian principles.—ED.

Mr. Editor:—In your issue of 28th January, 1873, Elder J. S. Flory has introduced me to your readers under colors not the most desirable and, although a stranger to you and your readers, I ask a little space in your paper, not to discuss the issues between Mr. Flory and myself, but to set myself right before your readers. 1st. Elder F. implies that I "have an aversion to 'Dunkers' in general and himself in particular." I disclaim such aversion, and strive as a christian, to be a real friend to all my race.

2nd. Elder F. censures me sharply for signing my review of his Tract "Mourner's Bench Religion Examined," with M. E. instead of my full name. As an associate editor of the Baptist Record that is my usual and well known signature, and, instead of concealing the writer as Mr. F. assumes, identifies him, and is no "mask." 3rd. The "misquotations" complained of were mainly typographic errors. The M. S. to the Record, reads: "Wishes his right arm may be palsied and his pen move no further, if any other motive prompts him than the welfare of precious souls." It is erroneously printed, "sight may be palsied" &c, "wishes" is used instead of the term "May my right arm be" &c. I cannot see that any injustice is done to the original idea.

4th. In the terms, "born of water three times" the quotation marks were improperly placed after the words "three times." It is my language and not Elder Flory's. Other mistakes occur of less moment which I will not occupy your space to correct.

In friendship and love,
I am yours, &c.
M. ELLISON.

Dear Editors:—We are living here in Lacrosse, Wis., and seem to be all alone as there are none of the Brethren that we know of living within 150 miles. If any of the brethren when passing through here would stop off at North Lacrosse, Wis. and enquire for D. R. Horlburt and come and see us we would be thankful indeed. We connected ourselves with the Brethren last Fall while on a visit to Indiana, believing it to be the only church that lives up to the commands of God. Notwithstanding we are here alone we thank God and the Lord Jesus Christ that we are still trying to live Christians and striving for the crown that the Lord will give us at that day and not to us only, but to all those who love his appearing.

ADMONITIONS.

"Our best friends are those who tell us of our faults and teach us how to correct them."

We occasionally get a gentle reprimand for mistakes we make in presenting matter before the public which it is thought would be better withheld. While we entertain the best of feelings towards those who have the goodness thus to give us their opinions, we hope they will make due allowance for us under the circumstances which we are often placed. We, just like other people, are often deceived in the motives of our writers. Not being informed on both sides of the question we sometimes admit articles that we afterwards regret it as deeply as do our readers. The position of an editor of a religious paper is a peculiar one and none can fully understand it but those who have learned it by experience. Our first and leading object is to please God and labor for the promotion of his cause or the salvation of his people, and secondly, so far as is possible, meet the wishes and expectations of our patrons. To fully meet the desires of all is impossible as in attempting to please one by granting a special request we may displease hundreds of others, so that when our judgment anticipates such results we always think it prudent to disappoint the few rather than offend the many and we hope all of our readers will justify us in this position even if it should cause some of their productions to meet their destiny in the waste basket. There is one thing we wish distinctly understood; the basis upon which we accept and reject is merit and demerit, with as little favoritism as possible. We are fully aware of the responsibilities under which we are placed and therefore wish to discharge our duty in such a way as to meet the approbation of God rather than of man, therefore we always accept, kindly, the ideas and suggestions of our brethren and sisters relative to our labor and duties and endeavor to be profited by them.

FEASTING.

We call special attention to the above subject as treated by Eld. Lint on another page. This very thing is greatly stirring up the minds of many of our conscientious and good thinking brethren and sisters and we know it will be considered a timely stroke in the right direction. But you see we are growing rich (in this world's goods) Our old houses have been torn down and larger one's built with their spacious and well-furnished parlors. The tables are decorated with the most modern style of dishes and is made almost to groan under its load of luxuries. Now it would seem just grand to have our rich neighbors and kinsman come and see these things. Then the compliments we get! Why really it makes us feel ever so good. "You have a splendid parlor, and your carpets are really grand." Chairs, sofas, lounges, pies, tarts, jams, jellies and a hundred and one other things make subjects of complimentary notice, and has been the pride of many a good housewife—but here comes Bro. Lint with his Bible quotations and spoils the whole thing.

Well, to be carnally minded is death but to be spiritually minded is life and peace, and as life and peace is more to be desired than a gorged stomach and empty applause, we suppose that it would be better after all, to follow out the divine injunction of our blessed Master, and bestow our good things upon the poor and needy like God our most indulgent Father is doing unto us, as the best of us must, in his sight appear as miserable beggars, and shall a beggar despise a beggar? Nay, verily, God is the Father of us all and we are brethren.

PLEASE NOTICE.

As we wish to have some of our brethren stop with us on their way to District Meeting, we have appointed services for Saturday evening, (May 10), Sunday and Sunday evening, in the James Creek Church, with the expectation that some of the brethren will make arrangements to stop with us.

By taking the Broad Top Road at Huntingdon will save about $1.00 in fare, and will have only 1¼ miles further to walk from the Railroad. Those coming to James Creek on Saturday can either take the morning train which leaves Huntingdon at 7.45 A. M., or the evening at 6.00. Brethren intending to stop with us will please inform us as soon as convenient.

Dear Editors:—Are we excusable in the sight of God in submitting ourselves to the fellowship of town idlers and getting into conversation and dispute about religion, politics and the news of the day, such as finding fault with our neighbors, &c., with the children of profanity and bad habits of every description. Paul to the Corinthians says: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, what communion hath light with darkness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial?" J. B.

Remarks. In these things we should exercise good judgment and be governed by the influence we may exert over those with whom we associate. To dispute about religion with those who lack piety and have no disposition to come to the truth, is casting pearl before swine. To talk politics is a loss of time and belongs to the other kingdom. We are to redeem time and our conversation is to be holy. To talk about and find fault with neighbors to say the least, is low and mean and does not become a child of God.

The Brethren here are building a large stone church which when completed, will reflect credibly for the zeal the brethren here have for the cause in erecting a suitable place for the worship of God.

OUR CONTRIBUTION BOX

Our box is unusually full of original essays just now, and some of our contributions are not getting the attention that they should have on account of the series of articles that we have now under way of publication and for want of time to prepare them. We hope that none will feel discouraged at the non appearance of their efforts. Every paper will be examined in due time and nothing of merit will be lost. We are glad to have a good supply on hand as the busy season is now setting in, and the probability is that our contributors will not have as much leisure as they had during the winter.

POETRY.

OVER THE RIVER.

BY REV. J. B. WELTY.

Over the river's a mansion of rest,
A home for the weary, a cheer for the blest.
Jesus is there as the centre of light,
The essence of love, and the sense of delight.

Over the river the dead are at home.
But we on this side yet in weariness roam.
O that we safely were housed on that shore.
We'd sing the sweet praise of the Lord evermore.

Over the river that's flowing between,
They tell us the fields are so lovely and green.
Mansions are there that shall never decay,
Whose lovliness never shall vanish away.

Over the river by faith I descry
The mountains of glory that tower on high;
There I behold the fair city of love,
Jerusalem shining in glory above.

Over the river I'm longing to go
Where joy is unbroken by seasons of woe.
Some have departed; we bade them farewell,
In mansions across they peacefully dwell.

Over the river! I wish I were o'er.
Will some one not guide me to yonder bright shore?
Yes, says the Savior, I'll pilot thee o'er
And safely I'll land thee on Canaan's bright shore.

Come then, dear Savior, I'll sail in Thy boat,
For over the river of death it will float.
Tempests may rage and the thunders may roll.
I know Thou wilt still them, and comfort my soul.

When we are safe in Immanuel's land
We'll join the glad chorus of Heaven's fair band;
Shoutings of welcome in triumph we'll raise
And roll to His throne the sweet anthems of praise.

ORIOINAL ESSAYS.

THE CHURCH AND DUTIES OF HER MEMBERS.—NO. 4.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Second Degree of the Ministry.

When the second degree (so called) is conferred upon the minister his privileges are extended so that he now has a right to go forth and make appointments, fill them by preaching to all who come to hear and baptize as many as truly believe. Of course it is expected they will be submissive to the rightful wishes of the Elders and the Church and act in harmony with the same. Also, they now have the right to solemnize the marriage of parties when called on and in some other respects their privileges and duties are extended which are regulated in a great measure by the surrounding circumstances. As their duties thus are extended their obligations are of a more responsible nature. Therefore it is expected that as they make advances in their calling they will make progress in their Christian life so as to become more zealous and self-sacrificing in the cause of their blessed Master. Become more and more patterns of humility and Christian piety. What has been said in reference to those in the first degree in a great measure, is applicable to the ministry in any position and what we may say further here may apply likewise to all. It is generally looked upon by the non-professor as well as others that the Minister of the Gospel should be a great deal better than other Christians. Therefore such things that hardly engage attention when belonging to the Laiety are in the case of the Minister magnified into wonderful monstrosities. In consideration of this fact we ought to use double dilligence in looking well to our way. Jesting is often freely indulged in by men and women considered very pious without causing a passing reproof, but in the case of ministers we often hear such remarks, that we have felt ashamed because too often guilty. We have seen, as we thought, solemn impressions entirely erased from the mind of hearers, by the jesting and levity of the preacher just after having finished his discourse. Ministers are men of like passions with others but these things ought to be avoided as much as possible, especially before a mixed multitude where there may be dear souls laboring under a burden of conscious sin. If we have to give an account to God for any idle word that seems to drop harmless how shall it be with us when we have to give an account for those idle jesting words that destroy in a measure our influence for good? Here brethren is something not only to think about but something to pray about, that it be less prevalent. While we abhor the sanctimonious countenance and demeanor of the hypocrite, we would love to feel and see cheerfulness seasoned with such love, courteousness and the christian graces in general, that was free from sin and lightmindedness. Cheerful gravity and happy joyful conversation can not be condemned where chastity and moderation give tone to the social circle. While remembering that the tongue is an unruly member it would be well for us all to adopt the language of the Psalmist when he says: "I said I will take heed to my ways that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me." Psa.—39: 1. The wicked are always watching to catch something from the professor especially from the minister, that they may justify themselves by saying, "I am about as good as those that make a profession." How necessary then that the Heralds of Truth talk and walk so that the ungodly cannot have room to ease their wicked consciences in that way.

An old Brother minister once said he believed, that in proportion to the number that profess religion there would be more preachers lost than of any other class! If true, and why should we doubt it, is it not a fearful thought? The responsibility so great and flesh so weak! But God has promised to be with the weak and that too unto the end. Shirking the responsibility, Jonas like, will never mend the matter at all, hence the only alternative, to insure the blessing, is, dear fellow watchmen, to fulfill the calling whereunto we have been called, to the best of our ability. Do all we can and leave the rest to God and the co-laborers of his that may follow in our footsteps. Let us not fall out on the way. Right here we feel to make a remark or so. Nothing insures such unity in the Church and force to the preached word as love and union among the ministers who all seem to be laboring to the one grand end of building up Zion and saving precious souls. But too often jealousy is seen eking out from under the ministerial robes; Self is a stubborn imp that has his throne in the flesh and often wants to be a gem in the eyes of world worshippers. Jesus and Him crucified should always keep self on the background hid behind the wreaking cross of the suffering Son of God. Suppose "I myself" did want to preach and somebody else done all the preaching, if sinners were made to feel and God's name glorified you Bro. "I myself" will not be held accountable for your silence, but if envy was playing in your heart when earnest prayer ought to have filled it, you might be accountable for something! "Preferring one above another" is no where more commendible than with the ministers. But then it should not be adopted with such effects as to become ludicrous in the eyes of the congregation or to forcing up a brother who well knew that it was not his time to preach. Circumstances generally are such that brethren may know if it is prudent for them to get up, and when they are conscious of this, let them do so without being urged. I remarked above one would not be accountable for their silence when the time was well taken up by another. But I fear there are times the ministers do not do their duty that is when lounging at home often half the Sundays out of the year when there are cries not far off to "come and preach for us," or at least an effectual door would be opened if a little effort was made to introduce the true Gospel. Go into all the world and preach the Gospel and then there need be none complain because they don't get to preach as often as they desire. The world is large and sinners plenty and God's mercy great, go then brother, go and preach the Word, be instant in season, and out of season.

This life of ours—what is it. A very few soon-ended years, and then —the ceaseless psalm and the [illegible] Sabbath of the soul.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

B. F. MOOMAW.

In a treatise on Masonry published in 1792, by William Preston, Master of the Lodge of Antiquity the origin of Masonry is traced from Creation. Ever since symmetry began, and harmony displayed her charms (says he) our order has had a being." We have seen above how it has existed from creation. Its introduction into England he likewise supposes to have been prior to the Roman invasion. There are, according to him, the remains of some stupendous works executed by the Britons, much earlier than the time of the Romans, even this displays no small share of ingenuity of invention; so that we can have no doubt of the existence of Masonry in Britain even during those early periods." Truly if the mechanical arts proves the existence of Masonry, then Masonry has always existed. But as seen by the following, these arts were not confined to any particular class, but indeed common to all people. Mr. Preston further says: "The Druids are likewise said to have had among them many customs similar to those of the Masons, and to have derived their government from Pythagoras; but the resemblance betwixt their usages and those of the Freemason Societies now existing cannot be accurately traced even by the Masons themselves.

Masonry is said to have been encouraged by Cæsar and many of the Roman generals who were appointed governors of Britain"; but though we know, that at this period the Fraternity were employed in erecting many magnificent fabrics, nothing is recorded concerning their Lodges and Conventions and we have a very imperfect account of the customs which prevailed in their assemblies."

It is vagnely supposed that Lodges and conventions were introduced during the fifth century under the auspices of General Carausius who ambitiously hoped to be the founder of a British empire, to accomplish which he encouraged learning, collecting also the best artificers from many different countries, and appointing Albanus his steward, the principal superintendant of their assemblies. Lodges or conventions of the fraternity, began now to be introduced, and they be regularly carried on." "This Albanus, or St. Alban is said to have been a great friend of Masons, and gave them two shillings per week, besides three pence for their cheer; while before that time they had no more than one penny per day and their meat." He likewise obtained a charter from the king and his council, for them to hold a general council, which was named an Assembly." The same circumstances are mentioned in a M. S, written in the time of James II, only this increases the weekly salary of the Masons to 3s. 6d. and 3d. per day for the bearers of burthens. It is exceedingly doubtful, and it is doubted by intelligent Masons themselves whether Freemasonry is entitled to the credit of so great antiquity as a mechanical association or organized society. But say they if this story of St. Albans is not believed, doubtless the order has great antiquity. Now then let us see what is the facts in the case as confidently relied on by intelligent Masons themselves for which I quote the language of John Dove the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Virginia. "Freemasonry denotes the system of mysteries and secrets peculiar to the society of free and accepted Masons. The origin of the society is very ancient but we have no antheotic account of the time when it was first instituted, or even what was the reason of such an association of people under the title of Masons more than of any other mechanical profession. In Dr. Henry's History, we find the origin of Freemason's Society, in Britain attributed to the difficulty found in former times, of procuring a sufficient number of workmen to build the multitude of Churches, monasteries, and other religious edifices, which the superstition of those ages prompted the people to raise. The Italians, says he, with some Greek refugees and with them French, Germans and Flemings joined into a fraternity of architects, preparing Papal bulls for their encouragement, and their peculiar priviliges; they styled themselves Freemasons and ranged from one country to another as they found Churches to build." By other accounts, however, (says our author) the antiquity of Masonry is carried up much higher even as early as the building of Solomon's temple. In Britain the introduction of Masonry has been fixed at the year 674, when glass making was first introduced, and it appears, indeed, that from this time many buildings in the Gothic style were erected by men in companies, who are said to have called themselves free because they were at liberty to work in any part of the kingdom. Others have derived the institution of Freemasons from a combination among the people of that profession not to work without an advance of wages. At this time it appears that a combination of these mechanics were employed under the direction of Edward the III, to assist in rebuilding and enlarging the castle together with the church and castle of St. George at Windsor. At this time it was said that Masons agreed on certain tokens by which they might know and assist each other against being impressed, and not to work unless free and on their own terms. Further accounts of their history shows that the society was not permanently organized until the year 926, which occurred at York under the patronage of Edwin, the kings brother who obtained for them a charter from Athelstane and became grand master himself. Our author further says, "there is indeed great reason to believe that York was the original seat of Masonic government, no other place having claimed it and the whole fraternity, having at various times owned allegience to the authority then established. Hence at the present day all regular Masons are called and known among themselves as York Masons. What, we would ask, does these historical facts prove to the enquiring mind? It proves first that operative Freemasonry as a mechanical society is absolutely and exclusively of men and not from heaven, that it has not the semblance of divine authority and that all such pretentions is a myth and an imposture, of which the too credulous world ought to be faithfully warned, and second that it was simply conceived in the mind of shrewd and ingenious mechanics, of different orders and an organization formed, that in their combined resolutions they might control the compensation for their services determined "not to work only upon their own terms." This organization, let it be remembered was not founded earlier than A. D. 500, and probably not earlier than 674, and most probably, not until 926, after Christ, and the 4926th year of the world and without one word of authority from the Bible, hence it is not from Heaven.

WALK IN THE LIGHT.

This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not tell the truth, but if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John, 1 : 5, 6, 7.

Then to ascertain how we may correctly walk in the light, we go to the law and testimony. We ask then, what is the language of the New Testament in speaking of the ordinance as included in the commission of Christ's ministers? As to the ordinance of baptism we find it instituted, enjoined and practiced, but to all appearance, it is thus presented as an ordinance which was to follow the preaching of the Gospel, and the conversion thereby of the souls of men to the faith of Christ. Hence we see that through the instrumentality of the Gospel we come to the light by hearing it preached, or by reading and contemplating it sincerely. To walk in the light we must conduct ourselves in every respect consistent with the Gospel. Then the blood of Jesus Christ his Son will cleanse us from all sin. Now mark, I will in this treatise give the Gospel plan by which every sinner can place himself in a condition where the efficacy of the blood of Jesus Christ will reach his case and cleanse him from all sin. Then I hope the caviling in regard to receiving remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost will stop wherever this may come. Hence we introduce divine law with testimony. In the commision, Christ says, "preach the Gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned. Mark 16 : 15, 16. Here, evidently, is the divinely indicated order in the work of the ministry. 1st, preaching the Gospel. 2nd, its effect—conversion unto faith. 3rd, the outward expression of this effect, baptism. This order the first ministers of Christ appear to have uniformly followed. We will give the uniform order as it is given to us in the Gospel. The Apostles adhered to the counsel of Jesus, and tarried in Jerusalem, until they were endued with power from on high. Then they preached to the multitude in Jerusalem, and the people heard them preach, and consequently the guilty were convicted and said, "what shall we do." Peter said, "repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2 : 37, 38. Hence when Philip preached Christ unto the samaritans, and they believed the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and were baptized both men and women. Acts 8 : 5, 12. Also same chapter, 35th verse. "Then Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture and preached unto him Jesus. They came to a certain water and the Eunuch said, 'See here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?' Philip demanded and obtained of him a professian of his faith in Christ, and then baptized him in the water. 37, 38. Again, when Saul of Tarsus was so wonderfully converted by the Lord himself he must needs go and listen to the counsel of Ananias, then arose and was baptized. Acts 9 : 18. Also Acts 22 : 16. Also when Peter carried the Gospel to the Gentiles he began with preaching "peace by Jesus Christ," assuring them that "through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins." (This is a context and must be connected with other texts when the sense is given.) And when his preaching had been blest to their conversion, then "he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Acts 10 : 36, 48. And again, when Paul and Timothy spoke to the women at the river side, the Lord opened the heart of Lydia to attend to the things that were spoken, and she was baptized. Acts 16 : 13, 14, 15. And when Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God at the midnight hour, in their prison, when the anxious jailer of Philippi came in with the inquiry, "sirs, what must I do to be saved?" the reply was, "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thine house." Then spake they unto him the word of the Lord and to all that were in his prison, and believing in God with all his house, he was baptized, he and all his, straightway. Acts 16 : 30, 31, 32, 33.

The foregoing is the legal plan given by divine authority whereby we can place ourselves in a condition that our sins will be remitted by the blood of Christ, and then and then only is the poor creature a fit subject for the indwelling of that Holy Spirit or power, consequently we do not claim that the element water remits sin or washes away sin, and to say that by faith and repentance, without baptism, our sins are remitted is inconsistent with the tenor of the Gospel, and to claim that a person is a fit subject for the reception of the Holy Spirit or power while living in disobedience to the holy commands of God is an error as we will here prove. "Jesus answered and said unto him, if a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and and make our abode with him. John 14 : 23. (Mark the phrase, keep my words.) And we are his witnesses to these things and so is also the Holy Ghost whom God has given to all them that obey him." Acts 5 : 32. "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Heb. 5 : 9. "He that saith I know him and keepeth not his commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him." 1 John 2 : 4. Then if baptism is a commandment, (which we all admit) and we keep it not, we are styled a liar, and common sense would say, a liar is not a fit subject for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Hence it becometh us to adhere to the whole counsel of God that we may walk in the light as he is in the light, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, will cleanse us from all sin. More might be said but let this suffice for the time. We hope our friend J. H. of Ohio will also take a lesson from this as he has some good ideas and methinks would not take much to convert him if he is an honest man.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD.

What is Safe and what is not Safe; What is Right and what is not Right.

BY J. H. MOORE.

CHAPTER IV.—Immersion.

It is not questioned whether immersion is right; but are sprinkling and pouring right? this is the question. All admit immersion to be safe, but then are sprinkling and pouring safe? Here is where all the doubts come in. Nobody denies immersion being either right or safe, but all the doubts in the whole matter are in relation to sprinkling and pouring. Immersion we know is right

All are agreed that baptizo * means immersion, but the question to settle is, does it ever mean sprinkling or pouring? Nobody denies it meaning immersion; this much is a fact; this much is settled, we know this is right; but then does it mean sprinkling and pouring? this is not settled this is not admitted to be either right or safe, but it is an exceedingly doubtless position.

It is a settled fact that John did baptize in water, this much is a fact, nobody denies this, but then did he ever baptize out of water? Here is the trouble; here is where all the doubts come in; here is where the disputing is. We know, and it is a settled fact that John baptized where there was much water, but did he ever baptize where there was not much water is the point of doubt. We are certain that it is right to baptize in water, because John did the same, but we have no definite account where either he or any of the apostles ever baptized out of the water. It is then not a question whether those do right who baptize in water, but are those right who do not baptize in water. We know that baptism can be performed in water, but then can it be performed out of water is where all the difficulty comes in.

There are simply two sides to this matter. One is to baptize in the water and the other is to baptize out of the water. It is a very easy matter to find instances in the Testament where persons were baptized in the water, about this there is no difficulty, but all the difficulty has been in trying to find some one who was baptized out of water. It is quite an easy task during the first centuries of the christian era to find persons by the hundreds that were immersed, but all the trouble has been in trying to find some person who had been sprinkled or poured.

Nobody seems to deny immersion being baptism; all seem to know and be certain that immersion is baptism, but all the doubt seems to be about sprinkling and pouring. Everybody knows that immersion is right, and not only right but safe. None are dissatisfied with immersion, but all the trouble is about sprinkling and pouring, in trying to prove that they are right. The position is very doubtful, there is not one particle of safety about it. The world, or only a part of it, has been trying for the last 300 years to prove that sprinkling and pouring are right, but they seem to be losing ground rapidly; let them lose it, we will not occupy it, for the simple reason it is not safe; we will cling to immersion; that we know is safe.

* BAPTIZO is the Greek word used by the sacred writers when speaking of baptism. In the Greek language they have baptizo dipping, rantizo sprinkling, and ches for pouring. When the apostles spoke of baptism they employed baptizo, and when speaking of sprinkling they used rantizo. The two words are never used interchangingly.

AND THEN.

Man of the world, live on in the way you call pleasant. Laugh when fortune smiles on you, bow to the caprices of fashionable surroundings, drink with merry associates, the demon sparkling cup. On with the dance—this world to you is only a theatre of present enjoyments. But ah! remember life is but a passing shadow, all your pleasures are but momentary, your hopes,—your gains —your honors and titles are all fleeting shadows—think of it, death is in your path just ahead! And then, yes, and then, the grave, the cold grave is awaiting you,—and then—and then!—

Woman, one of fashions votaries, how like the butterfly that flits from flower to flower. Thou art jumping from folly to folly, seeking to catch the dazzling beams of vanity that, like meteors, dart hither and thither in the world. Faster, than those fleeting bubbles pass before your eyes, your life is passing. Your smiles of to-day give place to expressions of sorrow and disappointments to-morrow. To day your fashioned disfigured body may be an object of notice to mortal eyes, to-morrow, food for worms that crawl into the prison cell! To-day, in life and health, to-morrow, in death, and then,—and then! The future echoes, and then! Eternity—awful eternity answers in mockings of woe,—and then! The thunderings of God's indignation and wrath replies, and then! AND THEN!—the pangs of hell get hold the soul!!

But ye faithful followers of the "meek and lowly" One, ye chosen of God, soldiers of the cross, pilgrims seeking a better country, "walk by faith," run the race set before you, "fight the fight of faith,"—travel on in the narrow way, though in treading the thorny desert we leave bloody tracks along the way, and a burning sun heat the sweat upon our temples like unto scalding tears, we hope to keep in view the tracks of Jesus, left upon the shores of time, and ever listen to the echoing voice of Him who said "follow me." We can almost feel the lavings of Jordans' waves at our feet, and see beyond the stream, "the land of rest" for weary pilgrims. We will abide our time,—wait 'till we are called to lay our armor by, and then! Yes dear pilgrims, and then,—and then we will cross over by and by, to meet to part no more. To the faithful "and then," is not a terror full or sorrow and despair, but a note of sounding joy. We must sleep in Jesus—and then, comes the glorious resurrection, and then eternal life with God, and then the crown of glory, and then to be like Jesus, and then—Eternity only can tell the rest.

J. S. FLORY.

GOOD BY.

It is a hard word to speak. Some may laugh that it should be, but let them laugh. Icy hearts are never kind. It is a word that has choked many an utterance, and started many a tear. The hand is clasped, the word spoken, we part, and are upon the ocean of time—we go to meet again, God only knows where. It may be soon; it may be never. Take care that your "good-by" be not a cold one—it may be the last one that you can give. Ere you meet your friend again, death's cold hand may have closed his eyes and hushed his lips forever. Ah! he may have died thinking you loved him not.

Again it may be a very long separation. Friends crowd around and give their hand. How do you detect in each good-by the love that lingers there; and how do you bear away with you the memory of those parting words many, many days? We must often separate. Tear not yourself away with a careless boldness that defies all love, but make your last words linger—give the heart its full utterance—and if tears fall, what of it? Tears are not unmanly.—Musical Million.

Try what you can make of the broken fragments of time. Glean up its golden dust; those raspings and parings of precious duration; those leavings of days and remnant of hours which so many sweep out of existence. And thus, if you be a miser of moments, if you be frugal and hoard up odd minutes and half-hours an unexpected holidays, your careful gleanings may eke out a long and useful life, and you may die at last richer in existence than multitudes whose time is all their own.—James Hamilton.

A TRUMPET CALL TO THE WEAK.

BY REV. THEO. L. CUYLER.

The Christian church is not all that it might be in spiritual power and usefulness; and for the simple reason that each individual in it is not all that he might and ought to be. Multitudes in the eternal church are mere weaklings. If alive, they are barely alive. Their pulse is low. Their faith is feeble. Their joys are few. Their assurance is so scanty and scrimped that they can only say, "Well, I hope that I am a Christian. I really think that I was once converted. I hope that I shall be admitted among the rest when my journey is over. It is up-hill work; I often stumble along in the dark. To tell the truth I have very little religion, and the little I have is of very little use to myself or to others."

There are thousands of Christian professors who, if they were to utter their honest convictions, would make substantially such a confession. There is no vigor in their faith, no ring in their prayers, no power in their lives. They manage to float with the current, but have no strength to make head against one. They have never known what it is to be "Strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." A regiment of such Christians would never convert one sinner from the error of his ways. A church entirely composed of such members would not contain "salt" enough to preserve society from putrefaction.

Perhaps this copy of the Messenger may fall into the hands of many who are thus dragging out a weak and unhappy existence. Let me say a frank word or two to such in the spirit of love.

1. You are to be pitied; but none the less to be blamed. Your spiritual condition is entirely your own fault. Whatever your "constitutional infirmities," or however unfavorable may be your situation in life, it is possible for you to be strong, cheerful, useful, effective servant of the Lord Jesus. That you are not one is wholly owing to your own sin. God never made a more complete free agent than you are. He never made more bountiful offers or precious promises to any human being than he has to you. "My grace is sufficient for you" is in your Bible, and was meant for your benefit. If Astor should draw a note in your name for a million of dollars, it would not be a more personal possession than is God's promise to "strengthen you mightily in the inner man." The Creator never made you to be a failure. The Savior never refused to be your intercessor. The Holy Spirit never refused to "work in you mightily." No one in the universe is accountable for your dwarfish condition and almost useless life, but your own sinning self. Admit this, or there is no hope of anything better and brighter in the future.

2. How shall you be strengthened? I answer in two or three words. "IN THE LORD." Paul condenses the answer in that short, simple line he wrote to the people at Ephesus: "Be strengthened in the Lord." A man may be strong in self-will, or strong in intellect, or in business capacity, or in social standing, or in natural enthusiasm, or in many other ways, and yet be a very weak Christian. The sap of his nature all runs off into the limbs of his selfish undertakings. He is not strong in the Lord. His name may even loom large on the roll of the church, but he is worth less to his Lord than the poor seamstress who communes with Christ every day over her needle, and opens her little room for a "cottage prayer-meeting" at night. Her life is hid with Christ in God.

You have been trying to live out of the Lord Jesus. Your reliance has been on some old experience of "conversion many years ago, and on a decently respectable church-membership. There has been but little actual "indwelling of Christ in your heart by faith." Faith is the door; you have barred it up! Faith is the artery of connection with Jesus; you have practically severed it! Having amputated a living, grasping, upholding faith, you had really nothing to hold by and no arm to work with. He who could "do all things" for you has not been asked to do really anything; for having so little faith, you have lived well nigh prayerless!

Before you can ever be a stronger Christian, you must believe it possible to become one. Take Paul's wonderful declaration in the last chapter of his letter to the Philippians—"I have strength for all things in HIM which giveth me power." [This is the literal reading of the verse.] Believe that! Start with that, as James Watt started with the principle of the expansive power of steam. Fairly and fully try the experiment of living in Christ and on Christ. All the sap of your daily being has been drawn off into other things. Now give yourself to Jesus. Cut off the sinful intimacies of your soul, and seek a new intimacy. Seek the inflow of that power which is from on high!

When our college professor of electricity wished to test the power of his electric machine, he used to place a student on an insulated stool with glass legs. The stool was thus cut off from all contact with the rest of the room. As soon as the machine was set in motion the student became charged with the electric current, and if touched, his body gave of the keen bright spark. Now you must insulate your-self from sinful alliances and practices, if you would become filled with the current of heavenly influences. Cut off the world! Cut off favorite sins! They have drained away your life. Open your soul to baptism from on high!

I close with reëchoing the watch-word, "Be strong in the Lord!" Be filled with the Spirit! Resolve on your knees that this shall be the strongest and best year of your life. Make it a bearing year! You ought to outgrow last year's narrow and scanty garments. Along the shores of the sea there are creatures that every year cast off their shell that they may wear a newer and a larger coat of-mail. The eagle sheds his feathers, that with a brighter plumage and a broader pinion he may soar up to meet the sun in his coming. I beseech you then, begin a new life! 'Mount up with wings as eagles!" Try the full power of prayer! Try the full power of HIM in whom dwelleth the fulness of the God-head!

Oh, how many a glorious record
Had the angels of you kept!
Had you done instead of doubted,
Had you run instead of crept!

Religious News.

The Christian Cynosure pitches into H. W. Beecher and the managing Editor of the Union in the following comparative style:

"Oliver Johnston, we are told, is the real managing editor of the Christian Union, while Beecher is editor-in-chief. Mr. Johnston and I were abolition lecturers together in our youth and I loved him as a faithful and fearless friend of the oppressed. He too, like Beecher, has stumbled at the "stumbling stone"—Christ. Mr. Johnston told me at our last interview in the Independent office, that he did not and could not believe that Jesus Christ was conceived by the power of God, or that any miracles recorded of him in the New Testament are facts! And the difference between him and Beecher is, that he tells frankly what he does and what he does not believe, while Beecher has no fixed religious belief whatever; nor, indeed, any moral principle, but could always preach Minie rifles and cannon shot as "means of grace" to slave-holders in Kansas; and, the instant the popular breeze was turning, give a thousand dollars to a Ku-klux College of which the unrepentant arch-traitor Lee was president. Under the teachings of such men

No pledge is sacred and no home is sweet."

MORMON CONFERENCE. — The semi-annual Conference of the Mormons was held last Sunday in Salt Lake City. There were present about 6,000 persons from all parts of the Territory, including 400 or 500 Gentiles as spectators. At the morning services Apostles Taylor and Cannon spoke. The latter thought the prospects of the Mormon Church never were more bright and encouraging. All the powers of the world could not put down the Church and thwart divine design. God's people would reign here. In the afternoon Brigham Young, looking in the best of health, denounced the fashions of the ladies, caricaturing the "Grecian bend" across the platform, much to the amusement of the audience. He expected his people to cling to the old ways. The discourse was disjointed and discursive, but enforcing the assertion that the Mormons were God's people and ought to pay tithing. The attendance was not so large as usual. A number of missionaries are to be sent to foreign parts.

One of our exchanges of the Presbyterian faith give the following as a reason why their people do not object to them going back to the Abrahamic covenant for a proof of infant baptism:

One reason why no opposition is is made in our church to thus going back to Abraham for authority to administer infant baptism is because there is no money to be paid by parents in connection with it. If there were, one half of the Presbyterian Church would join the Baptist.

The Second Adventists of Groton, Vermont, have designated April 12, 1873, as the last great day.

How many more prophets and "ends" are we to have? The credulity of the people in this age of intelligence is a problem unsolvable. The day has passed like all other modern prophetic days and the world yet stands and will stand until God's own time will come "the day and the hour of which no man knoweth."

Six hundred Christian people are said to be still in prison in Japan, persecuted for Christ's sake. But they will soon be set at liberty, we doubt not, as the Japanese Government is seriously set upon reform. Many of these so-called Christians are Jesuits, who, for political, not religious reasons, have been imprisoned.

CHURCH LOTTERIES IN OHIO.—A bill has passed the House of Representatives of Ohio, prohibiting lotteries and gift enterprises of every description. An amendment to exempt churches, newspapers and public libraries from its operations, was voted down decisively.

The Christian Standard reports the accessions to the Disciple Church for last week as follows:

Pennsylvania, 28; Ohio, 45; Indiana 145; Illinois, 135; Iowa, 121; Missouri, 173; Nebraska, 1; Oregon, 30; Kentucky, 57; Texas, 27; North Carolina, 9—Total 791.

Youth's Department

SATURDAY NIGHT.

The supper is over, the hearth is swept,
And in the wood-fire's glow,
The children cluster to hear a tale
Of that time so long ago—

When gradmamma's hair was golden brown
And the warm blood came and went,
O'er the face that could scarce have been sweeter then,
Than now in its rich content.

The face is wrinkled and care-worn now,
And the golden hair is gray;
But the light that shone in the young girl's eyes
Has never gone astray.

And her needles catch the fire's light,
As in and out they go,
With the clicking music that grandma
loves,
Shaping the stocking toe.

And the waking children love it, too,
For they know the stocking song
Brings many a tale to grandma's mind,
Which they shall hear ere long.

But it brings no story of olden time,
To grandmamma's heart to-night—
Only a ditty, quaint and shore,
Is sung by the needles bright.

"Life is a stocking," grandma says,
"and yours is just begun;
But I am knitting the toe of mine,
And my work is almost done.

"With merry hearts we begin to knit,
And the ribbing is almost play,
Some are gay colored, and some are white,
And some are ashen gray.

But most are made of many a hue,
With many a stitch set wrong,
And many a row to be sadly ripped
Ere the whole is fair and strong.

"There are long plain spaces without a break
That in youth are hard to bear;
And many a weary tear is dropped
As we fashion the heel with care.

But the saddest, happiest time is that
We court and yet we shun;
When our Heavenly Father breaks the thread,
And says that our work is done."

The children come to say good night,
With tears in their bright young eyes;
While in grandma's lap, with a broken
thread,
The finished stocking lies.

LITTLE CHILDREN.

Our Savior loves the little ones. When the disciples would have pushed them aside as not worthy of the Master's notice, Jesus rebuked them, and said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of Heaven. And He took them up in His arms and blessed them." At another time they came unto him saying, 'Who is greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; and whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me;" thus setting them as examples for us, and commending them to our love and care.

Precious treasures are these "little ones." Childish and dependent, they wield a mighty influence in the home circle, and in the world. Stern faces are made to smile and sad hearts forget their sorrows in the loving prattle and innocent glee of little children, who, while they weary the arms, cheer the hearts of those whose God-given task it is to tend and rear them. Wicked and hardened men have been melted and won by some loving word spoken in the lisping accents of an infant tongue.

Journeying at a certain time, my attention was attracted to a beautiful babe, on the lap of its mother who was seated just in front of me. The car was crowded, and as the passengers hurried along in quest of seats, the little fellow shrank back with a look of fear and wonder; but as his eye met that of his mother, the troubled look gave place to a smile of peace. The whistle sounded; the cars rolled along; and the hills, the trees and the houses, as he watched them from the window, all seemed to be running away. Every now and then he would turn his wandering gaze to his mother, as if he would ask the meaning of all this strange commotion. But no sooner did he behold her smile than his fears were gone and he laughed and crowed again in innocent glee.

At last, wearied with looking, he nestled his little head on mother's arm and laid himself down to rest. He knew not where he was going; everything was new and strange, but no matter; mother was there; her arm was around him; her loving eye was over him, and he felt as safe as if at home in his own little cradle. His infant heart knew just enough to trust implicitly in mother, and thus he sweetly slept.

Just so our Heavenly Father would have us lean upon His arm and trust in Him. We cannot fathom the mysteries of life's journey; we know not where it may lead us nor when it will end, nor can we foretell what a day or an hour may bring forth. We can neither control the elements which God has created; not overrule the circumstances in which we are placed; nor give a reason for the way that we take; but God knows it all. He sees the end from the beginning. His eye is upon us, and His Almighty Arm is around and underneath the children of God. As "little children," then, let us trustingly, confidingly, rest in His love, "casting all our care upon Him for He careth for us;" and leave Him to mark out our way, and guide and protect us through life's journey, and at last receive us home as "little children" to our Father's house.
—The Christian.

GIVE me the treasures of redemption; my food is manna, and my wine is love; my sweet pillow the bosom of the Son, and my strong defence the arm of the Almighty God; my home that palace eternal in the heaven, where angels' harps supply the music, and, woven of Jesus' righteousness, the robes are fairer than angels wear.

MIRABILE, Mo., March 30, '73.

To those to whom Church news from Missouri is interesting, I will here give a few thoughts in addition to the history of the Brethren here, the formation of Districts, and the report of the first District Council of the North District of Mo.

The attendance at our regular appointments in this North-western portion of Mo., has hitherto been remarkably good as a general rule, but I foresee in the future already at hand that things will in this respect change for the worse, and the reasons for this will undoubtedly be plausible to all, which are these: Our country, like all others of like promising success in agricultural, commercial, as well as mechanical and other worldly pursuits, is improving rapidly, and wealth, pride and popularity are the more and more taking the sway. Popular Christendom is being extended and multiplied. Church-houses are being erected by the various denominations on every hand, whereas three or four years ago school-houses and private dwellings were the common places of meeting for worship. In this respect the Brethren, owing to their scattered condition and limited circumstances, are being left far behind, and that natural disposition of man to be comfortable and popular is manifest in society here and elsewhere, and of course school-houses will be passed by and those new meeting-houses thronged, not so much for choice of doctrine as to be up with the times. Now in view of the above facts, and having a large acquaintance of brethren of "well to do" circumstances in a temporal point of view, and being well acquainted with the brethren of the Hamilton Branch, Daviess Co. Mo., who are soliciting aid in their struggle to overcome the results of the above fate, I would fearlessly say, brethren if you have any means to lend to the Lord, this is a safe depository for your donations. The calls from that Church are promptings and motives of the most ardent zeal and devotedness in the good Master's cause. In this congregation are vested of our greatest and most eminent ministerial powers and energies, and many fruits are conspicuously seen to ripen as the results of the same. These facts I offer not as being myself interested more than others of foreign congregations, nor as being asked to solicit, but rather to encourage such as might be willing to contribute if they were more familiar with the Church at Hamilton. I would here state that they do not mean to build a showy, fashionable house in town, but a plain Brethren's Meeting-house in a newly opened farming community four miles North of town.

Fraternally yours,
C. C. ROOT.

Dear readers of the Pilgrim:—I this evening pen you a few lines stating that we in the Black Water Church, Franklin Co., Va., and adjoining churches were called together to-day to pay the last tribute of respect to one of our beloved old sisters, namely, Hannah Flora, aged 84 years, 3 months and 17 days. She has been a consistent member of the Church for many years, leaves five daughters and three sons, one a minister and elder of the above named Districts. The other two sons are deacons in the Church. Her children left to mourn her loss, no doubt look forward to the day that they shall meet their mother and father in that upper and better world. She also left many grand-children and great-grand-children, and I would say to them and myself, will we and all that know her, endeavor to follow her bright examples as we are drifting speedily to the grave? Remember how kind she was, how faithful, how humble, how plain, how much we loved her. Yes, dear reader I often think how important it is that we should try to imitate our old fathers and mothers as respects our plainness in dress, but we are sorry to say and see that as our fathers and mothers go that that plainness and humbleness goes out with them. This ought not so to be, but we should be a separate and distinct people from the world. But as soon as we become contentious about these things and every one have their own order and cut of dress, we can no more recognize each other but will be with the current of the world. Then our confession is gone. Bear in mind, we all promised to renounce satan and all his pernicious ways, we have put away the old man with his deeds and have put on the new man, so then let us not love the world nor the things that are in the world, for in the world is the lust of the flesh and the pride of life which is not of the Father but of the world and the world will pass away with the lust thereof. Yea, I firmly believe that pride will be the downfall of the Church if not checked. It is rapidly growing and who is to stop it? You who are set as watchman, should warn the brethren and sisters of the danger as respects this matter. We fear it is not done in all congregations. Not to flatter ourselves nor our brethren, but here in old Franklin Co., we have but little trouble in this respect. The brethren and sisters seem to be contending for nothing but the faith that was once delivered to the saints. Oh that we could all see eye to eye and mind the same thing and be governed by the same rule, that is the Gospel. Let us live for Him who died for us so that when our imperfect labors shall end on earth we may cross the Jordan of death to meet those who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. J. BARNHART.

NOTICE TO ALL.

As the Communion season is near at hand, it would be, doubtless, a good plan to have a package of my pamphlets, TRINE IMMERSION, on hand at each Lovefeast throughout the Brotherhood for general circulation. From 25 to 50 copies might be sold at each meeting, thus convincing the world and confirming the Brethren. I insist that some one from each arm of the Church order a package and have them ready till the meeting. From some several hundred letters I select the following: Eld. Jacob Miller, of Va., says, "I think they should be sent far and wide among the Brethren and others." A brother in Ill. who has sold some 40 copies in his neighborhood, says, "They have kicked up quite a dust around here, and perhaps it will yet end in a debate." J. S. Flory of Va., says; "I am anxious that your pamphlet should be widely circulated. It is, in my opinion, just the right thing in the right place at the right time." For terms see my advertisement on the last page of the PILGRIM. J. H. MOORE.

TO THE BEREAVED.

My dear brethren and sisters:—I feel, this beautiful Sabbath morning, like saying something to you through the columns of this good paper. Among the many thoughts my mind was drawn upwards to that blissful abode where all those that love and serve God those that have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb have gone, and are waiting for their friends to come and join in the throng to sing the loud ha lelujahs for ever and ever.

I have near and dear friends gone before whom I hope to meet there when done toiling here below, yes, among the happy throng I have one dear little grand-son whom I saw laid in the silent tomb a few days ago. Dear little Charlie, he was too sweet for earth and Jesus said come up higher. The dear parents are almost heart broken to see their only darling boy suffer and be taken from them so soon after the Lord gave it to them, but dear parents, I would say to you in your great bereavement. I know it was hard for you and for me and hard for any parents to bid farewell to their dear sweet little ones, but the Savior says, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." I know it has touched a very tender chord and has severed a tie of nature that cannot soon be forgotten. Oh yes, I would have loved to have seen sweet little Charlie one time more but when I arrived the dear heart broken mother met me in the yard weeping very bitterly, saying, "Oh, mother, my darling is gone." Yes, dear mother, you can go to him but he can never come to you. I hope you will set about the work without delay and never give it up 'till you have found peace at the feet of a crucified Redeemer. I hope you are both saying in your hearts, "This is done of the Lord for our good and we are determined to try, by the help of God, to meet our dear little Charlie up yonder in that better world, where there is no more sickness, no more sorrow pain nor death, and where parting is no more." Yes, strive to meet your little one there in that Heaven above. Dear children, I would say to you, try to live in that way and manner that you may raise the little ones that you have left in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Grieve no longer for little Charlie, but weep for yourselves, and say with good old Job, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

"Only a little baby,
Gone to its heavenly rest;
Only a little lamb,
Safe on the Savior's breast.

Only a little angel,
Amid the hosts above;
Only another little voice,
Singing, God is love."

THE MAINE MISSION.

As there is a call for the publication of Elder Daniel Longenecker's report of the Maine Mission also, we will now give it, believing it may now be in place, as the District Conference is near at hand and the Mission question will likely receive some attention. Ed.

Dear Pilgrim:—As there has been an article sent to the press I will only give a sketch of a few points that may be of interest to some of your many readers.

When we came to the place where we intended to commence our labors we were kindly received. After handing in our letter of recomendation we were conveyed to a friend near a Church where we remained during the night. Next morning (Sunday Oct., 3.) we were taken to an appointment made for a Freewill Baptist, but as he did not come we were introduced to a friend who introduced us to the congregation as ministers of the Gospel from Penna., and desired us to take the stand, which we did and preached for the first time in the State of Maine. From there, we were taken to Elder Dennis and held meeting in his house. Here we got privilege to hold meetings in dwelling houses at night, and during the day we attended to calls for visits believing that visiting would accomplish as much good as preaching, giving us the privilege of speaking face to face, answer and ask questions, and expound the Scriptures as believed and taught by the Brethren, laboring to be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves. We reasoned together in Christian faith and love without giving offence and thus became as familiar as if we were one of the family. Being invited, we went from house to house. On our arrival we were always kindly received by the mistress, invited in and recognized as messengers of glad tidings—treated with respect, politeness and hospitality. In the morning the Bible was placed on the stand and liberty was given to read and pray, the family all being present at seasons of worship.

After preaching we gave liberty to all who felt to give testimony to what had been said, and one of the ministers and his wife and a deacon and his wife stood up in the congregation and gave testimony to the word as presented. Almost every night some gave testimony to what had been said, bidding us God speed and praying that we might have souls for our hire.

There are three kind of Baptists or immersionists here. The Freewill, Calvanistic and Adventists, and in order to introduce the truth as we believe it, it was necessary to show the difference between them and ourselves or the Brethren. * * * [Here is given an exposition of order and practice which we omit for want of space, Ed.] We had many pleasant seasons with this people both in preaching and private conversation, but to give all that was preached and said would be impossible.

DIED.

BILLINGS.—In Botany District, Pattawattamie Co., Iowa, April 3, '73, G. C. Billings, of Consumption.

He was confined to his bed from the 29th of May 1872. Towards his last, he became reconciled and desired to be immersed, but was so weak that it was not administered. What a warning this should be to all, not to put off our duty until it may be too late. God can just as suddenly call us all, as He can cast us on the bed of affliction, and may not have the opportunity to prepare as our friend Billings had. His hopes seemed to be bright before him. He had a desire to go but O, how dangerous it is to neglect our best interests until our last. He requested his funeral discourse to be preached by the writer, which was done to a very attentive congregation from these words, "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." Heb. 9 : 27.

H. H. FOLCK.

AINSWORTH.—In the Manor Church, Md., March 30, Mary Lizzie, daughter of brother Wm., and sister Louisa Ainsworth, aged 14 years, 5 months and 15 days. Funeral services by the Brethren

We wish to inform our young readers of a death that occurred in our neighborhood lately which makes us feel very sad. A little girl has been taken from our midst that was much admired by all who knew her for her amiability and lovely disposition. We see in the departure of little Mary Lizzie, that death is no respecter of persons. If beauty and lovliness could have bribed him then she would not have died. But this could not be done, all the sympathies of friends and admirers could not avail.

"So fades the lovely blooming flower,
Frail, smiling solace of an hour;
So soon our transient comforts fly,
And pleasure only blooms to die."

CURRENT EVENTS.

One among the outrages of the times was that of members of congress voting into their own pockets thousands of dollars, thus robbing from honest laboring men to get means to play the harlot with. We are glad to see that those who favored the acts with those who are willing to touch the pilfered gains, have brought upon themselves a stigma of reproach which ought to forever debar them from receiving another position of trust from the people. We are commanded to pray for our rulers, but our prayer is that we may have as few of such as possible.

The hanging of Foster, the carbook murderer, is another event that has been and is yet commanding considerable comment, not on account of the greatness of the culprit, but the circumstances connected with his imprisonment and execution. Notwithstanding the crime was one of the darkest hue and unprovoked, yet every conceivable effort was made to save him from the affixed penalty of the law. One of the pleas was, because he was drunk, just as if drunkenness was a virtue and that a man was more than justified in it. In addition to the privileges of a common citizen, he is allowed to make a fiend of himself and slay his fellow man at pleasure. When the American people once pays a premium on drunkenness then will every man's life be in his neighbor's hands. Notwithstanding he never showed any fruits of repentance during his imprisonment, yet several prominent ministers made a saint of him and followed him up with their empty prayers even on the scaffold, and there prayed so long that it became necessary for the executioners to stop them. He was as dead and unconscious of their empty petitions as the noose that was placed around his neck. We are to pray for sinners that they may be saved from their sins, but to pray for an unborn, unregenerated sinner to have him saved in his sins, is an outrage on our holy religion.

We do not say that there is no mercy for such if truly penitent, but these popular, clerical preliminaries might all be ended in the culprits cell and thus avoid the hypocritical sham which is now played off on the scaffold, to be seen of men.

Another event, and a sad one too, just now presents itself to our mind, we mean the loss of the Atlantic and the fate of a large portion of her crew. We can almost see the hopeful crew get aboard the vessel which is considered altogether safe. The embarking a ship is an important event and often cuts asunder the dearest ties that unite loving hearts together. The morning in Liverpool was fair and promising, and as hopeful ones gathered to the port, many a greeting was given and farewell tear shed. Fathers and mothers took leave of their children, brothers and sisters gave the parting hand, tenderly and hopefully were they entrusted into the bosom of the mighty ship with the expectation that it would carry them over the turbulent waves and land them safely on the shores of American freedom, but how vain are human expectations, instead of this, it carried them to a watery grave. This truly is a world of destruction and there is no refuge that will secure us from the grim monster death. We are all aboard the ship of life and every moment is rapidly wafting us down, down towards the rock of destruction and unless we have our "Life Boat" prepared we will be hopelessly lost. Jesus has prepared an ark for us that will outride every storm and land us safely on the other shore. Brother, sister, how is it with us? Dear sinner, how is it with you? Have you entered that ark? If not, you are in danger of being shipwrecked every moment and your fate may be far worse than those of the ill-fated Atlantic, you will be engulfed into the whirlpool of destruction and sunk into the eternal burnings.

LOVEFEAST.

The time for holding our spring Lovefeast is approaching, notices of which are coming in from every direction. These are seasons that exert a happy influence throughout the brotherhood and should be regarded as means of grace for which we should feel truly grateful indeed as it is declared that unless we eat His body and drink His blood we have no life in us. It is by participating in these feasts our inward man becomes renewed in strength day by day. Here it is where kindred spirits meet and partake of the living emblems of our blessed Lord and thus have our hungering and fainting souls filled with the "Bread of life" and our thirsting spirits quenched with the "Living Waters." Here it is that many of us have met for the first time as adopted children of God and formed attachments which will only end in death to be renewed in heaven. Truly such are blessed occasions and we hope, at the coming feasts, many will have the pleasure of partaking of the emblems of Jesus that a year ago were strangers and aliens to the commonwealth of Israel.

As these are times when brethren and sisters meet from far and near they afford very excellent opportunities of introducing and distributing the PILGRIM. For this purpose we will send to any of our readers who desire to labor for us as many sample copies as they can use to advantage. Will not our agents send for some and continue their efforts in enlarging our circulation? With specimen copies and a little effort 10 or 15 names might be raised at each meeting. We can still supply back numbers or subscriptions may commence at any time and run a year or from April 1st to end of year $1.10. Brethren and sisters, let us hear from you as we are assured there are many who would read the PILGRIM had they an opportunity.

The Old Man In The Stylish Church.

SELECTED BY N. THAPP.

Well wife, I've been to church to-day—been to a stylish one—
And seein' you can't go from home, I'll tell you what was done;
You would have been surprised to see what I saw to-day;
The sisters were fixed up so fine they hardly bowed to pray.

I had on these coarse clothes of mine, not much the worse for wear,
But then they knew I wasn't one that they called a millionare;
So they led the old man to a seat away back by the door;
'Twas bookless and uncushioned— a "reserved seat ' for the poor.

Pretty soon in came a stranger with gold ring and clothing fine;
They led him to a cushioned seat far in advance of mine.
I thought that wasn't exactly right to seat him up so near
When he was young, and I was old, and very hard to hear.

But, then, there's no accountin' for what some people do;
The finest clothing nowadays oft gets the finest pew.
But when we reach the blessed home, all
undefiled by sin,
We'll see wealth beggin' at the gate while poverty goes in.

I couldn't hear the sermon, I sat so far away.
So, through the hours of service, I could only "watch and pray;"
Then the doins' of the Christians sitting near me round about—
Pray that God would make them pure within as they were pure without.

While I sat there, lookin' all around upon the rich and great,
I kept thinking of the rich man and the beggar at his gate;
How, by all but dogs forsaken, the poor
beggar's form grew cold,
And the angel bore his spirit to the mansions built of gold:

How, at last the rich man perished, and his spirit took its flight
From the purple and fine linen to the home of endless night;
There he learned, as he stood gazin' at the beggar in the sky,
"It isn't all of life to live; nor all of death to die."

I doubt not there were wealthy sires in that religious fold
Who went up from their dwellin's like the Pharisees of old;
Then returned home from their worship
with a head uplifted high,
To spurn the hungry from their door with naught to satisfy.

Out! out with such professions, they are doin' more to-day
To stop the weary sinner from the Gospel's shinin' way
Than all the books of infidels, than all that has been tried
Since Christ was born at Bethlehem—since
Christ was crucified.

How simple are the works of God, and yet
how very grand!
The shells in ocean caverns, the flowers on the land,
He gilds the clouds of evenin' with the gold
right from his throne,
Not for the rich man only—not for the poor alone.

Then why should man look down on man because of lack of gold?
Why seat him in the poorest pew because his clothes are old?
A heart with noble motives—a heart that God has blest—
May be beatin' heaven's music neath that faded coat and vest.

I'm old—I may be childish—but I love
simplicity,
I love to see it shinin' in a Christian piety.
Jesus told us in his sermons in Judea's mountain's wild,
He that wants to go to heaven must be like a little child.

Our heads are growin' gray, dear wife; our hearts are beatin' slow;
In a little while the Master will call for us to go.
When we reach the pearly gateways, and look in with joyful eyes,
We'll see no stylish worship in the temple of the skies.—Sunday Republic.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE SAINT'S LEGACY.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you.—John 14: 27.

Who was better qualified and authorized to leave such a legacy than the Savior? An angel was despatched from Heaven to Shepherds, and subsequently joined by a multitude of the Heavenly host praising God, saying, "Glory to God in the highest," and announcing on earth "peace, good will toward men." Hence He is called the Prince of peace, His word the glad tidings of peace, His ministers the messengers of peace, and His Kingdom the kingdom of peace. Let us for a moment consider under what circumstances our Master uttered His parting legacy. To His disciples he said, "Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye seek me, and as I said unto the Jews, whither I go ye cannot come so now I say unto you." This evidently occasioned gloomy thoughts, and they began to be troubled. But now He says encouragingly, "Let not your hearts be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you." While He was thus preparing them with the sad intelligence of His death, He leaves them this legacy, "peace I leave with you." This verily was a part of His last will and testament. Lands, houses, goods and silver and gold He had none; as a stranger He sojourned here, and had not where to lay His head, but such as He had He gave them. Why does He bestow it in the manner He did? First, to make it dearer to them, and second, to make it surer. It was the remembrance of their dying Lord and Savior. Anything left by a dying friend is dear and cherished, and considered of almost inestimable value. Second, to render it sure. If it be but a man's will and is confirmed, no man can disannul it, but here it is the Lord's testament, and every thing concurs to establish confidence. The will is written, witnessed and sealed. The testator dies, for the testament is of no force while the testator lives. The executor is true and honest, and will see all punctually fulfilled. This is His executor, "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name He shall teach you all things, and bring all to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." Though He Himself bequeathed peace at His death to His disciples personally, it is still not confined to them. In receiving this assurance, they stood as the representatives of all His people, to the end of time. If we love and follow Him, we are as much included in the bequeathment as if we were mentioned by name. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." We consider a legacy of earthly possessions very valuable, because it secures us a home while abiding here. But what is it in comparison with the legacy left by our Savior? If we have no peace of mind what are we? All the earthly possessions will not make us happy. Remorse of conscience and despair will seize hold on us, and will render us miserable and wretched beyond description. Earth is full of sorrows and Heaven cannot heal them. Why is this? Because we do not avail ourselves of the Savior's legacy. We do not love Him sufficiently "to observe all things whatsoever He has commanded us;" and to such only who obey Him in all things is His peace promised. If in possession of that legacy, we look from earth to Heaven,—have our meditations there, though prone to wander, yet that spirit of adoption with all our infirmities enables us to cry, "Abba Father." We have that consolation within ourselves, though the world hate us, God is our friend our hope and our refuge, and when the earthly curtains are drawn across our eyes, and all the noise and tumult are shut from our ears, it is then only to behold the effulgent glory beyond this vale of tears, and to hear the welcome plaudit and invitation, "Well done, thou faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Then it is that we shall realize the final and glorious inheritance which the Savior has prepared for us. Hear Him once again. "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away and come again unto you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." O, the blessed assurance of the Savior's company in the trying hour of death! "I will come again." To conduct us to the mansions in the skies. "Yea" saith the Lord. Welcome, thrice welcome, Lord, speak, thy servant heareth.

THROUGH PASSENGERS.—People in the Church are like passengers in the cars. It is easy to see that some are through passengers; they have fixed for the journey, and are quite composed and resolved. They never leave the train because others leave. They intend "to finish their course." They know before they start of the trussels, tunnels, dangers and expenses, and count the cost of all. Others only set out for Gain Station or Popularity depot, and never go quite to Costello.

"THE LAYING ON OF HANDS."

The above is one of the prominent features of the doctrine of revealed religion; unhappily however, it has like many other of its tenets grown almost extinct in modern christendom. We purpose in the fear of the Lord, to hold forth in this essay, the doctrine of the above subject as portrayed in the Word of Divine Truth. We shall notice it under the following heads; viz., first, when initiated. Second its design. Third its perpetuation Fourth, its objections.

1 When instituted. We find no occasion of its practice until after Pentecost. It is true, the Savior laid His hands on diseased persons at different times, thus restoring them to health, but as a religious rite, it was never in vogue until the apostles were fully qualified for the work. The first instance recorded under our notice, is Acts 6th chapter, where the Apostles called seven persons to their assistance in the labors of the church, "whom they set before the apostles and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them."

2. Its design which is two-fold. First, with a view to receive the Holy Ghost. We have in 8th chapter of Acts narrated the event of Samaria's receiving the word through Philip's preaching, who it seems baptized converts, but omitted the laying on of hands (either for want of qualification or omission of duty.) "But when they at Jerusalem heard these glad tidings, they sent unto them Peter and John, who when they were come down prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost, for as yet he had fallen on none of them only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then they laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost." A second instance setting forth the design of this ordinance, is seen in the 19th chapter of Acts, where Paul found "certain disciples who it seems had been baptized as they supposed unto John's baptism, but had not so much as learned that there was any Holy Ghost. Paul preached Christ to them and when they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands on them the Holy Ghost came on them." We have now given two instances which clearly proves the fact that the laying on of hands was observed with a view to impart the Holy Ghost. Kind reader, have you been baptized? If so, have you had the hands of the administrator laid upon you in connection with prayer? If not the work is deficient, and we urge upon you in harmony with the example above, to send for those who are qualified to complete the work.

A second design of the laying on of hands, was to set persons apart for an especial work. This was the case in the 6th chapter of Acts alluded to above. Those seven persons were chosen and set apart to aid the apostles in their labor. Again Acts 13 chapter affords us with one more evidence of the above truth, where we observe that there "Were certain prophets and teachers at Antioch, who administered unto the Lord; and while they fasted, the Holy Ghost said; separate me Barnabas and Saul to the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, they laid their hands on them and then sent them away." Paul had preached before, but he had never been set apart, never been fully qualified for his mission, until prayer, fasting and the laying on of hands was observed; then they (Barnabas and Paul), went forth fully qualified for their mission. We now have given two evidences showing the second design of the laying on of hands, and the Savior tells that "In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established."

We have in the above, in part, sustained our third point, i. e., its perpetuation. But under this head we wish especial attention given to the thought that the apostles, as we see above, practiced it in the first stages of their labors. Paul was subject to its observance and, in turn, like the faithful became teacher of the same doctrine. In 2d Timothy 1, 6, he remarks. "I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the Gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." Here we learn the fact that Timothy was subject to the imposition of hands by Paul. And in 1 Timothy, 4: 14, he tells Timothy "Not to neglect the gift that is in thee by the putting on of the hands of the presbytery." Also 1 Timothy 5: 22, "Lay hands suddenly on no man," but as he elsewhere remarks, "Let them first be proven." Many churches have suffered much by not heeding the connected thought of the last two quotations. Laying hands suddenly on those in the church who are not proven is not commendable We remember some years since of seeing a letter in some of our periodicals from the West, warning brethren against the evil of "laying hands suddenly on brethren for the Eldership, who were not proven, but were mere novices." It is certain that many congregations have suffered much, from a want on the part of those who have the care of the church. All evils are contageous let them prevail in any rank in religious society they will: but when it exists in the official department of the Church, the evil is greatly augmented; hence we see the propriety of the apostle so minutely setting forth the character of Elders or Bishops and Deacons. In Hebrews 6th chapter, the apostle takes occasion to to enumerate several christian duties, and among them is that of the "Laying on of hands." From the above testimonies we think it evident, that the 'Laying on of hands" was perpetual. Imposition or the laying on of hands was an ancient and venerable rite used in the primitive church on several occasions, particularly in ordination, in absolution of penitents, in healing the sick, in conferring the gifts of the Holy Ghost." Burkit. Buck also sanctions the above historical statement.

Lastly, we come to notice the objection, a prominent one of which is, that the laying on of hands was practiced by the apostles in the day of miracles, and as the day of miracles has ceased the laying on of hands should cease also. To this objection we would simply remark that if all was to cease that originated in the day of miracles our holy religion would be included. The imparting of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands is no miracle, although not unlike many other religious duties, originated and was performed in the day of miracles. We would call the attention of the reader to the fact that we baptize "for the remission of sins," by which the evil inhabitant is driven out, "the house is empty swept and garnished. Now in turn as a next step we observe "the laying on of hands," by which the holy occupant is invited in. In the above we fail to see, which of the two steps are the most miraculous, they are both important attainments, to which we arrive by a simple train of obedience. In the second place our opponents remark that "The laying on of hands" was observed with a view to impart the gifts of tongues. "Wherefore tongues are for a sign not to them that believe but to them that believe not."—1 Cor. 14: 22. Here we have the object of the gift of tongues clearly stated. It is true we have one instance, in which the gift of tongues followed the gift of the Holy Ghost, which was consequent to the laying on of hands, Acts 19: 9. And two instances in which it followed the miraculous gift or descent of the Holy Ghost, Acts 2: 4, and 10: 46, but that the gift of tongues was not the uniform result of the laying on of hands is evident; neither had they a promise to that effect. It is further to be observed that the gift of tongues always followed and never preceded the reception of the Holy Ghost, for it is quite conclusive that no one was fully impowered to the work of miracles until their conversion was matured.

A third objection we are called upon to notice is, that "the laying on of hands" originated and ceased with the apostles. This is a mere assertion; and assertions in the absence of proof either pro or con avail nothing. We have seen in the above that the apostles (direct of the Savior) practiced it. Paul, "who was not taught of man, neither did he receive it of man, but by revelation," not only was subject to it but pressed it upon the Hebrews; and in his dying words urged Timothy not to neglect it.

It is true as we remarked above, it origioated in the Apostles time and not in the Savior's, simply because we only had the promise of the Holy Ghost or comforter, after the Savior's departure.

We have noticed its origin, design, perpetration and its urgent command to be perpetuated; and are wholly unable to find even a hint of its having ceased. In conclusion "to the law and to the testimony if they speak not according to this word it is because they have no light in them."

GOVERNMENT AND POLITICAL STRIFE.

Man has a King and a government already provided him; with a code of laws comprehending every emergency. This King is God himself, whether represented by Christ or the Father. He said to man, "I will be thy King" Hosea—13: 11. We are bound to accept him, and consequently to reject everything which stands opposed to him. "Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man," Eccles.—12: 13. This is the standard or rule of man's duty. Everything else must be in subordination, nothing to conflict. No opposing laws are required to complete our duty. All should be simplified in harmony with this. "And the government shall be upon his shoulder: and he shall be called—The Prince of Peace." Isa.—9: 6. All this was conferred on Christ. He was and is the Supreme Lawgiver of the whole human family, notwithstanding all the prevailing opposing influences. These can never change the duty of man. When government requires us to kill our fellowmen, God commands "Thou shalt not kill." The vengeance of the Almighty to the amount of seven-fold was incurred on any who might kill the murderer Cain. Man was never allowed to have an earthly king until he refused and rejected God. Then God gave him one in his anger. "I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath." Hosea—13: 11. They had their choice, but not without the woeful consequences. They would lose their "goodliest young men" and much of their valuable possessions by rejecting God as their King, as seen in 1 Sam.—8. God frequently gives men up to destruction when they wilfully persist in an evil course. In like manner the young man was told to rejoice in his course. "Rejoice, O, young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." Eccl.—11: 9. But those who truly appreciate Christ "The Prince of Peace" and wish for the happy consequences will seek to obey his Word rather than the commandments of men. It will afford them the safest protection. But to trust in man as a lawgiver is always attended with danger when his laws are not in subordination to the higher law. When government is prepossessed of or assumes the power to take human life, we term it a war government. This is not in subordination to God, and for this reason dangerous to vote under such a government for any purpose however proper or good, in itself considered when liable to involve political strife. To attempt to force men from the use or sale of strong drink or from any other evil by making laws to be enforced under a war system, might tend to lay the foundation of rebellion as truly as the efforts to abolish slavery did. This is no visionary idea, it has been proved by sad experience. Many men of good intentions in former years, by taking an active part in seeking by their right of suffrage to eradicate slavery from the land while under a military government, laid the temptation to yield to the war system to accomplish their purpose, and it resulted in one of the most horrid and bloody butcheries the country ever witnessed. When we know what has passed, how can we venture again in such a broad way leading to destruction? We earnestly caution and entreat all those who do not want another bloody rebellion to shun the first steps toward such a calamity. "It is an honor to cease from strife." Prov.—20: 3. "Leave off contention before it be meddled with" 17: 14. Cease to vote or to take any active part in war government. Were the principles of warfare or human butchery totally eradicated from government, it might be safe to co-operate in political affairs in projecting any reform. But while it is not, it is quite unsafe and inconsistent for the followers of the "Prince of Peace." We think it proper for all true friends of peace to hold on to the peace principle and avoid taking any part in what may lead to carnal war. We should shun the place of political suffrage as truly as we should the house of "the young wanton," fearing the end might be deplorable. "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death." Prov.—7: 27. So is every place where the elementary principles of war originate. It is political strife in making laws, then of putting them in force. The next step is frequently attended with human butchery. But the only proper way is to seek to God for help and obey his Word according to Eccl.—12: 13.

CHRIST THE RISEN SAVIOR.

"Now is Christ risen from the dead."

Thus the inhabitants of many cities and countres were appealed to, and the enemies of Christianity were challenged to disprove their pretensions, but none ever attempted to do it for the Jews themselves do not deny that many extraordinary works were performed by Jesus and his disciples, and the way in which they try to account for them is, that from the first their ancestors had nothing to object. In this manner the witnesses and proofs of our Lord's resurrection were multiplied in almost every part of the vast Roman empire, yea, God also bare them witness both in signs and wonders and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost. And can any man suppose that a general belief could ever have prevailed through whole nations of such public and extraordinary events without any person attempting to deny them, if they had not actually happened, and been so notorious as to be incontrovertible. The chosen witnesses of our Lord's resurrection were likewise the principal writers of the New Testament, and the whole was doubtless written under their inspections. Now in these books prophecies are inserted which have been fulfilling ever since to the present day. "The people shall be led away captive into all nations and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Has not this been actually the case with the Jews and with Jerusalem during eighteen hundred years? Could human sagacity have foreseen such an unparalleled series of events, or would God have thus confirmed the testimony of imposters, and does not this prophecy thus wonderfully accomplished, demonstrate the resurrection of Christ and the truth of Christianity?

The coming of the man of sin with lying, miracles, doctrines of demons worshipping of angels, prohibitions of marriage and commands to abstain from meat, the impositions, usurpations and persecutions of the Roman antichrist with various other particulars were most exactly and circumstantially predicted by the several witnesses of our Lord's resurrection, and the accomplishment of these prophecies are many divine attestation of their testimony for the satisfaction of all succeeding generations.

The Jewish ritual or the Pagan theology was intimately connected with the foundation of the several governments then existing in the world and all the learning, ingenuity and authority on earth were engaged in their support, yet a few unarmed, obscure, unlettered men, by preaching a crucified and risen Savior in the midst of persecution and sufferings, established Christianity on an immovable basis and their successors following their example, so wonderfully prevailed that at length Judaism and Paganism fell before them, and the religion of Jesus was professed by many nations, and however corrupted or despised, it subsists to this day. Whatever men may insinuate concerning the ministers of religion, it is an undenied fact that plain preaching, fervent prayer, holy lives and patient sufferings were the only weapons that the primitive preachers of the Gospel, used to oppose all the authority and learning of the world which were resolutely implanted against them and yet they decidedly triumphed in a contest apparently so unequal. As wise men will always allow that every effect is produced by some adequate cause, but what adequate cause can be assigned unless we allow that Christianity was of God, and men could not overthrow it.

We may now, I trust, confidently say that no other past event was ever proved by such a body of evidence. Who doubts whether Alexander conquered Darius, yet who can produce the tenth part of the proof in respect of this event which hath even at this time been stated of our Lord's resurrection? But men can believe that Alaxander conquered Darius without either parting with their sins or feeling uneasiness of conscience while the truth of the gospel is very alarming to all who walk according to the course of the world and neglect the salvation of Christ. It would be the grossest inconsistency and the most absurd trifling to contend earnestly that Christ is risen, and then overlook or deny the peculiar doctrines which His resurrection was intended to authenticate. We infer therefore from our subject that Jesus is indeed the Son of God. On account of various expressions which He used in speaking of Himself, He was charged with blasphemy and with making Himself equal with God. For this crime He was condemned by Caiaphas and the Jewish council who said before the Roman governor, "We have a law and by our law he ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God." The Centurion who attended His crucifixion could not but know for what crime He suffered, when therefore he witnessed the miracles which accompanied His death, he cried, "Truly He was a righteous person, truly this was the Son of God." When incredulous Thomas was at length, convinced that Christ was risen, from all that he had before heard, seen, believed or hoped, seems at once to have rushed into his mind and he exclaimed in adoration, "My Lord and my God." Thus was Jesus declared to be the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead. He was demonstrated to be the promised Messiah, the seed of the woman, the seed of Abraham, the son of David, Emanuel, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, Jehovah our righteousness, and whatever the prophets, from the beginning had spoken concerning the expected glorious Redeemer. All that had been spoken of Himself was likewise thus fully proven to be true. It now was manifest that He was warranted to say, "I and the Father are one." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father. Before Abraham was, I am. I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh to the Father but by me. No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son shall reveal Him. I am the light of the world, I am the resurrection and the life, if any man thirst let him come unto me and drink. The Father judgeth no man but hath committed all judgment to the Son, that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father that sent Him. In short, the resurrection of Christ not only demonstrates the truth of Christianity, but the infallible certainty of all its doctrines, and authenticates the whole Scripture as divinely inspired. His testimony proves it in respect of the Old Testament and the new was written by His chosen witnesses and attested by all the miracles which they wrought in His name.

EDITORIAL. FROM PAGE 135

Our space is unusually crowded this week and a number of items left out that we intended for insertion, Money List, Obituaries, Correspondence and Editorial. We call special attention to "Laying on of Hands." In it are suggested of ideas of vital importance to the Church and demands a prayerful consideration. Next week will appear "The origin of the Anxious Bench, by Eld. D. P. Sayles."

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD.

What is Safe and what is not Safe; What is Right and what is not Right.

BY J. H. MOORE.

CHAP. V.—Infant Baptism.

Many people ransack the New Testament from beginning to end to find where some infant was baptized, and when they find none, instead of returning to the ark like Noah's dove, they imagine some in somebody's family. They had an idea before they looked that such things were to be found, and when they find themselves disappointed they will not remain so, but imagine that neither Lydia nor the Jailor could have families without children. They can imagine a host of things, but it seems an utter impossibility for them to imagine that all their children could have been grown up at that time. Such people can imagine a multitude of things; they can even see or seem to see all the waters of Jordan all dried up from the beginning to the end; they can even imagine that over one million of people could live, from year to year, in the city of Jerusalem where there was not even water enough to immerse a few thousand persons; they can imagine that the Eunench was so forgetful, that he came all the way from Ethiopia to Jerusalem, and even forgot to put a cup of some kind in his chariot to drink out of, and consequently had to climb down out of the chariot into the water and get his feet all wet, just to have Philip sprinkle a little water on his head, all because he forgot to put a cup in the wagon. You may tell such people that baptism is for the remission of sins, and they will tell you that there is not one particle of virtue in baptism, and that it has nothing to do with the salvation of anybody; then they will turn right round and have their children baptized, as though the harmless little things could not be saved without it. They can imagine the thief on the cross as being perfectly safe without being baptized, but cannot bear the idea of sending their children to the grave without baptism, as though the sinless creatures were worse than the thief.

There is not one single instance in the Testament showing that infants were baptized, but adults were baptized by the thousands. It is then not a question whether adult baptism is right, but is infant baptism right? here is the turning point. We are commanded to baptize believers and not unbelievers; children cannot believe, hence to baptize them would be to baptize unbelievers. Children cannot believe, and furthermore God does not require it of them; they are not sinners, from the fact there is no law for them to transgress. They do not need baptism, they are perfectly safe without it,

We propose to hold to the baptism of penitent believers, those who know the Lord, who love and are willing to obey him. This much we know is right, nobody disputes it; all the dispute is about infant baptism. This is not right, but we know that adult baptism is. All the doubting and disputing to be found in the whole matter is about infant baptism, not one word is heard against adult baptism. Everybody admits this to be both safe and right. Nobody denies adult baptism being either right or safe—all the fuss is about infant baptism, about the baptism of penitent believers there is no uncertainty, this we know is safe grounds, hence we will occupy this, and this only.

OPPORTUNITIES are everywhere running to waste, like the rich golden fruit of the overburdened orchard. They are not confined to any particular locality. In running after them, we are the more certainly running away from them. They who do not, without delay, seek an interest in the salvation offered in the Scriptures, and secure an heirship to heaven, are madly running away from the most valuable opportunities, and losing the highest priviliges to which any can attain. Reader embrace this golden opportunity of becoming a christian. —A. B. Brumbaugh.

HEAVEN and earth, with all castles of kings and emperors, could not make a dwelling place for God, but in the man that keeps his word there he will dwell.

Isaiah calls the heavens his throne and the earth his footstool, but not his abode. We may search long to find where God is, but we shall find him in those who hear the words of Christ.

For the Lord Christ saith, "If any man love me, he will keep my words and we will make our abode with him."—Luther.

As the tempest tossed mariner hails with joy the rent in the cloud through which he sees the light blue sky, so the sin tossed soul that feels the rocky reefs of destruction nigh beholds the "cleft" in the "Rock of Ages" and with faith and hope flees hither for safety.—J. S. Flory.

A THIEF, coming to rob a house, said, "I dare not, there is a light in it." God grant that we may have the light of grace burning in our hearts as the best preservative against our spiritual enemies.—Hill.

Religious News.

C. H. SPURGEON of the London Tabernacle, it is said, is offered $50,000 to deliver fifty lectures in the United States, but the report is, he has declined the offer.

Henry Ward Beecher has nearly completed the second volume of the "Life of Christ." He is said to have become heartily tired of his work, having found it much more of a task than he had anticipated. Cynics intimate that he lacks sympathy with his subject.

THE Roman Catholics of the Canton of St. Gall, have adopted a new style of arguments against the Old Catholics. A number of young women have resolved that they will not dance with any young men who incline to the new heresy of denying the infallibility of the Pope. This must be to the young men worse than excommunication by the Pope.

THE sale of the pews in Mr. Hepworth's new church in New York City, on Monday, resulted very satisfactorily, the bidding being higher than generally anticipated. The first choice of the $1,200 pews was taken at $1,000, and the premiums varied from this sum to a few dollars for the cheaper pews. Among the principal bidders were Judge Hilton, Mr. Sniffin, the builder, and Mr. Anthony, who purchased from four to twelve pews each. The gross sum realized at the sale from the 347 pews was not far from $250,000.

LOSS OF THE ATLANTIC.—It is now currently reported that the loss of the Atlantic is laid to the charge of drunkenness. When we tell you that for the first months of the year there were totally lost, five hundred and eighty-six vessels you will conclude that to sail on the ocean is extremely dangerous but when the fact is established that three-fourths of all these disasters are the result of drunkenness it will be admitted that intemperance has more to do with it than the ocean. This demon is not only the curse of the seas but thousands and millions have been shipwrecked by it on dry land.

THE POPE'S ILLNESS.—The Catholic Church seems to be under a cloud of sorrow on account of the dangerous illness of Pope Pius IX. From latest accounts there seems to be no hopes for his recovery. Last May he passed his four score years. He stands high in the estimation of the Church and has passed through a number of trying ordeals the severest of which was when Victor Emanuel relieved him of his temporal power. The Cardinals now living are nearly all at Rome with the expectation of a speedy election of another Pope after the death of Pius IX.

MORMANISM.—Brigham Young the living wonder of the age has resigned some of his positions of secular affairs, with the intention of retiring somewhat from active duties He is now seventy-two years of age and is represented as being a shrewd business man and immensely rich. The railroad and telegraph, he looks upon as his greatest enemies and are filling Salt Lake the capital of his kingdom and the Mormon Paradise, with a Gentile element, that is very uncongenial to his way of thinking and it is now currently reported that he with a large body of his followers will strike for Arizona and there build up another city out of the reach of railroads, telegraphs and civilization.

SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED.—Rev. P. McCarthy, a Universalist clergyman stated at the meeting of a Radical club in Philadelphia, the other day, that he had fully and carefully investigated the subject of spiritualism, had attended in London more than five hundred spiritual seances, and was therefore, justified in saying that there are no grounds for the belief that disembodied spirits ever visit this mundane sphere to move furniture or do other such work. He had, himself, often sat at the table at which the immortal Shakespeare had kept up a conversation, the effect of which was to surprise the speaker that there was so much falling off in the beauty of diction of Shakespeare's conversation when compared with the writings of the poet while in the flesh.

THE INDIAN POLICY.—It is a well known fact that the Quakers, time and again, requested the government to give them charge of the Indians of our frontiers with the hope of naturalizing them according to their "peace principles," but there were so many money leeches around Washington that it did not seem expedient. The result is, the Indian policy has been a miserable failure as far as Indians and peace is concerned but a grand success to those sent, in the way of realizing fortunes. At a late interview, General Canby and Dr. Thomas were deliberately murdered as the outgrowth of the miserable no policy that always characterized the dealings with the Indians. That peace policy which alone can subdue the wild and savage passions of the red man, if wisely administered, is now condemned and to be abandoned, the canon and extermination to be substituted. This is one of the modern blunders as the "peace policy," can never be condemned until fully tested by peace men, as peace never thrives well behind bristling bayonets and the sword.

COTTAGE BY THE SEA.

BY J. B. THOMAS.

Childhood days now pass before me,
Forms and scenes of long ago.
Like a dream they hover o'er me,
Calm and bright as evening glow.
Days that know no shade of sorrow,
There my young heart pure and free,
Joyful hailed each coming morrow,
In the cottage by the sea.

CHORUS.—In the cottage by the sea,
In the cottage by the sea,
Joyful hailed each coming morrow
In the cottage by the sea.

Fancy sees the rose-tree twining
Round the old and rustic door,
And below the white beach shining,
Where I gathered shells of yore,
Hears my mother's gentle warning,
As she took me on her knee;
And I feel again life's morning,
In the cottage by the sea.

What though years have rolled above me,
Though mid fairer scenes I roam,
Yet I ne'er shall cease to love thee,
Childhood's dear and happy home!
And when life's long day is closing,
Oh! how pleasant it would be,
On some faithful heart reposing
In the cottage by the sea.

KIND WORDS.

When I was quite young I learned the value of kindness. Previous to this I considered it as but a duty to be performed by men and women only, to each other. As an example of this, I supposed if a person were sick, her neighbor should sit by her and talk in such a manner as not to be rude; or if a person were sad or had trouble, his neighbor should sympathize with him.

I was nine years old when we moved to a village where we knew no one. The first woman with whom we got acquainted with was one of those persons who deem their neighbors inferior to themselves. Accordingly we (our family) had formed an opinion of each person in the place, from what she had told us. This person was rough in her manners; another kept an unclean house; Mrs. C. wasn't accommodating at all.

At school I did not like the appearance of my schoomates. I chose one of these as my friend in all things. At no time was I so happy as when in Ella's company. This was in June, and there were many flowers in a slough near a schoolhouse, that we used to gather after school.

One day when Ella took her dinner to school she wanted me to ask her mother if she might go with me after flowers that day. What! ask that woman who walks past with her head so high, and looks so hateful! At last I said I would. After dinner I went to her.

"Mrs. Ferris, please may Ella go with me for flowers after school?"

"Yes, most certainly she may," she answered, pleasantly.

Dear friends, have you any idea how I felt as I went to school? I told mother of her gentle reply. From that time until now I never have paid any attention to slander; and ever after Mrs. Ferris and my mother were firm friends.—Young Folk's Rural.

BE HONEST CHILDREN.

I suppose some of the little boys who read this will say, when they look at the title of the peace, "That's easy enough; I am honest; I never took anything that did not belong to me in my life." Well, that is right; but there is more in being truly honest, perhaps than you think. I will tell you a story, and then you will understand me.

In a country school—the school of which I am teacher—a large class was standing to spell. In the lesson there was a very "hard word" as boys say. But I put the word to the scholar at the head and he missed it. I passed it to the next, and the next, and so on through the class, till it came to the last scholar, the smallest of the class, and he spelled it right at least I understood him so, and he went to the head, above seventeen boys and girls all older than himself. I then turned and wrote the word on the blackboard, so that they might all see how it was spelled. But no sooner had I written it than the little boy at the head cried out, "O, I didn't say so Miss W———. I said e instead of i!" and he went back to the foot of his class, of his own accord, quicker than he had gone to the head. Was he not an honest boy? I should have always thought he spelled it right, if he had not told me; but he was too honest to take any credit that did not belong to him.

SIX SHORT HINTS FOR THE YOUNG.

1. Never neglect daily private prayer; and when you pray, remember that God is present, and that He hears your prayers. (1 John 5: 15.)

2. Never neglect daily private Bible-reading; and when you read, remember that God is speaking to you, and that you are to believe and act upon what He says. All backsliding begins with the neglect of these two rules. (John 5: 39.)

3. Never let a day pass without doing something for Jesus. Every morning reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask yourself, "What am I doing for Him?" Matt. 5: 13–16.)

4. If you ever are in doubt as to a thing being right or wrong, go to your room, and consider whether you can do it in the name of Jesus, and ask God's blessing upon it. (Col. 3: 17.) If you cannot do this it is wrong. (Rom. 14: 23.)

5. Never take your Christianity from Christians, or argue, because such and such people do so and so, that, therefore, you may. (2 Cor. 10: 12.) You are to ask yourself, "How would the Lord have me act?" Follow Him. (John 10: 27.)

6. Never trust your feelings, or the opinions of men, if they contradict God's Word. If authorities are pleaded, still "Let God be true, but every man a liar." (Rom. 3: 4.)

"Renew my will from day to day;
Blend it with Thine, and take away
All that now makes it hard to say,
Thy will be done."

HARD TIMES.

Dear Pilgrim:—Hard times is the general cry with everybody and I have been made to wonder whether any one has considered why times are hard. Every thing is a good price wages are good but all cry, hard times, and why? Now let each one think for themselves. Perhaps we have spent money for that which was neither good for the soul nor body, then it must have been ill spent, and done us harm, and made times harder with us, but the hardest is not yet come. We perhaps, have spent money for things that are abominable for we are likely to spend for that which is pleasing to the eye and we are told that which is pleasing to the eye is an abomination in the sight of God, and what seems to be the most pleasing to the eye at the present time? I suppose all will admit it is that of dress. Now when we are decorating our bodies with those abominable fashions which are uncalled for we are doing something that is neither good for cold or heat and even uncomfortable and causes us to cry out hard times. Ah how much better could we have spent those hours that we spent in making ourselves abominable in the sight of God, had we been in our closets or some lonely place asking God to feed and clothe our bodies with the necessaries of life and to feed our souls with the heavenly food. How lamentable it is to think of the time when we will have to appear before the judgement seat with all those abominations staring us in the face, and will be made to cry out for the rocks and mountains to fall upon us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne. Is it not enough to make the heart of stone burst into tears when we reflect that those abominations which we now have upon us will banish us from the presence of God and heaven's eternal happiness, and cast us down into a dismal hell, and in its indiscribable torments. Then we can only look back and say, I done it myself, I had no need of doing it, I seen others that did not have those abomioations on and they stood as high in society as I did. What folly. Things have caused us hard times in this world, and may cause us much harder in the next. Let all conclude to follow the meek and lowly Jesus so that we may have a hope of striking glad hands on the sunny banks of eternal deliverance.

WM. MALLORY.

Carterville, Va.

Dear Reader:—Out of a feeling of love I pen a few lines for the PILGRIM on the subject of pride which I think is one of the growing evils of the Church. Do we ever think back and remember what we promised at the water-side in our baptismal covenant before God and a large congregation of brethren, sisters and friends? We there promised to renounce satan, all sinful practices and ungodly lusts, and how many of us are doing so today? I fear the number is alarmingly small. Why is it that our garments must be cut after the fashion of the world, our hair worn after the latest style and many other little things, and some big ones that is not in accordance with the order of the Church and the spirit of the Gospel.

We say we are not proud yet we wear, desire and have about us those unnecessary and forbidden things. No matter what we may say, it is pride or we would not have them about us. It is either on account of a lusting after such things or a fear that the world will laugh at our plainness.

A few words to our sisters. Do you leave off these small things which generally lead to large ones if not guarded against. How often do we see our sisters with an unnecessary amount of ribbons and edging on their apparel, which is to be modest, some without caps and their fingers loaded with rings. Be careful, these things are not of God but of the world. Let us all be on our guard and see that we live out a profession and remain true to the covenant we have made.

WEVERTON, }
April 14th, 1873. }

Dear Mr. Editor:—I take the earliest opportunity to acknowledge your very welcome paper. My object is to improve the occasion some, and to exchange ideas. I see you have some professional Christians among your contributors, but one thing I can say, they have not gone so far as I have. I notice one on "Consistency." Man cannot love God unless he first obeys his law. The gift of the Holy Ghost come by prayer. Prayer itself is satfaction or the evidence of faith, after this the law of God, the commandments, and the law of Jesus Christ. God requires a practical acknowledgment. Without this you are not subject to his consideration. You are supposed to be an enemy of God without this absolute submissioo. The tree of Knowledge in the Garden of Eden was the foundation of law. Without law man would not be perfect. We see where man is by this disregard of God's command. Every man is a free moral agent. He must submit to God's will or perish. His punishment is hell fire. The law of God means what it says. Figures of speech is not wise unless it explains itself. It will do in conversation but it will not do as a law to hand down to man. The world could not do without science but keep it away from God's word. If God's law is not made to meet the intelligence of man it is no law. Christ says, "man must not be ashamed to confess me. He that does not live up to the commands of God makes a compromise and perverts the walks of God. It is hard to give up this world when we do not see anything in return, consequently the necessity of faith. I see people having more than their brethren. Some with great riches. Who are they? They are not God's people, they are generally people that control. God help them. Their reward is on earth. They are loud in faith to God but every act proves them to be servants of satan. All the world must go to destruction for want of some one brave and honorable enough to serve his Master. So long as it will not touch our pockets or interrupt the pleasures of this life it is all right, but where are those three hundred thousand souls that have passed away and what causes all the persecution and misery on the earth? The church must kneel to Baal's god and no one dare shoulder the cross and say that Christ is king. I do not wish to complain. We are brothers. Christ must be acknowledged king. Man is the temple of God. If so, can he be destroyed at the pleasure of man? No, God controls all to the glory and honor of his name. The day shall come when they will murder you and think they do God's service. This world is an enemy to God. Heaven is the home of the Christian. When man can see in this manner then and not till then, will he not love the things of this life.

GEO. S. BINGHAM.

SHIPPENSBURG, PA. }
April 19, '73. }

Dear Pilgrim:—On the morning of the 8th inst., I in company with brother P. P. B., started for Shippensburg, Cumberland Co., Pa. The morning was a beautiful one; winter like a sliding car seemed to be taking its departure, and in its place approaching the ever welcome Spring. The general animation observable by all nature, and the apparent appreciation of God's goodness, gave enchantment to every view, and as we went dashing through valleys, forests, tunnels, towns, and along rivers, we saw much to please and entertain. On, on, we went and in a short time we were at McVeytown Station. Here we had but time to take the hand of our much esteemed Eld. Joseph R. Hanawalt who informed us that he had buried two of his children, and that several more were not expected to live. This intelligence, and the sadness depicted in the countenance of our brother made us feel that this world is truthfully a mixture of grief and sorrow. While some hearts throb with joy, others are sad; the opening bud of the inverted year brings to some a bitter cup, and many are the prayers, "If it be thy will, let it pass by." Bro. Joseph is naturally fond of children, and this affliction will wound him severely. There are but few who will form the acquaintance of a family of children, and gain their confidence and respect like brother Hanawalt. When a boy it was a happy time when he came to visit us, and well do I remember those few words that touched my heart, and aided me in enlisting in the service of Jesus.

About noon we arrived at Harrisburg and in a short time we were off for Shippensburg, but as brother P. P. B. had some business in Mechanicsburg, we stopped there. While here we called upon Bro. Burkholder, and another brother whose name we cannot now remember. Both are in business, and from appearance there is not the least probability that there business is driving them. We arrived at Shippensburg in the evening and then wended our way to the place where I expect to make my home for a few months. I will stop with David Newcomer who resides about one hundred yards from the State Normal School at Shippensburg. As the school was not to open until next Monday and having a desire to visit some in the vicinity of Waynesboro, we passed on to that place. Here we were met by our friend Anson Good, whose acquaintance I formed at the Millersville Normal last winter. We were glad to meet him, and his kindness, shown toward us will be long remembered. Our visit to his home was a pleasant one indeed. We also met and formed the acquaintance of Bro. J. Zook, Jr. He is teaching in the Waynesboro School and appears to be pursuing his calling with energy and zeal. Bro. Zook is a graduate of the State Normal School at Millersville and has not only what is comprehended in the science of education but education as an art, and consequently prepared for teaching. We hope that the church at no far distant period will feel that it needs such brethren to labor in its own limits and that it will give them an opportunity to work. We also met Bro. D. B. Mentzer and a number of others with whom we had been acquainted for some time, and feel indebted to all for the kindness shown toward us.

On Sabbath we had the pleasure of attending the Brethren's Sabbath School which was being organized. The brethren at the helm seem to be in earnest, and they will, no doubt have an interesting Sabbath School. On Monday morning we returned to Shippensburg and on Tuesday attended the opening exercises of the school. The examinatioos for classification commenced early in the morning and continued until noon. In the afternoon a number of addresses were given to a very large audience. This School building is said to be one of the finest Normal buildings in the State and has every appearance for a grand success. It opened out with 300 students, and there are now perhaps nearly four hundred. This week was spent principally in classifying and it will be a few days yet before things will be in good working order.

In conclusion, I will say to the brethren, my object in going to school is not to make a display of education but to enable me more fully to discharge the duties that are devolving upon me in the position in which I am now placed, and the advantages to be derived from it when lawfully used.

J. B. B.

BLACKSBURG, VA. }
April, 16, 1873 }

Dear Bros. Brumbaugh: — In chronicling the death of friend Etzler (see obituary) and the circumstances which preceded it seem to justify more than ordinary publicity.

About six years since he had the first stroke of paralysis. Three years later he had the second stroke, both on the right side, from which he never fully recovered. This is the third year since, and he and his friends had presentiments that this would be his last. He lived near Christiansburg, the county seat of this county, about 15 miles from this place, and as his wife's relations lived in this vicinity, they had a great desire to visit them before the expected summons came. Accordingly they set out on Saturday the 12th. He was enjoying usual health and was in a pleasant and cheerful mood. About 3 o'clock, p. m., when within a few hundred yards of our house he was smitten with the third stroke in the left side. His wife held him in the buggy till she drove to the gate when he was carried into the house and laid on the bed. His friends and relations were notified of the sad affair and came promptly to our aid and everything that affection could suggest was applied to effect his restoration but all was vain. Fifty hours after he was brought into the house his spirit departed from the earthly tenement. The funeral services were performed here at 11 o'clock of the 15th by Rev. W. Gardiner of the Methodist church, assisted by the brethren. The text of his discourse was the interrogators of Job. "If a man die shall he live again?" He spoke very impressively, assuming the affirmative as regards believers, and the negative as regards unbelievers. He was followed by Bro. A. Crumpacker, who, in his usual forcible style, testified that those things were true and abundantly proved from the Scriptures the verities of eternal life for the righteous and eternal death for the wicked. A large concourse of sympathizing friends were present and a deep solemnity pervaded the assembly. He was then buried in the graveyard one mile distant. He was a consistent member of the Methodist church for about fifty years. This sad event adds another to the numerous admonitions to be always ready for death. Without a moments warning he was an unconscious paralytic. We are equally liable to the same swift agency. His lonely widow is left childless to descend the western slope of life, and it was sorrowful indeed to see her return from the grave to the house of a stranger and gather up his hat and clothing and finish her journey alone without the pleasant company of her devoted husband. May she realize the comforting truth that the Christian's God is the especial protector of the widow, and, reposing her confidence in his promises, receive that strength and consolation that is the unfailing heritage of all the faithful.

D. C. MOOMAW.

Notice to Brethren and Sisters Going to A. M.

I, to-day made arrangements with the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. company, and with its branches, from Baltimore to Washington, Weaverton to Hagerstown, Harpersferry to Harrisonburg, and Grafton to Parkersburg for half fare. No farther West however than Wheeling, friend Cole having no authority to control the division west of the Ohio river in such matters.

The conditions are the same as they were on former occasions on this road. Those going will start where they choose and pay their full fare to Cumberland, asking no questions, as agents along the line know nothing at all about it, and of course can give no information. At the place of meeting I will furnish all who apply and have complied with the conditions, with a certificate which will pass them to the place of starting free of charge.

If some one would, or could arrange with some line west of the Ohio river to connect these arrangments at Wheeling or Bellair, this would be the route for all west, and south of west to take. And whereas the B. & O. R. R. Co. has never refused to grant the brethren half fare privileges, while the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Co. has rarely, if ever granted it, I think the brethren are in duty bound to consider it. Last year they refused to abate one cent of my full fare going and coming, while the Pittsburg & Conellsville road, through the brethren, sent me, by telegraph, a pass to return free over the road.

P. S. I am already furnished with the return certificates.

DIED.

GARVER.—In Germany Valley, Anghwick Congregation, Huntingdon county, Pa., March 25, '73. Bruce J., only son of B. F. and Sallie E. Garver, aged 1 year, 4 months and 5 days. Funeral services by Eld. John Spanogle.

Farewell dear Bruce, a long farewell,
For we shall meet no more
'Till we are raised with thee to dwell,
On Zion's happy shore.

The blooming cheek, the sparkling eye,
The form once brisk and gay,
Must now within the church-yard lie
Though you be far away.

His childish voice you'll hear no more,
No, no, 'tis silent here;
But it has joined the Heavenly choir,
In strains more sweet and clear.

The grass will each returning Spring,
Wave o'er his lowly bed;
And sweet song-birds his requiem sing,
For little Bruce is dead.

ANNIE M. BRIGHTEL.

MILLER.—In the Beaver Creek Congregation, near Bridgewater, Rockingham Co., Va., March 31st, '73, brother Joseph Miller, aged 49 years.

His sickness was of short duration, he leaves a sorrowing companion, (a sister), and 7 children, and a large connection of friends and relations to mourn their loss, but we hope their loss is his eternal gain. He was a good husband, a good neighbor and a good citizen and prominent brother, —was beloved by all who knew him. His remains were taken to Beaver Creek on the 2d of April, where the occasion was improved by brother Solomon Garber and others from Rev. 14: 13-14

MILLER.—In the same congregation; near Sangersville, Augusta Co., April 11, '73, sister Christina Miller, aged 80 years, consort of Abraham Miller dece'd.

She leaves a large connection of children and grand, and great grand children, and sympathizing friends and relations which are scattered through different States. She was confined to her bed for several weeks. A few weeks prior to her death she called for the Elders and was annointed in the name of the Lord. She desired to be absent from the body and be present with the Lord. Her life was one that is worthy of imitation. On her death bed she selected the 598th hymn to be sung at her funeral. Occasion improved by brother Geo. Wine and others, from Rev. 14: 13. S. N. WINE.

BOCK.—In the Dry Creek Congregation, Linn Co., Iowa, April 12, '73, sister Mary, oldest daughter of brother Samuel, and sister Catharine Bock, aged 19 years, 5 months and 23 days.

The subject of the above notice contracted a severe cold some time during last Summer, which produced that dreadful scourge of the human family, consumption. In November she had to quit work, and from that time she gradually wasted away and became weaker to the last. One week previous to her death, she was taken down into the watery grave and there buried with Christ in baptism. On Sunday her remains were followed to the grave by an immense concourse of people. Funeral services by the brethren from 1 Peter, 1: 24: 25.

JACOB BOCK.

NOFFSINGER.—In the Lower Miami Church, Montgomery Co., Ohio, April 12, '73, sister Mary Noffsinger, aged 80 years, and 3 months. Funeral occasion improved by the brethren from 2 Tim. 4: 6 7-8.

She was a member of the Church for many years, and truly a mother in Israel. During her affliction she called for the Elders of the Church and was annointed with oil in the name of the Lord. She bore her affliction with christian fortitude,—was submissive to the will of the Lord, and waited patiently for the change, having this hope that being absent from the body she would be present with the Lord.

DANIEL BOCK.

SHOWALTER.—In the James Creek Congregation, Huntingon Co., Pa., April 15, '73, sister Jane, wife of brother Frederick Showalter, aged 33 years.——Funeral services by the editors, Eld. Geo., and H. B. Brumbaugh, to a large and sympathizing congregation.

The death of our sister was unexpected and her sickness of short duration. In the morning she was as well as usual, at about 9 o'clock A. M., she took convulsions and continued to have one after another until death released her sufferings which occurred in the evening of the same day. Truly, in the midst of life death is at the door.

GOUGHNOUR.—In the Desmoins Valley church, Iowa, our much beloved sister Mary Goughnour, April 11, '71, aged 73 years, 2 months and 19 days. Funeral discourse improved by the brethren.

She was a much beloved sister, had been a very exemplary member of the church for many years. She leaves a large circle of friends and acquaintances to mourn their loss, but her eternal gain. G. R. BAKER.

(Companion, please copy.)

TETWILER.—In the Clover Creek congregation, near Williamsburg, Pa., April 10, '73, sister Maggie, wife of brother Andrew Tetwiler, age between 31 and 32 years. She leaves a sorrowing husband and three small children to mourn their loss. Funeral by the brethren from Rev. 14: 13. JOS. S. SNOWBERGER.

ETZLER.—At the residence of the writer Montgomery county Va., on the 14, ult. Mr. John Etzler, of Paralysis, in the 67, year of life. Funeral services by Rev. W. Gardiner, assisted by the brethren.

MEMORIAL.

Seldom were we called upon to receive so sad an intelligence as that of the departure of our departed sister, wife of Bro. F. Showalter. It seems only a few years since we saw them setting out on life's uneven journey together having pledged to each other to live together for their mutual good. Sister Jane was a woman of fair intelligence and her first thought seemed to be to set her house in order and devote herself and time to the service of the Lord. This she done as a wise master builder, by digging deep and making the foundation sure, building alone on Christ the Rock of Ages.

After a few years of struggling with the stern realities of life, and they had secured for themselves a place which while on earth we call home. Beside them were growing up two little branches, Ida and Effie, which seemed to complete their ideal of home on earth. They, no doubt, often looked forward into the then promising future with lively expectations—but what are human expectations! They are as the morning vapor or the dew that clings to the tender blade for a moment and then passes away. God had given them, and in His wisdom He saw good to take them away. About two years ago and the happy jubilant little spirits were taken home and their bodies tenderly conveyed to the grave over which God has now spread his mantle of green. This was a sad bereavement to the fond parents and made a wound which nothing but the hope of a reunion in heaven could heal. Again God has called and mother is taken home to meet her loved ones on the "Shining shore" beyond the stream of death. The expectant family, on this side, is now small, only a bereft father and a motherless little daughter. According to the ties of nature this seems hard but we would have our brother know that it was the hand of the Lord and that he doeth all things well. First the cloud, then the storm, then the rain, then the calm and then, thank God, the sun comes forth in all its loveliness. So it will be with you, brother, and so it will be with us all if we love Jesus and abide our time. Our days are numbered and one after another of us will be called to lay our armor by and go to our reward, therefore it behooves us all not so much to mourn for the sainted dead as for ourselves and our children.

Sister Showalter lived as we have reason to believe she died, a faithful servant of Jesus and for her we have a lively hope. She ever lived true to the profession she made and was loved and respected by those with whom she associated, and in the family circle and church her presence will be greatly missed, but our consolation is that our loss will be her great gain.

JAMES CREEK.

As before announced we have appointed meeting for over Sunday prior to our District Meeting and invite some of the brethren to stop with us. Those stopping will take the "Broad Top" road at Huntingdon and get a ticket for Marklesburg. By coming this way it will cost something over a dollar less and not more than 12 miles further to walk. It will be across a mountain but there is a good pike and also a hack from the morning train. Had arrangements been made for all delegates to pass over the "Broad Top" road, which would have been cheaper and better, we could have received excursion tickets. Those stopping at James Creek can take, at Huntingdon, either the morning or evening train. The morning train connects with the Pa. Central and the evening with the Pacific Express. We will be glad to hear from those who intend to stop with us.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

ATTEMPT TO KILL FATHER GAVAZZI.—The Swiss Times, of a recent date, says that when Father Gavazzi was preaching on the suppression of religious corporations, two men, one of them a taylor from Faenz, thirty years of age, and the other a Roman student, eighteen years of age, were discovered in the act of firing a large bombshell, full of iron and powder, on the door of the Evangelical chapel, in Via del Corallo. The two miscreants, taken in the act by the guards of the Questura, were arrested before they could accomplish their infernal design. It was, indeed, most fortunate that the bomb did not explode, or it must have caused great damage, the room being full of people. The arrested men were immediately given up to the Procuratore del Re, to whom also was delivered the sequestered bomb. The above-mentioned student had been arrested once before for injury to the arms of Savoy, for having taken part in a demonstration on the death of a Pontifical gendarme.

An Indiana Sunday-school man writes to a Bible firm in New York: "Send me on some Sunday-school papers and books. Let the books be about pirates and Indians as far as possible."

This is a joke; but the query comes in whether much of the reading which is already furnished to the children does not foster a taste for something stronger in the shape of pirates and Indians?

ONE STEP MORE.

"A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps." Prov 19: 9.

What, though before me it is dark,
Too dark for one to see?
I ask but light for one step more,
'Tis quite enough for me.

Each little humble step I take,
The gloom clears from the next;
So, though 'tis very dark beyond,
I never am perplexed.

And if sometimes the mist hangs close,
So close I fear to stray,
Patient, I wait a little while,
And soon it clears away.

I would not see my further path,
For mercy veils it so;
My present steps might harder be,
Did I the future know.

It may be that my path is rough,
Thorny and hard and steep;
And knowing this, my strength might fail
Through fear and terror deep.

It may be that it winds along
A smooth and flowery way;
But, seeing this, I might despise
The journey of to-day.

Perhaps my fate is very short,
My journey nearly done;
And I might tremble at the thought
Of ending it so soon.

Or, if I saw a weary length
Of road that I must wend,
Fainting, I'd think, "my feeble powers
Will fail me ere the end."

And so I do not wish to see
My journey or its length;
Assured that, through my Father's love,
Each step will bring its strength.

Thus, step by step, I onward go,
Not looking far before;
Trusting that I shall always have Light for just "one step more."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

ORIGIN OF THE ANXIOUS, OR MOURNER'S BENCH.

Dear Editors and Brethren:—It becoming known that I was making efforts to ascertain the origin of the "Mourners, or Anxious Bench," I have been strongly solicited and urged by many brethren to have it published as soon as I found it; some nameing one, and some another one of our papers, &c. I have at last found it in the LIFE AND LABORS OF JAMES QUINN, BY JOHN F. WRIGHT. Although the work was published in 1851, it is nevertheless out of print, and I had a long and tedious time before I procured a copy in a second-hand book store in Baltimore. And whereas our brethren, and many thousand of our readers are not overmuch concerned in procuring biographies of Methodist preachers, I will, for their information, give the historical extract, and that all may know it, I will write a copy for the Visitor, one for the Companion, and one for the PILGRIM.

"This year (1838), he (Rev. James Quinn,) frequently invited penitent souls to the seats vacated for their accommodation, that they might have the advantage of the instruction of himself and others, and receive the concentrated sympathy, solicitude, and prayers of such as had access to the throne of grace, and influence at the court of heaven. About this time the question was agitated as to the distinguished individual who first introduced the practice of inviting penitent persons to the mourner's bench. Hear Mr. Quinn on this subject:

"Something has been said, in a late number of the Christian Advocate and Journal, on the subject of inviting mourners to the vacated seats or railing around the communion table—for I dislike the term altar, or altar for prayer on such occasions. A Jew or Catholic may use the term consistently with his faith on the subject of altar and sacrafice, but an enlightened Protestant believers, where he thinks, speaks, sings or worships, extends his views beyond temples made with hands. But to return. The writer (in the paper referred to) seems to think that L. Dow first introduced the practice in 1802–3; but the first I (Quinn) ever saw or heard of it was in 1795 or 6 at a watch night held at the house of that mother in our Israel, the widow Mary Henthorn, near Uniontown, Pa. The person who conducted the meeting was that holy, heavenly minded man, the Rev. Valentine Cook—blessed man; In imagination I view him now, near or quite six feet in stature, quite stoop shouldered, dark complexion, coarse, black, bushy hair, not much taken care of, small, deep set black eyes and full of the fire of intelligence, strong, well arched brows, high cheek-bones, and an unusually large mouth. He was not handsome; but when he conversed on the subject of religion—and it was almost his constant theme—and more especially when he preached, there was a sweet and almost heavenly benignity beaming in his countenance, presenting rather an unearthly attraction. It was next to impossible for the heedless to remain uninterested under the sound of his voice. Mr. Cook's subject was the qualification, duties, and awful responsibilities of the watchman. His sermon was close and argumentative, giving to the greedy and sleepy dogs, as the prophet styles the avaricious and slothful watchmen or ministers, their portion observing, as he passed along that those who were the least laborious were often the most clamorous for their worldly gain. The sermon was closed with an almost overwhelming exhortation, which appeared as it must carry all before it. Then came the invitation to the mourners to come to the vacated seats to be prayed with and for. I think this was new, perfectly new for the people appeared panic stricken; and I confess I was greatly moved, for it appeared to me as if the two world's were coming together. Verily, methought the very hairs of my flesh stood up. He, however was very particular in giving the scriptural character of a true penitent, and, in the most affectionate and convincing manner, invited such, and none but such, to come; alleging at the same time, that if any should dare to act as did Ananias and his wife, they might be met as these were. O, it was an awful yet glorious time of the precious power and presence of God! Several souls found peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and some obtained the blessing of perfect love. But brother Cook, and most of those who united with him in that meeting have passed away; yet have they a more distinct recollection of what then and there took place than the old man, who by the forbearance of God, lives to write about it. Since that time I have heard many inviting mourners to the place prepared for the purpose—have not always been suited, have often attempted it myself, and frequently failed; and it does appear to me that a combination of time, place, persons, talents, etc., must concur; otherwise, not only no good, but some harm may be the result of a misguided and premature effort. We may have seen, as well as read of sparks of our own kindling."

My dear brethren the above is all I can find written on this subject; and I feel assured that a general knowledge of the origin of this man made idol will do more to overthrow this BAAL than all the essays, treaties, or tracts we can write on the subject. Mr. Quinn was admitted into the itinerant ministry of the M. E. Church, May 1st, 1799, and served in it till 1847 when he died after 48 years service, and hence he knows whereof he affirms. It appears that Cook the originator was very cautious what class of mourners he at first invited, and it does not appear that the plan was generally adopted. Mr. Quinn writing of camp meetings in 1804–6 says: "There were no altars, no mourner's benches, or anxious seats, in those days, nor were any invitations given to seekers of salvation to present themselves for the prayers of the Church."

By the minute description Quinn gives of V. Cook a physiognomist will declare him one of the most violent fanatics, full of electricity, and competent of the wildest freaks of a fanatic. This is the man who is the creator of the Mourner's Bench, which Mr. Quinn said was new, "perfectly new," and at its birth "panic struck the people," and made the very hair on his flesh stand up, is now the idol of the day, and has assumed such popularity in certain quarters that to say aught against it stirs up the fires of hell, and woe to the man who dare stand in its range. Well brethren, I am the man that will stand before the hottest fire, and will not be afraid to open my mouth against it, (if the editors are not afraid to print it.) Valentine Cook being the creator of it, and is its god, and his spirit is the spirit of it, and they who are born by it, or under its influence are born of Cook, and not of God. This being so, is there any wonder its converts are what we see and know them to be. From this idolatry good Lord deliver the people. Amen.

THE CHURCH AND DUTIES OF HER MEMBERS.—No. 4.

BY J. S. FLORY.

ELDERS.

The word Elder, Bishop, Overseer and Presbyter seem to have a synonymous meaning. The same persons that are called Elders are called Overseers. For proof we refer to Acts 20th chapter and 17th to 29th verse, where we learn Paul sent to Ephesus and called the Elders of the church, and when they had come he spoke to them,and among other things said, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves and unto all the flock,overwhich the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Also that the same persons that are called Elders are spoken of as Bishops. See Titus 1 : 5, 7. "For this cause left I thee in Crete that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain Elders in every city,as I had appointed thee ; if any be blameless * * * * * for a Bishop must be blameless, &c., &c. And those who were empowered to attend to the rite of laying on of hands are denominated by Paul as constituting the Presbytery. 1 Tim. 4 : 14. It were the Apostles and probably teachers and prophets, (Acts 13 : 1, 2, 3,) who were enforced,therefore they were Presbyters.

Without stopping farther to speak about the name we will pass on to the duties of those who hold the chief office in the Church under our great head Jesus Christ. The station in the Church being the highest, the duties are the most weighty and the considerations and responsibilities are indeed of a solemn nature. The minister who is only required to preach the Word, be instant in season and out of season, does not feel that weight of responsibility that hangs over him who has to keep a vigilant oversight over the flock entrusted to his charge. As they are to be examples to the flock, it is no wonder the Apostle requires such a high standard of qualifications. Hear him, "a Bishop must be blameless." The husband of one wife, having faithful children not accused of riot or unruly. Yes, "blameless as the steward of God ; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker,not given to filthy lucre, but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men. sober, just, holy, temperate ; holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." Can dust attain to such a standard? Only through the power of the Holy Ghost. The nearer the character of the Elder or Bishop comes up to those qualifications the more successful he will be in his calling. He, as one that constitutes in a great measure, the head of the congregation or flock over which he presides, yields a wonderful influence for good or for evil. In this age of worldlymindedness and disposition to depart from the simplicity of the Gospel, the overseers have indeed a mountain of opposition to face. They cannot be idle and do their duty. Think of it—the word of truth to preach to a perishing world, infidelity in every conceivable phase to meet, wolves in sheep's clothing prowling for admittance into the fold to keep at bay ; within the fold,troubles and contentions often to quell, the flock to feed, to cherish and encourage. And this too it is expected, must be done in the spirit of love,humility and forbearance ; however not such forbearance that will permit members to indulge in things of a nature calculated to foster pride and a departure from the narrow way and simplicity of the Gospel. In such cases it is the duty of the Elders in particular to admonish the parties to a sense of their duty in such a way as will more likely insure the desired end. Right here at this point much might be said,as it is one of the most important in the whole course of Church government. To nip the "appearance of evil" in the bud so as to accomplish a good work requires that we "be wise as serpents and harmless as doves." To lord it over God's heritage will, by no means do. An iron rule which has "must" and "shall" for bands to bind and force members to duty we have but little faith in. Forced religion is unknown in God's covenant of grace. There is a way to proceed in such cases where members have deviated from the path of duty and broken their vows to some extent, that we seldom see fail. First let them feel we are deeply concerned about their soul's interest, by our words of love and tender sympathy, and next stir up within them, if possible, a spirit of penitence and desire to please God, impress upon their minds that those matters are such that tend to their eternal interest and that if they expect God to forgive them they should freely ask forgiveness of the Church, or if individual cases, ask forgiveness of the parties interested; Or if only cases requiring admonition to a sense of duty in Church matters that will tend to a more consistent life and better example to the world and Church, let them feel we have a desire to see them and the Church prosper in matters of piety. A seemingly indifference on the part of the "head" as to how the members conduct themselves is inclined to cause the members to become careless or indifferent. Inasmuch as Jesus Christ condescended to be like unto his brethren, the overseers of his Church should condescend to put themselves along side with their brethren and sisters, in matters of trials and difficulties, that is, not act as though we are more holy than they, that we are always saints and they sometimes sinners. Touching this idea we have forcibly brought to our minds a case that came under our observation. A sister was before the Church council, on a charge of trespass; hours were spent in order to get her make an acknowledgment, but nay, she could not be brought to that point. As nothing desirable could be accomplished the case was dropped until after adjournment when a committee of three were selected to talk to her about the matter, apart from the Church. I shall never forget the impressive manner in which a brother brought the matter to bear upon her mind. He talked to her as though he and she were both little children who loved each other, both he said had faults, he often done things he ought not to and asked her if she did not ; "yes." she said, and I seen the the tears begin to flow. Then said the brother when I knew I had done wrong and did not feel well until I had confessed my fault and asked forgiveness. Now the reason I do so is because I want to go to heaven and be with God with all my dear brethren and sisters and with you! Now sister ——— I know you want to be happy which you never can be unless you confess your faults if you have any. So now just do all that God requires of you, make acknowledgment and there will be joy in heaven, joy in your heart and joy in the Church. God will forgive, and the Church can not but forgive you. It is needless to say she readily acknowledged her fault and soon the whole matter was settled.

A worldly minded professor when found classed with the laity is a matter to be regretted but such a character in the office of Elder or Bishop would be lamentable indeed. In such a case the flock would also be inclined to feed in the same pasture and drink at the same fountain. In a great measure the prosperity of the Church depends upon the character of the Elders. This being so, how important that they be as Paul would have them be. "Blameless, not self-willed, sober, just, temperate, &c., &c." "Holding fast the faithful word as he has been taught." In this latter particular it is feared, owing to outside pressure, too many are inclined to let go instead of hold fast the faithful word and cling to the "old paths" learned of our fathers. We need not try to hide the fact that the Church is moving "worldward." Nothing but a bold and determined effort on the part of the Overseers, and a refreshing shower of Divine Grace in the Church in general, can arrest and keep back the restless spirit that is striving for a broader platform and an easier cross than was known to our fathers even back to the days of the Apostles. We would call special attention to the sentiments of one of our most prominent Bishops, as expressed to me in a private correspondence lately. In speaking of the prospects of the Church he says : "I do not expect that we in the wealthy and fashionable parts of the world will ever again be able to record a large increase in the Church unless we do more or less, depart from the self-denial doctrines of the Gospel, and assimilate with, or pander to the usages of our fashionable surroundings, and this I am pledged, both to my God and the Church never to do, and which by the help of God I mean to keep." Did we all stand upon that resolution and carry out such a noble determination the Church would be safe. A giving away at one point encourages the enemies of the cross to press harder upon another point. Just as it was with the nonresistent in the great rebellion. Because a few denied their principles the others had to be put to a severer test. Let every elder of the Church stand up for true Christianity, such as the Apostles heralded to the world, which I consider we are pledged to do, and by the help of God may do. As stewards over God's heritage we are duty bound to keep inviolate the principles of the Church in at least as pure a state as we found them when the government of the Church passed into our hands. Time, customs and surroundings cannot grant us license to deviate from the narrow way mapped out by our blessed Savior and hallowed by the walk and teachings of the Apostles. In that narrow self denying way we must use every effort on our part to keep the ark of the Lord, or as it was with Moses we shall be denied an entrance into the Promise Land.

In closing the eyes for nightly rest. it is good to say, "He giveth his beloved sleep ;" and in opening them; when night is past, to say, "When I awake I am still with thee."

DEATH.

We may look where we will, we see evidences of death. Whether among the high or low, rich or poor, weak or stroog, all is tending toward dissolution. We ask, what is death? It is a seperatiou of parts, a dividing asunder of that which composes the whole man. Without a separation of it, it would be impossible to produce death according to the decrees of God.

We learn from Holy Writ, when God made man he formed him from the dust, and blew into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. This is proof sufficient to show that he was composed of at least two positive principles the dust, and that which emanated from God or which was added to what God formed out of the dust. Now we believe, had it not been for certain causes this separation would not have taken place and therefore death would not be known. There would not be such a thing as death visible in this wide range of knowledge. The cause is that which we wish to investigate.

We read in the epistle of James—1: 14, 15, "But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." This gives us the key to the whole subject solemn as it is. Had not our mother Eve lusted after the forbidden fruit, after God told them "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," there would have been no death, but she was enticed by the artful entreaty of the serpent, and did partake, and gave to her husband and he did eat. The yielding to the entreaty was the conception of sin, and the eating was the sin finished and behold it brought forth death as God declared it should, and death passed upon all, and we see its work of destruction wherever we turn our eyes. In Ecclesiastes we learn that the body returns to the dust from whence it was taken but the spirit goes to God who gave it. This is the disposition made of man at his dissolution or seperation. There is, however, another death spoken of more terrible than this, that is, the second death. If the first death is a separation of parts, which it is, the second is also a separatiou of parts. The first death is brought about by separating the spirit from the body, but from divine revelation we learn the doctrine of the resurrection when these bodies will be raised and reunite with their spirit again. Perhaps after the earth shall have undergone a renovation or cleansing from the effects of the curse pronounced upon it by the transgression, but of the second, we have no knowledge of any reuniting whatever. That principle given to the natural body is a part of God, and at its dissolution returns to God again, but if man engages in sin and lives and dies in the same, when that spirit returns it cannot remain in the society of God, for God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, therefore another separation must take place which is the second death. That part of man that God gave to the body which returns again, will be now separated from sin forever and "punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God and from the glory of his power," so says Paul to the Thessalonians 2nd letter, 1: 9. There are also two resurrections as well as two deaths. The Revelator says, "blessed and holy is he that has part in the first resurrection, on such the second death has no power." Then, since inspired and holy men have told us that it is appointed unto man ouce to die, and from observation we see it is true, for many circumstances have forced themselves within our view to demonstrate this fact without the possibility of doubt, then upon the same ground we may, with safety, argue that all that has been said by those holy and inspired men is true. They have also said there is a second death but we are glad to know they have given us instructions how we may avert that second death.

The commission of sin brought about natural death and brought man so low in the scale of morals that he could not raise himself to anything like respectability without some assistance from a power superior to his own. God shows a willingness by reaching forth a helping hand in time of need, for John says, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life." Natural death is the wages of sin, and the spiritual death would follow as a natural consequence if the gift of God could not be attained. The apostle kindly informs us that eternal life is the gift of God, and the gift of God is His Son which He gave as a ransom for all, and whosoever will believe in Him shall not perish or the second death shall have no power over him and shall also have part in the first resurrection.

These are thoughts that are worthy of our serious and candid attention for we look upon death with a degree of terror and solemnity, but it is nothing compared with the second death. The Evangelist says; "Fear not them that kill the body and after that can do no more, but I tell you whom you shall fear, He that can destroy both soul and body in hell." When we contemplate all these in the light of the Gospel, and with an eye of faith behold the terror of the Lord, we persuade men and women to forsake their evil ways and try to shun the calamity hanging over us and brought upon us by sin which is the transgression of the law which God had given and which at first was disobeyed, but withal has given a way that we may avert the dreadful calamity of the second death, but the first cannot be avoided so long as the signs appear, which is, "thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee and thou shalt eat the herb of the field." While this sign is seen the body must return to earth from whence it is taken and the spirit return to God who gave it, and if it were not for the wisdom and mercy displayed by a kind and benevolent God we would be irretrievably lost. "But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior towards man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done but according to His mercy He saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost which He shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior, that being justified by His grace we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life." Titus 3: 4-5-6-7.

Now friendly reader, let us think upon our way. There is much to be gained and also much to be lost, one soul is of more value than all the world, for if we were to gain the whole world and lose our own soul what would we have? I will tell you, we will have for our company false prophets, wicked men and devils in a prepared hell. If we do not desire such company and such a place we may avoid it by obedience to God and His word. GEORGE WORST.

TEMPTATION.

I shall still try to present a few thoughts to the readers of the PILGRIM for the edification of our souls. In fact, we believe, there is no other word to be found anywhere that should draw our attention more closely than temptation. For when we consider these special forms of temptation, in general they give rise to many evils that are connected with mankind. We should be accurate in examining our former temptations and prepare ourselves to withstand the enticer, for we all know, giving way to the destroyer is sinning and sin has derived from the devil.

The origin of sin is generally traced back to the garden of Eden and in our way of thinking, we must conclude that the real origin is derived therefrom, for there was the first transgression made by the human being. Lucifer transgressed the laws of heaven and thereby fell from his majesty and has become the enemy of souls. He it was that introduced sin into the world, and he it was that conversed with mother Eve in the Garden of Eden. There he made an effort to temporize and he also conquered and we believe has won many more since the creation. Man came from his maker pure and holy, in the likeness of God's own image, and would have remained so if they had not given way to temptation. Death was the consequence of their sin and eternal death will be the result of our transgression. The weak point is the basis of his work, his cunning eye seeing we also are connected with some favorite object, he holds out inducements as will meet our approbation, and if possible win us. We cannot serve God and mammon. If we have made use of partiality on our pilgrimage to another world we should do so no more. If we have one part of our religion connected with the kingdom of this world and the other part with the kingdom of God we are standing on the brink of destruction, for there may be an open link for the destroyer to creep in. The present world in which we now reside is only a transitory home and we should consider it as the grass of the field unworthy of our attention in comparison to the worth of our souls. This world was created for the abode of man, and since the creation, has been the cradle, home and the grave of our race. But the glorious event is fast approaching when the Lord shall make his appearance in the clouds of heaven to take vengeance upon those that have given way to temptation and know not their God. If we profess to be believers we should have our affections set upon things that are above, there should be our treasure and our heart. If we are oftimes oppressed and darkened by clouds of temptation and doubt, and oftimes beset with bitter trials and sorrow, we should still look above. No tears are shed by the inhabitants of that celestial sphere, all is joy and contentment in that perfect bliss which awaits us in that heavenly home.

Now knowing that our life is of a short duration and die we must, let us keep upon the path of virtue for soon we will be out of temptations reach and when life is extinct and time is no more, may we be forever happy with God in heaven is my prayer. ANOMALOUS.

THE HISTORICAL ARGUMENT FOR IMMERSION.

BY PROF. C. F. LOOS.

It is also true that, if there were nothing certain in the word baptizo itself, the historical argument for immersion would still be complete. It is certain that, if we were to reject as inconclusive this historical argument we must, in like manner, also utterly abandon the historical argument for the authenticity and genuineness of the Holy Scriptures, especially of the New Testament, for that is of the same kind and extent, not a whit stronger in the first centuries, where its whole force rests. You say, we have the scriptures themselves; so we have immersion, in a wide, unbroken stream from the beginning, in all the lands were Christianity was born and first lived.

THE TRUE POSITION.

The true position for the advocates of apostolic baptism to take, is that there is no real ground for this controversy at all. This opposition to immersion is without a shadow of right. In the light of all kinds of evidence bearing upon it, no part of Christian doctrine is more clearly decided before the Christian world than that of the external act of baptism—that it is an immersion of the body in water, and nothing else. The whole scope of evidence positively forbids, we repeat it, all reasonable doubt and all justifiable controversy against it. This is the position to be taken, and, in clear and, bold definition, to be declared and maintained before the world. First, because it is true. Secondly, because we hold immersion, not as a matter of opinion, but as a part of the doctrine of Christ. As men would say, "it is an article of belief;" and no man should hold anything as a matter of Christian faith that admits legitimately of doubt, differences and controversies in any important respect. We do not allow that the Godhead of Jesus Christ, the atonement through his blood, salvation through faith in him, the inspiration of the scriptures, the everlasting destruction of the wicked, legitimately in the light of the word of God, admit of doubt and debate in anything affecting the essential nature of these great truths, and that, too, in spite of the fact that the Christian world is full of essential differences and fierce disputes about them. These truths are opposed and debated, but we deny the lawfulness of such oppositions and such hostile controversies. And so about baptism. The anti-immersion denominations have all introduced, in a high place, baptism into their creeds, and yet they hold that it is a subject of lawful and wide difference of opinion. This is wholly illegitimate and inconsistent. Whatsoever is not above all reasonable doubt and debate, has no right in the creed of a man, as it necessarily belongs only to the domain of the indifferent, and therefore of free opinion. Lastly, the clear and uncompromising, persistent affirmation of a great truth, and that in all the fullness of this truth, awakens men to its reality and importance, and has much to do in leading it to victory. To admit, in the full light of the evidence, the lawfulness of doubt and difference, is already half defeat—at least, a great unnecessary loss. Justice to the truth, justice to ourselves, justice to the world to be convinced, to be led from error to truth, demands imperiously the constant, fearless proclamation of the full truth.

To show that in what we have said here of the certainty of the claims of immersion, we have not exaggerated, or spoken as a partisan, we cite a series of eminent authoritative testimonies. Note, it is not simply as general witnesses to immersion that we refer to the following statements, but because of the strong emphatic manner in which they declare the certainty of the claims of immersion as the primitive baptism. This testimony is an argument of strong force and that must be felt, as it comes from eminent learned men, in practice on the opposite side:

Luther: Sermon on Baptism, 1519 (Luther's Werke, Erlangen, vol. 21); it opens as follows:

"Firstly, Taufe in Greek is called baptismus, in Latin mersio: that is, when we dip something entirely into the water, that it closes together over it. And although in many places it is no longer the custom to plunge and dip the children entirely into baptism, but only water is taken from the baptism and poured on them, nevertheless it should not be so; and it would be proper according to the meaning of the word baptism, to sink the child, or any one that is to be baptized, entirely into the water, and thus to baptize, and then draw it out again." Luther here knows nothing of an undetermined or various meaning of this word baptismus; to him it is perfectly clear and settled. His whole sermon rests throughout altogether on the idea of immersion; take this out and nothing is left.

Calvin—On Baptism: "Though the word baptize itself signifies immersion, and it is certain that the rite of immersion was observed by the ancient church."

Turretin, of Geneva (of the Reformation period, and a man of great eminence): "And, indeed, baptism was performed in that age, and in those countries, by immersion of the whole body in water."

Limborch: "Formerly those who were to be baptized were accustomed to be immersed with the whole body in water."

Augusti: Christ Archæology (in his work a whole volume is devoted to baptism): "That the rite of immersion was the common form of baptism in the ancient church can not be denied; and the most zealous defendants of aspersion must admit that in ancient times, aspersion occurs only as an exception, in cases of extreme necessity."

Brenner—a German Catholic historian—in a learned work on baptism, says: "For thirteen hundred years, baptism was universally, and in regular form, an immersion of the person under the water, and only in extraordinary cases an aspersion or an affusion. The latter were indeed as proper forms of baptism, and, in fact, forbidden.

Schaff: Church History, p. 489, note: "As regards the form of baptism, the unprejudiced historian must concede the right to the Baptists; as also most of the German scholars (forscher, those who have searched into the facts) do as Neander, Knapp, Hoefling, etc." Again, in the text, p. 488: "Finally, as regards the manner and form of the external act of baptism, without doubt immersion, and not aspersion, was the original, normal form. This is clear already, from the meaning of the Greek words, baptizo, baptisma, baptismos, by which this rite is designated; then the analogy of the baptism of John, who performed the act in the Jordan (en, and also eis ton Jordanen); further, from the New Testament comparisons of baptism with the passage through the Red Sea; with the flood, with a bath, with a burial and a resurrection; finally, the universal custom of ecclesiastical antiquity that always baptized by immersion (as the Oriental and Russo-Greek Church does yet in our day), and only allowed of affusion and aspersion in extreme cases of necessity, that is, with the sick and dying."

Bishop Taylor, (Church of England), in his Doctor Dubitantium, after making a number of references in proof of immersion, says: "All which are a perfect conviction, that the custom of the ancient churches was not a sprinkling, but immersion, in pursuance of the sense of the commandment and the example of our blessed Savior."

Dean Stanley, in his History of the Eastern Church, p. 117, finally makes this most explicit statement:

"THERE CAN BE NO QUESTION that the original form of baptism—the very meaning of the word—was complete immersion in the deep baptismal waters; and that at least four centuries, any other form was either unknown, or regarded, unless in the case of dangerous illness, as an exceptional, almost a monstrous case. To this form the Eastern church still rigidly adheres; and the most illustrious and venerable portion of it, that of the Byzantine empire, absolutely repudiates and ignores any other mode of administration as essentially invalid." Dean Stanley is Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford; and as a ripe scholar of the first rank, especially in ecclesiastical history of the East, speaks with the highest authority on this question. But the Dean is also a man of free thought and speech. How diminutive, by the side of these free, scholarly words of such eminent men appears this small, servile tortuous agony—these unscholarly, "cunning, exegetical artifices and acts of violence," as Dr. Schaff says, "of the narrow-minded opponents of the Baptists"!

In the passages cited we have italicized the words to be especially noted. The list of these citations may be greatly lengthened, but this must suffice. Now let any one carefully look at these declarations, and ask himself, how could such men have possibly come to such conclusions? Dean Stanley has stated the whole truth in the right way—"THERE CAN BE NO QUESTION;" this is precisely what we claim.

We have finished what we intended to say in these articles. The argument has been confined to a very limited range and is only partial. In any direction opened in it, it might possibly have been extended much further; but we believe enough has been offered to meet the case.

In concluding, we would earnestly commend to the men of the present anti immersion camp the judgement presented by eminent men on their own side, on the character of this argument against immersion. The judgment is severe but merited. It will be seen that what we have said of the "tortuous molepaths" of this argument is not originated by us. Gentlemen! may you ponder the words of your brethren, and may they indeed be to you "a kindness and an excellent oil!"

Dr. Geo. Campbell, on the attempts to evade the force of baptizo, says: "It is to be regretted that we have so much evidence that even good and learned men allow their judgments to be warped by the sentiments or customs of the sect which they prefer. The true partisan or whatever denomination, always inclines to correct the diction of the Spirit by that of the party.

Monthly Review (England): "Hitherto the anti-pedobaptists (or Baptists) seem to have had the best of the argument on the mode of administering the ordinance. The most explicit authorities are on their side. Their opponents have chiefly availed themselves of inference, analogy and doubtful construction.

Dr. Schaff: "Baptizo denotes in the classics always an entire or partial immersion, and not every manner of the application of water, as affusion or aspersion, without any reference to the quantative relation of the object to be bathed, as many prejudiced opponents of the Baptists—for example, Dr Dick—by all manner of exegetical artifices and strokes of violence have sought to prove."

Dr. Nevin (German Reformed), in the Mercersburg Review, May, 1850, on the mode of baptism, says: "It needs but ordinary scholarship and a mind unpledged to a mere party interest to see and acknowledge here a certain advantage on the side of the Baptists. The original sense of the word is, on the whole, in their favor." Then, in detail, he shows this advantage in church history, in the opinions of the Reformers, etc. The words we have italicized truly characterize the anti-immersion argument, as it was and yet is; and we need add no more.—Christian Standard.

MY LETTER FROM THE KING.

BY MARIE R. BUTLER.

One day, a long, long time ago,
As little children do,
I read a story o'er and o'er,
And longed to find it true.

T'was of a great and mighty king,
Who ruled a famous land;
And on a fairy hill-top built
A palace vast and grand.

Then, by an order from the king,
The gates wide open stood;
And messengers went far and wide
To call the brave and good.

But somewhere on the winding way,
A giant lived in state;
And fought the pilgrims day by day,
Who passed his castle gate.

He conquered some, and some were killed,
And some, with many a sting
Of cruel arrows, reached at length
The palace of the king.

And there at last, the story said,
They all are living still,
With fairies flitting in and out
The palace on the hill.

I lived to find my story true,
To know the "famous land;"
And here's my letter from the king,
Whose gates wide open stand.

His palace is beyond the clouds,
And all the stars on high
Are only golden lamps hung round
His palace in the sky.

So I go on, and day by day
Grow gladder while I sing,
Nearing the "city on the hill"—
The "palace of the King."

I often meet the giant too—
My giant's name is sin—
I fight him at his castle gates,
And will not enter in.

And I shall meet him yet again,
But angels help me still—
These are the fairies of my king,
The servants of his will.

My King is called the "Wonderful,"
The "Mighty" and the "Fair"—
His names are in your Bible;
My letter too is there.

When I am sad I read again
My letter from the King,
And looking toward the open gates,
Grow gladder while I sing.

LITTLE GRAVES.

A short time ago I was called up on to visit a graveyard and while there was surprised to see so large a number of little graves, some quite short. Underneath those little mounds sleeps the bodies of dear little children and the blighted prospects of many fond parents. No doubt many of my young readers have witnessed those little bodies laid in their narrow houses and have shed many bitter tears at the loss of a brother, sister or dear little playmate, perhaps with the sad thought that you will never see them any more—that they are dead and never will come forth again. This is a mistake. They are not dead but only sleeping. The little spirit that was so lively and full of joy came from God and cannot die. The body that now lies in the grave will continue to lie there until our blessed Savior comes, when it will return again and enter the body to live forever with the Lord.

But the question is; will good boys and girls and bad ones all share alike in the world to come? In answering this question I will have to go around a little. We are all condemned or rewarded according to the knowledge we have and the manner in which we use it. You no doubt have read how Adam and Eve fell by being disobedient, how that by their eating of the forbidden fruit we all became sinners by nature. Ever since that time children are born into the world with a disposition to sin and they will become small sinners or great sinners in practice according to the influence by which they are surrounded.

Those who have godly fathers and mothers will likely be taught to be good children, but those who have ungodly and wicked parents will most likely raise bad children. Now these children have just as good a reason to be bad as you have to be good, therefore it would not seem fair that they should be punished for doing that which they could not well help. Now that God who preserves you every day is good, holy and just, so that we all became sinners and there was no way to escape, He sent His Son to suffer and die that we might be saved and gave us a law or plan of salvation. In this death we are released from the sin that Adam and Eve brought upon us and all we have to account for is the sins we commit knowingly. Those who are not taught the will of Jesus and to be and do good, if they commit sin and bad deeds, do it ignorantly and therefore are not accountable and if called away in that condition Jesus will spare them just the same as your kind parents spares or forgives you when you do some some very bad things thorough ignorance.

But I wish to impress upon your minds the fact that you will not always remain in this unaccountable condition. While I noticed many little graves I also noticed that there were larger ones. The longer the grave the greater will be the responsibilities of those who lie in them and as you do not all expect to fill little graves it becomes the more necessary that you strive to do and be good so that you may not only prepare yourselves to fill large graves but may aid those children who have not the advantage which you have, to become good, and thus grow up to become useful men and women.

It is because Jesus said; "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven," that I have such a preference for little graves. But when children grow out of being little, they also grow out of this promise and thus become accountable to God and to be saved, must be born again by believing in Jesus, repenting of sins and becoming obedient to all the commands of the Lord. Hoping that the little PILGRIM readers will all learn that, to them, most important of all commandments, "Obey your parents for that is right," I now close promising to let you hear from me again.

GOOD MANNERS

Young folks should be mannerly. How to be so is the question. Many a good boy and girl feel that they can't behave to suit themselves in the presence of company. They feel timid, bashful or self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling and acquire easy and graceful manners: that is to do the best they can at home, as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned by arbitrary teaching so much as acquired by habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at at home, and then it will be a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A course, rough manner at home begets a bit of roughness which we cannot lay off if we try when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company are those who are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for all good things, especially for good manners.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

In Memory of Fannie Emmert.

Died, April 17th, 1873, aged 12 years, 10 months and 21 days.

"A mother dear laments thy loss,
Two sisters wept around thee,
A brother too did show his love
By weeping o'er thee."

We can extol the virtues of the dead, we can forgive them their vices. We can point in pride to where they last kneeled in prayer; to the last words of endearment given a darling sister or brother, or the last embrace given an affectionate mother. We can do this but we cannot recall them back to us. Such were our reflections as we stood by the side of the dying. She lay on a bed utterly unconscious of her surroundings, or the friends that wept around her. Yet even here she appeared so beautiful, so lovely, so everything that solicited our sympathies, asked our protection and excited our admiration. It seemed like that of calm resignation to a seemingly cruel fate. Even while contending with the demon Death a smile seemed to play over her naturally intelligent features; but it was the smile of heaven rather than that of earth; it was the will of angels predominating over that of man. The night wore heavily away as we stood by her bed and with it passed the dead. At half past two we looked for the last time. A few minutes later the immortal part of herself had taken its flight to other worlds than this, and left the body with her weeping friends. The morning dawned, and the news went forth that she was dead. It was then that not only a mother, two sisters and a brother, together with many associates, but old age itself gave way to the tender sympathies and wept.

Hard in deed doth appear the lot to one so young to be thus called away from all her companions and from the trees and flowers that she loved so well. But death is a relentless hand, it touched the flower ere it had fully bloomed and scattered its fragrance on the morning air. Thus died Fannie, honored, praised, and loved by all who knew her. Her short though virtuous life can be beautifully illustrated by the following pathetic lines, from "Gray's elegy."

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

EFFIE GROSSNICKLE.

Editors of the Pilgrim:—Dear brethren, I would like to drop a few thoughts in regard to the Pilgrim Almanacs. I don't want to dictate as we are personally strangers, but not so by reputation, as I have from the first been a reader of the PILGRIM and have been trying, in my weak way to labor for its support and will continue so to do as long as it keeps in Gospel bounds, trying to keep us in that narrow path which leadeth unto life, as there be few that find it. The Almanac is a beautiful supplement; it has become a household necessity. The calendar is in perfect order, all that could be desired. The Ministerial List is very convenient. Now I come to the point where I would like to give my advice as I feel interested. That space occupied with the Biographies of our forefathers might be better occupied. There is no advantage in us knowing where the founders of the church in America were born, lived and died. Our hope must be founded on the word, the Gospel of Christ. There are many of the brethren who can preach and write with power and with spirit. Commit some of their sermons to writing, and you have something for the Almanac that will benefit the world. There are many who read the Almanac that never read the PILGRIM.

H. BEELMAN.

REMARKS.—As the PILGRIM and its "supplement" is published for the benefit and convenience of its patrons we shall always be glad to hear from those concerned. Last year's Almanac was gotten up in too much haste to make it what we desired it to be, but for the coming year, we hope to do something better in that direction. To accomplish this, we have now opened a book in which we wish to add all the names of the ministers not heretofore published, correct all mistakes and changes in this year's list and note changes of address, also have it arranged in alphabetical order. Now brethren this list will be just as complete as you help us to make it. We hope some brother in every Church district will be interested in this matter and carefully examine the present list and make a note of all mistakes, add all names and addresses of those omitted and send it to us at your earliest convenience. As to what other matter it shall contain, we wish to be governed by the wishes of our patrons. While some prefer biographies of our prominent ministers, others, like Bro. Beelman, will prefer something of a more instructive and beneficial nature. All those who feel to contribute to its pages will do so as soon as convenient and we will place all on file and from what we may receive, its pages will be filled.

OUR MISSION.

On the 12th of January, 1873, I left home for Crawford Co., Pa., according to promise and arrangement, met Bro. John W. Brumbaugh on the 13th at Altoona, where he had meeting on Saturday evening, Sunday and Sunday evening. Bro. John being our leader, (and a very good one), we got aboard the first west bound train, which was at 2:20 p. m. We were informed this was the accommodation train and were not disappointed in the least, if frequent stops are considered accommodations. At 7 p. m., we reached a place called Derry. Here we took refreshments and at 7:20 we resumed our place on our accommodation train, arriving at Pittsburgh at 10:25, went to St. James Hotel, kept on European plan, registered our names, and retired for the night—had a comfortable night's rest. Morning of 14th. Porter called at door. "Six o'clock, up!" After asking God's blessing on us, which we all so much need, we repaired to the dining room and partook of refreshments. Then to depot, obtained tickets for Lionsville. At 7:40 aboard the train and up the Pittsburgh & Erie R. R. Here we had about as much accommodation as the day previous, the railroad being thickly strewed with villages, towns and iron manufactories of different kinds. The villages and towns are of modern character, seemingly much attention given to houses and surrounding shrubbery, while the streets and sidewalks receive little or no attention at all, at any rate, the condition of them would represent to the pedestrian, no attention given to streets or sidewalks, the streets being overlaid with mud 4 or 5 inches deep while the sidewalks were covered with a substance equally solid. We might name some of the towns of note, and talk of their advantages, &c., but towns and cities are not our object. Something of more importance now, directly concerns us who advocate the "Missionary cause," as we shall now try to show. At 12 m., arrived at Lionsville, where we met our friend, (brother in principle, hope soon will be by practice), A. J. Williams awaiting our arrival, took refreshments at hotel, then aboard A. J. W's. sled and then towards his home where we arrived safely at 3:30 p. m., found his companion and family all well. Here we felt at home. Everything was done on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Williams to make us comfortable. Well truly Bro. John and myself did highly enjoy ourselves while here. It was with some difficulty that A. J. W., obtained a place for public preaching, he succeeded however, in securing the Academy of Hammonsburg, which we thought was very good for public preaching, the people there feeling a delicacy in giving their homes for preaching not knowing whether we were orthodox (as they say.) According to the arrangement, on the evening of the 15th we tried to preach. We were agreeably disappointed as the house was quite full of eager listeners, seemingly ready to receive the word in its purity. After service two or three persons offered their Churches. We rested the matter in the hands of A. J. W., to decide as to the place, he accordingly chose the U. P. Church, 4½ miles north of Hammonsburg, where we met daily for preaching, up to Sunday evening, the 19th, when we closed our labors, on this mission.

We think good impressions were made and inasmuch as this was the first time the Brethren were known to preach in Crawford County, we left with the promise that some brethren should return to them again early in May, or as soon as arrangements could be made. We are very positive there is one there who desires to be a member, and in full communion with the Brethren.

We now appeal to the Middle District of Pa., to consider this matter, and say who shall or who shall not go. Where are the brethren that advocate so very strongly the "go ye?" Here is an opportunity to go, turn up the goers. We long to see the day, when every call will be filled.

This short and imperfect report was withheld to this late day, in order to stir up the pure minds, by way of remembrance at District Meeting.

NOTES.

ORCHARD VIEW, W. Va.,
April 18, 1873.

The cry still comes from every side to "come and preach for us." Since the long, cold winter has apparently come to an end we have set out to try to fill some of the many calls. The 6th of the month 3 willing souls in this neighborhood, were inducted into the Lord's kingdom by baptism, and there are several other applicants for that initiary rite. The prospects are encouraging for which we feel to thank God.

At noon the 11th. inst., I got aboard the cars here near me and after a pleasant ride of 5 hours on the Chesapeak & Ohio R. R. I was in Huntington on the Ohio river. Huntington is improving rapidly. Put up at a hotel kept by a Mr. Samples, formerly from McVeytown, Pa., who had just arrived with his wife and son-in-law, a Mr. Mathews; he also has a son-in-law living in the city by the name of Young from Frederick Co., Md., I found an agreeable acquaintance with them all, I was treated with that marked kindness so characteristic of Penna. hospitality. Next day at 10 a. m., returned as far as St. Albans, mouth of Coal River, was met by Bro. S. Meadows who kindly conveyed me to his home near the Upper Falls of Coal. Meeting at night at friend and sister Adkins, found brother P. A. Fisher and family sojourning with them for a few weeks until he builds on his new purchase. Had an interesting meeting. I was glad to meet once more with the dear brethren and sisters of that section, some of whom are young in the Church as well as young in life—they manifest a zeal for the cause they have espoused. Next day, Easter, at 11 a. m., good turn out, at 4 p. m., meeting at Falls School House, said by some to have been the largest turnout ever seen at that place, one baptized. All night with Bro. S. Meadows, next morning walked to St. Albans and at 12 m. arrived at Charleston, was taken by friend T. C. Fitzwater to his home, meeting at night in the city, at Bro. J. Starkey's, good turn out, next day was taken by Bro. Starkey to Lynn S. H., meeting at 11 a. m., one baptized, returned to the city and made several family calls, meeting at night at friend Fitzwater's house, attentive congregation. Hope the Lord will abundantly bless all the brethren, sisters and friends for their kindness and my prayer is they may continue faithful, keep themselves "unspotted from the world," and as chaste virgins finally be presented unto Christ, the coming "bridegroom."

Returned home the 16th and found all well. Praise the Lord.

In my series of articles "The Church" &c., I notice a number of typographical errors, of such a nature, however, that the reader may readily correct them in the mind.

To-day we are having some snow—the fruit trees are in bloom. Truly winter lingers in the "lap of spring."

We expect to have a Communion meeting the 17th of May. Come over brethren and help us.

Yours in love,
J. S. FLORY.

Dear Pilgrim:—Please announce that the Brethren of Winona county, Minn., near Lewiston, intend, the Lord willing, holding a communion meeting on the 7th and 8th of June next. Services to commence on Saturday 10 o'clock A. M. A general invitation is extended to all and especially ministering brethren. All those coming by public conveyance will get off at Lewiston station on the Winona & St. Peter R. R. and call on J. S. Lewis.

C. F. WIRT.

CORRECTION.—In the Biography of Eld. John Flory in "Pilgrim Almanac" an oversight appears, he was the father of ten children, the name of one of his sons, that of Michael, is left out.

In "Meeting Calander" in Almanac in place of "Boyer's Ferry" read SEWELL. J. S. FLORY.

Railroad Arrangement to A. M.

I, to-day made arrangements with the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. company, and with its branches, from Baltimore to Washington, Weaverton to Hagerstown, Harpersferry to Harrissonburg, and Grafton to Parkersburg for half fare. No farther West however than Wheeling, friend Cole having no authority to control the division west of the Ohio river in such matters.

The conditions are the same as they were on former occasions on this road. Those going will start where they choose and pay their full fare to Cumberland, asking no questions, as agents along the line know nothing at all about it, and of course can give no information. At the place of meeting I will furnish all who apply and have complied with the conditions, with a certificate which will pass them to the place of starting free of charge.

If some one would, or could arrange with some line west of the Ohio river to connect these arrangments at Wheeling or Bellair, this would be the route for all west, and south of west to take. And whereas the B. & O. R. R. Co. has never refused to grant the brethren half fare privileges, while the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Co. has rarely, if ever granted it, I think the brethren are in duty bound to consider it. Last year they refused to abate one cent of my full fare going and coming, while the Pittsburg & Conellsville road, through the brethren, sent me, by telegraph, a pass to return free over the road.

D. P. SAYLER.

P. S. I am already furnished with the return certificates.

PHILADELPHIA,
April 26th, 1873.

Editor of the Pilgrim:—Please notice that an arrangement has been concluded with the Penn. C. R. R. Co. for the benefit of our brethren going to the Annual Meeting to be held at Dale City, Somerset Co. Pa., commencing the third day of June.

The excursion will be open on the 29th of May, the tickets to be on sale to the 3rd of June and be good to return to the 14th of June.

All who go to the Annual Meeting living east of the mountain will buy excursion tickets at the main stations on the main road or main stations on the branch roads, via. Huntingdon, over the Huntiugdon & Broad Top R. R. through to Bridgeport on the Connellsville road.

All living west of the mountain (except Pittsburg) will buy excursion tickets at main stations on the main road or main stations on the branch road via Greensburg through to Connellsville. Those from the east to Bridgeport, and those from the west to Connellsville, will at those places buy tickets for a short distance over the Connellsville road to Dale City, the place of meeting.

Those from the east ought to be at Huntingdon at or before 7:40 in the morning, and those from the west ought to be at Greensburg at or before 10 o'clock in the morning. They will then go through to place of meeting by daylight.

Those who intend to stop off must inform the conductor of their intention to do so. Their tickets will then be endorsed on the back and honored by the next cooductor. Those who fail thus to inform the conducter will lose the advantage of the excursion rates and have no redress

The branches are, Columbia branch, Bald Eagle branch, Ebensburg branch, Waynesburg branch, Hollidaysburg, Morrison's Cove and Newry branches, Tyrone and Clearfield branch, Western Pennsylvania division, Lewistown division, Mifflin and Centre county branch, Indiana branch, Butler extension and Bedford division.

CHURCH NEWS.

We hope our brethren and sisters will continue to keep us posted on the condition and progress of the Church. When the disciples learned of each other and the success of the work of the Lord, they took courage and thanked God. If they needed good tidings to encourage them on the way, we need it none the less. During our late rebellion, when any part of the great army was repulsed by the enemy, the whole was affected and indeed, the nation was made to mourn, but when there was a decisive victory it infused every soldier with renewed courage. Just so it is with us. We are in the midst of a great rebellion, the whole camp of satan is arrayed against us and sometimes we meet with reverses, the foe out generals us and we are ready to despond, but when we learn that in other parts of the army, victories are being won we take courage and go forth with renewed zeal to fight against the kingdom of darkness. Every time that there is a soul converted there is a glorious victory achieved, even of greater value than the whole world. From the thousands of valent soldiers that are now faithfully engaged in the contest there must be a large number of victories, many souls converted to God. Why not report them that others may take courage. Brethren and sisters, let us hear from every congregation in the brotherhood and thus keep us posted on the good news of the kingdom. The Communion season will soon be here when the great brotherhood will assemble at their respective places of worship and there feast on the living emblems of Christ. A report of these meetings are generally interesting and will be duly appreciated if not too lengthy. In conclusion, let us have a report of everything transpiring that may be of a general interest to our readers.

THE ELDERS.

We wish to manifest no partiality to our writers, but we are, sometimes, partial to their subjects. Bro. Flory's "Duties of the Elders" of this week, is a subject of vital importance to the Brotherhood and is the basis from which our prosperity must be expected. With Christ for our head and good ruling elders for a basis, Zion will come forth in her most lovely garments and the world with all its deceitfulness and power cannot clog its progress. It is a high position of trust and the responsibilities are important and great and those placed in it should not fail to feel it. The subject is well treated and we hope it may go forth accomplishing the great desire of the Church, that our elders may be instructed, encouraged and fully qualified for that most high calling in which they have been called, that the flock may be cared for and receive the meat in season and that many yet without may be constrained to enter the fold and live.

PERSONAL.

S. C. Showalter. The Pilgrim is sent to the poor sister.

Eld. Jacob Mohler. All right,—sorry to give you so much trouble.

James Barton, The letter ordering Pilgrim sent to Joseph Forney was not received. It is now sent.

Minutes of D. M's. Secretaries of our District Meetings will confer a favor by sending us a copy of their minutes. We will print Minutes at the following rates: 100, $6.00. 200, $8.00, and 300, $10.00

Change and Correction. The Lovefeast at Codorus, York Co., Pa, has been changed from the 10, and 11 of June to the 7. and 8. The Beaver Creek, Md., should be on the 14, of May instead of the 4.

Pilgrim Almanacs.—As we have on hand several hundred more Almanacs than we need for distribution, we will send them to any address, free of postage on the following terms. Single copy 10 cents, 6 copies 30 cents, and 12 copies 60 cents.

The Helping Hand. All orders for the "Household Treasure" will now be filled with the "Helping Hand." This is a recent work containing all that was in the "Treasure" with the addition of considerable other important information. We intend to keep it on hand instead of the Treasure at the same price. All orders promptly filled.

Railroad Arrangements. Last week we gave the privileges tendered by the Southern roads, and this week we give those of the Eastern and Western. The favors granted are about as complete as could be expected. The Pa. Central, as well as all other roads who grant the privilege, go to considerable trouble to accommodate and should be held in grateful remembrance by the Brethren.

Those who go to A. M., on excursion tickets should take the copy of the Pilgrim containing the arrangements with them.

W. Arnold of Somerset, O., wishes us to say to those coming to their District Meeting, via Mansfield, Ohio, that they must arrive there on Monday the 19th of May, at 10:27 a. m., in order to reach the place in time. Also states if there are any who wish to come and spend Saturday and Sunday with them they will be heartily welcome.

D. F. R. "Dymond on War," is a book of 124 pages well bound in flexible cloth and is acknowledged to be one of the best works written on the subject, and is well worth the price asked for it, (see advertisement). All those wishing to become well posted on the important subject of non-resistance should not fail to secure a copy of this valuable work.

Our Position is a tract written and published by Isaac Errett, editor of the Christian Standard. It gives the distinctive features of the plea for reformation urged by the Disciples of Christ. It has the following divisions: First. That in which they agree with the parties known as evangelical. Second. That in which they disagree with all. Third. That in which they differ from some but not from all. The tract is written by a master hand of the denomination who is fully able to define their position.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE necessity for the abolition of the franking privilege must be apparent to every one from the statement in the Washington Star of the 15th inst., that there now leaves the post-office in that city daily from 30,000 to 50,000 pounds of franked matter. It may be safely asserted that not a tithe of this matter is of any use to the Government or the people. The franking privilege should be denominated a scheme to make and keep voters. How the mails will rejoice on the 1st of July, and how the people, male and female, will rejoice that the Post-office Department is to be appropriated to legitimate uses!

MONSTER RAILWAY MAP.—There has been on exhibition in this city for a few days past a map of the route of the Pacific Railway, which is to be exhibited at the Vienna Exposition. The map is the largest ever made in the country, measuring 12 feet by 10, and representing an area of 655,200 square miles. The measurements are from old surveys and maps, corrected in many instances by the surveys of the road itself. Executed in water colors and showing at a glance the contour and general physical characteristics of the whole immense stretch of country, this map was yet only five weeks in preparation. Four landscapes in water color in vacant corners represent the City of Duluth, the valley of the Upper Yellowstone, Shadow Lake, Montana, and the St. Louis River Minnesota.

FATHER IS GONE.

BY LAVINO H. BURKET.

On The Death of Brother Funk.

Schoolmates, weep not for your father,
He has only gone to rest;
Gone to sleep that sleep in Jesus,
Happy father, he is blest.

First your dear and sainted mother
Journeyed through the shades of death—
Through that valley Jesus led her,
To a land of life and health.

Yes, in Heaven your dear mother
Beckons you to meet her there—
Watching for her children's coming,
Those she loved and cared for here.

Then your sister crossed the river
Leaving husband, children, friends;
Home and all her earthly treasures,
For a world that never ends.

Now your father too has left you
But 'twas Jesus bid him come;
He had done with earthly sorrows—
God has took him to his home.

What to them were earthly treasures
Or the waters dreadful roar,
On the other side the river
They have viewed fair Canaan's shore.

You will miss him, ah, I know it,
I have lost a father too;
Well I know that deep, deep sorrow
When some dear one's hid from view.

Death has robbed me of two brothers
Who was ours to love and own;
And a darling little sister
Now an angel at God's throne.

School-mates, mourn not for your father
He will dwell at God's right hand;
Fields of pasture, fresh and fragrant,
Blooming in that better land.

He has passed across the Jordan
And has landed without fear;
Oh, dear children do not tarry,
Try to meet them over there.

All your brothers now are walking
In the road your parents trod;
And a sister too is trying
To be owned a child of God.

Though a Christian's road is often
Marked with trials on the way,
Yet an Advocate is promised,
Oh, then come and don't delay.

Come to Jesus, long delaying
Won't insure that blest retreat—
Putting off all timely warning,
You may lose that mercy seat.

Dearest school-mates, come to Jesus,
He is Father, Brother, Friend;
Pray that He may choose our pathway,
And guide us safely to the end.

THE SOURCE OF CHRISTIAN ENJOYMENT.

Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise —Eph. 1: 13.

Having in my former articles spoken of the enjoyment and happiness a Christian life affords, I will now say something of the source from which these delights flows and gives the unmistakable assurance of terminating in unending happiness in the world to come.

True, Jesus Christ is our salvation, He redeemed us to God by His own blood. He paid the debt due for sin, "in becoming sin for us that we may be made the righteousness of God in Him." For we are "not redeemed with corruptable things, as silver and gold, from our vain conversation received by tradition from our fathers, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." The regenerated souls that have embraced the faith in Jesus and being baptized into His death, have put on Christ the hope of glory, and are justified in Him from all sins whether actual or inherited, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses, for an implicit obedience of faith in the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation." It is said of the believer, 'But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness and sanctification and redemption. In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace." Hence the true Christian is delivered from sin, and consequently enjoys a present salvation, although the body is still the same corruptible mortal, clothed with flesh and blood, hence liable to err and subject to deception. Though the mind is changed, the actions different, his promptings heavenward, his aim to glorify God in his spirit and in his body, yet he stands in need of help from above as a pledge, and as an earnest of his future inheritance and purchased possessions in Heaven when the body is redeemed. This assistance is afforded us in the third person of the Godhead, by being sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise. "O, the depths of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchible are His judgments, and His ways past finding out." Behold the wise arrangement in the plan of salvation! The Triune God, dispenseth his power through the trinity of His Godhead by giving each part their work to perform in the plan of salvation and eternal redemption. How wise, how appropriate the formula given in the three actions in the ordinance of christian baptism, as each person in the Godhead has its important work to perform, so each one has to be honored in its own name by baptizing the subject into the name of the Father, and into the name of the Son, and into the name of the Holy Ghost. The Father draws and enlightens the sinner by the spirit of His grace. The Son saves through the redemption of His blood in delivering him from his sins, and by his triumphant resurrection releases his body from corruption, and through His victorious ascension to Heaven, opened the portals of bliss, and gives admittance into the paradise of God. The Holy Spirit sanctifies, leads into all truth, guides him through the uneven path of life, seals his promise of redemption, and is an earnest or pledge of an eternal adoption as God's children, and consequently heirs of that "inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that faileth not away." O how important, brethren and sisters, that we "grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby we are sealed unto the day of Redemption." "Therefore let all bitterness, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

The sinner, by hearing the word of truth preached unto him, receiveth it, trusts in God for his salvation, and yields obedience to His faith in submitting to the conditions of pardon. Repentance, faith and baptism has the assurance of the remission of his sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost. See Acts 2 chapter, "In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of His glory." That there is a time limited to the Holy Spirit as the earnest German, arrabon, more properly rendered, pledge. See German version, of our inheritance shall cease is intimated by "until," understanding till another scene or existence shall commence, here we will try to get at the proper meaning of the apostle in order to see when that time shall be, and what the redemption of that purchased possesion signifies. The spirit of God is our pledge certainly as long as we are in this life, that the redemption which has been procured for us by Christ shall actually be ours, and whether it will end in death I shall leave to every ones own opinion, but allowing the consciousness of the soul between death and the resurrection, which we must do if we believe the spirit of the Scripture, I incline to the belief that it will reach to the morning of the first resurrection, when mortality is swallowed up of life, and the immortal soul reunited with the body redeemed from corruption. That there is a redemption of the child of God and a redemption of the body in the future is evident from Romans 8, and a deliverance from the bondage of corruption to the glorious liberty of the children of God, where second death has no power, is equally evident, and even that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain, it is the earnest expectation of the creature of humanity, and waiteth for the manifestation of the Son of God. And not only they, but ourselves also which have the first fruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body,—likewise the spirit helpeth our infirmities. Is it not conclusive then, that Christians, the first fruit of the spirit, God's elect, yea, the first born of His creatures, the begotten of God, have need of being sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise? But what is the purchased possession? The purchased possession includes, in a general sense, the whole human family, for Christ tasted death for every man. He purchased with His own blood, all kindred, nations, tongues and people. Humanity strayed away from God, lost as sheep having no shepherd, was dead in trespasses and sins. Christ came, rescued them, "died for all, then were all dead." "And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died and rose for us." O the glorious resurrection, Christ died and rose again. Soul-cheering and sool-reviving hope, the perfection of our faith, the consummation of sin, the finishing stroke of Redemption, the end of our justification, the key to Heaven and the diploma to admit us into the presence of God. But here is offered a conditional salvation for all those who have lost their title in Christ by trampling under foot the blood of the New Covenant wherewith they were sanctified by turning again to God, comply with that condition and live faithful unto Christ. They, with the innocent children, are in a more particular sense called the purchased possession and will be alike redeemed from corruption at the first resurrection and taken home to Christ as His own blood bought people, to realize that inheritance for which the Holy Spirit was their pledge. LEONARD FURRY.

GOD'S DESIGN IN CREATING MANKIND.

In the beginning God created man in His own image, male and female, to enjoy themselves with Him and to be fruitful, multiply, replenish and subdue the earth, and have dominion over the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea and every living thing that moveth upon the earth, and were allowed to eat of every herb bearing seed, and of every tree in the which is the fruit yielding seed, but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil they were not to eat of, for in the day that they ate thereof they should surely die. Die from what? From the enjoyment with Him and be doomed to be with the beasts of the field and be under the curse with the earth by it, not yielding its full increase, and producing thorns and thistles and enslaving man the more to replenish it, and also brought mankind subject to diseases and finally death, and then to be rewarded according to their doings. Eve being beguiled of the serpent to eat of the forbidden fruit, she also tempted Adam to sin and knowing then good from evil, knowing they were naked and perceiving that they can do as they please, by using the opportunity in many things to the extreme and out of place, being responsible for their acts and being inclined to do evil, God gave them again consolation that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head, and the seed of the serpent shall bruise his heel to restore mankind to enjoy themselves with God, to praise and adore Him for He is worthy of all honor, dominion and praise. And the holy prophets prophecied of Christ's coming who should bruise the serpents head. Perceive the love of God by not sparing His only Son, born from the tribe of Judah, to give His life for the sins of the world in the which we are also interested. He had been suffering also for us, to redeem us that we may be heirs with Him and enjoy ourselves in God's presence. O, what condescending love and great mercy for the Son of God to lay down His life for His friends, and He loved us even when we were enemies and aliens from the commonwealth of Israel or the children of God. He left His abode with God, put on human flesh, turned water into wine, healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, healed the maimed, gave sight to the blind, raised the dead and to the poor He preached the gospel, and such as gave heed to hear him. Therefore every one of us should give heed to His teachings, that is the will of His Heavenly Father which He has left us for information how to become heirs with Him, to be exalted and honored almost like the Son of God after being such depraved, sinful and unprofitable servants, scarcely worthy of anything. Therefore we should stop at once and not grieve God any more by sinning or disobeying His will. Let us be up and doing, in watchfulness and prayer, so that we may see and hear and understand aright and forsake the evil ways of the world. Love God with all our heart, soul, strength and mind, so that whatever we do it may be done for the wellfare of our soul and body and the welfare of others and the honor and glory of God, that we may become worthy to praise Him with Christ and His throng, in due reverence.

Let us lay aside all filthiness and superfluity of knowledge, and with meekness receive the ingrafted word of God which is able to save our souls, which says that we must believe that He is the only true and living God, and Him only should we worship, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. How seek Him? By doing according to the requirements of His will. We shall not take the name of God in vain, but give honor and reverence to Him on the Sabbath, which is a type of the glorious rest of the righteous in the mansions prepared of God to exercise with Christ. We shall honor our father and mother, be subject in accordance to the word of God, even for the sake of prosperity in this life. We shall not kill, abuse or misuse our brother, sister, neighbor, nor even our enemies, nor offend if it can be reasonably avoided, not commit adultery, nor cause strife or disturbance in families, but rather introduce forbearance, correction unity and love, and we shall not steal, not only goods, but allow each others rights and privileges, and encourage one another to faith and good works, bearing no false witness against one another or our neighbors, but rather speak words of truth and verity, and such as may induce others to turn from their errors, neither shall we covet anything that is our neighbors or that is belonging to somebody else. We oftentimes see things good and useful, and pleasing to have, we should not be tempted to get it by fraud or deceit, but do unto others as we ourselves wish to be done by.

Again, God wants us to make ourselves useful in this world, we shall be diligent in business, fervent in the spirit, serving the Lord, striving to improve our talents in some way in the Church, and in some occupation in laboring with our own hands, that we may also have something to give to the needy. We may wield our influence in many ways by following the example of Christ in the spirit of meekness and quietness, encouraging one another to faith and good works, by avoiding the foolish talking and evil doings of the world and the false professions thereof. Some think if the heart is right all is right, but if the heart is right we are willing to do all the commandments and to put down all pride that is above commonness and the knowledge of God, casting away our own conceits and imaginations, and unlawful lusts of the eyes for things of vanity and show. Let us take heed to Him that spake from Heaven, and spake as never man spake, that we do not neglect so great a salvation, which was at first spoken of by Moses and the Prophets and confirmed to the apostles that heard Christ speak, so that we may enter in through the gates into the city and have a right to the tree of Life, which yieldeth twelve manner of fruits, and the leaves of it are for the healing of the nations, where we may rest from our labors and our works do follow us. On such the second death has no power. I greet you in the name of God through the grace of Christ, to meet Him and one another in peace.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD.

What is Safe and what is not Safe; What is Right and what is not Right.

BY J. H. MOORE.

CHAP. VI.—Backward and Forward Baptism.

We do not propose at this time to settle the question whether it is possible to obey any of the commandments by going forward? But the question is can we obey any of them by going backward? We do not intend to settle the question whether God is pleased with the forward action in baptism, but will he sanction the backward action? Here is where we get into difficulties. Nobody disputes the forward action being either right or safe, but the entire trouble is about the backward motion. We all know that our great Law giver has given commands that required a forward motion to obey—about this there is no dispute, this is safe ground, but did he ever, since the world began, give a command that required a backward motion? Here is a work for somebody who has been for years ransacking the Bible to find a divine commandment that must be performed backward. They can find them by the hundreds that are forward but these don't suit them.

There are people who see, or seem to see a world of things, but for their lives they cannot see the children of Israel passing through the Red Sea forward, which is a type of our forward baptism; they even fail to see Noah going into the ark forward, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us." They see clear through the fact that we are baptized in the likeness of Christ's burial, when Paul says: "that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death," not his burial; his death took place on the cross when he bowed his head forward and gave up the Ghost, and how in the name of all reason can we be baptized in the likeness of his death by laying the body backward when he bowed forward?

All leading religious denominations agree that the face forward action is both safe and right, but the great difficulty is about the backward motion, is it either safe or right? We know that the forward is, and furthermore, we are certain that in the time of the apostles the administrator placed his right hand on the head of the candidate and gently bowed his head forward till he was fully immersed. I don't know of a single instance in the practice of the early Christian's, where they ever practiced the backward posture. Nor did the backward motion come into use among those who immersed till sometime after the commencement of the Reformation. [A. D. 1517.] It was then introduced by a class of people, who imagined that our Savior was buried on his back, hence in the likeness of that imaginary burial they commenced laying the body backward in the water. And the various religious denominations that have sprang from them still use the backward motion, not because it was ever practiced by the apostles or any of their immediate successors, but almost unconsciously has it crept from generation to generation, even down to our time and even now in this enlighted age there are those who regard it as of divine appointment.

And what is more surprising than even all of this, is, that there are multitudes who condemn sprinkling and pouring because they are human inventions, and then turn right around and practice the backward method, which is not yet four hundred years old, lacking not less than 1440 years of being as old as Christian baptism. Those who undertake to trace the practice of immersion to the apostolic age, have to perform nearly their entire journey upon the forward method.

To suppose that God will sanction the backward baptism, is to simply put the inventions of men on an equal footing with the thus saith the Lord. We are not aware that he ever did sanction the introduction of a human invention in the room of a divine appointment, and to suppose that he will do so in this one case is neither reasonable nor necessary. It is then not even so much as questioned whether the forward baptism is right, but is the backward right? Here are all the doubts in the whole matter. We will stand on safe grounds and go FORWARD in the likeness of our Savior when he bowed his head and gave up the Ghost. Those who have a desire to go backward in the likeness of Eli who fell from his seat backward and broke his neck [1 Sam. 4: 18,] can do so.

All the communities of believers established in the early ages of Christianity either by the apostles or any of their immediate successors, practiced the forward method of baptizing. In the early times no one ever dreamed of baptizing any other way; they had but one method and that was the forward, the same as is now practiced by the Brethren. The Waldenses also practiced the same mode, while none have used the backward method only those who have in some way sprung from the English Baptist. Even their own historians regard them as the inventors of this modern method of baptizing. All the evidence in existence, both scriptural and historical, is decidedly in favor of the position that the Lord Jesus was baptized by bowing forward under the hand of John the Baptist, and those who propose to follow Jesus rather than man, should submit to no other method. This we are certain is not only right but safe. "I am the way the truth and life, no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—Jesus.

YE ARE THE LIGHT.

Ye are the light of the world, a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid.—Matthew 5: 4.

This, we think is a text that should often be preached in our day, since the world thinks there is no reality in religion, and we know that it does not consist in saying Lord, Lord, but in doing what Jesus has commanded. It took then, and does now what is often preached, that faith and true repentance with a godly sorrow over sin, and baptism for the remission of sins to make them the light of the world. Now if we, who make this good profession before the world, are seen going into the saloons and there drink with the world, and when asked for our tobacco box, pass it freely, and are heard jesting and joking and talking foolishly, I would like to know how that light shines. Now brethren and sisters, Jesus meant that we should not be seen or take part where such things are going on, or we can not be the light of the world. Even men who are honest seekers must find a better state of things to convince them that there is a genuine or pure religion.

Again, if we are not transformed from the world in all things, how can we be the light of the world? If we have money to loan, and take from men out or in the Church, more than lawful interest, the light needs considerable trimming in my estimation of the text, since through the chaste conversation and godly walk, the world may be constrained to love God and keep His commandments. There is not much danger that these things are done before the Church, but always before the world where our light should shine. It was the world that Jesus came to save and is now gone up to Heaven, and has commanded us to preach His gospel and to see that it is lived out before the world so that there can none be mistaken, and as the apostle says, "What ye do, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus giving thanks to God by Him." Seeing then that we should be different from the world to be the light of it, seems almost sufficient, but it must be told a little plainer, for not only the laity, but those who are set apart are hardly willing that these things should be touched with the pen and indeed not willing to lay them aside, but it takes us all to watch that the light does not get too dim for the world to see it for they are to see it.

Now if the Church is to be as a city on a high hill, and if we would see a large city on a high hill or mountain, it would surely draw our attention. So if the world can see our good works it must come to the conclusion that there is reality in religion.

Brethren and sisters, let us remember that we also are the salt of earth, and if we lose our saving qualities, we certainly will be cast out to be trodden under foot of men. Now brethren and sisters, I do not want to censure the Church, but merely to stir up our pure minds in way of remembrance while so many temptations are before us.

WHAT DO WE LIVE FOR?

In noticing the manners and daily walk of the mass of the people in this our day and time, we arrive at the conclusion that there are those, and in fact not a few, that do not know what they live for. They seem to drag through life as though they come by chance, and as if there was no just God, no deceitful devil, neither Heaven nor a soul to save. They seem to have nothing to do but to make the number more while living and less when dead, as though God did not demand anything of them, and as if the devil did not tempt them, they are as the chaff before the wind. "But why stand ye all the day idle? Doth not wisdom cry and understanding put forth her voice? Well may the Psalmest ask, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" "For the ways of all men are before his eyes." "These seven things doth the Lord hate, a proud look, a lying tongue," &c., of which the world seems to be made up of nowadays. Some strive for wealth only, others for pleasure, while some few dare to live godly. But in order to make our lives profitable, "let us incline our ears unto wisdom, and apply our hearts to understanding, for happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding." And "Keep our hearts with diligence, for out of it are the issues of life," and "Ponder the path of our feet, let our ways be established and turn neither to the right nor to the left," but say:

It's not for worldly goods I live,
But for the sparkling crown;
It's not for vain corrupted things,
But Heaven's high renown.

I'll live for good while here I stay,
And not for wretched woe;
I'll live for Heaven's eternal day,
And then to glory go.

I'll live and learn how I must die,
To gain that Heavenly rest;
I'll live to meet my God on high,
And be forever blest.

May the God of truth and grace teach us all what to live for, and what our duty in life is toward Him is the prayer of your unworthy servant.

FRIENDSHIP.

How dear is friendship. It sweetens the bitter cup, and smoothes the thorny path of life. How pleasing the idea! How animating the thought that we have friends. How much to be prized is a true friend in whom we may always confide. But some may ask, who are my friends, and how may I know them? Let me ask, how did the man that fell among thieves know which was his friend? You would readily answer, the Samaritan, because he showed mercy.

A true friend whose heart is drawn out in sympathy for those around, who is ready to speak a word of consolation to the afflicted and whose hand is ready to administer relief without expecting recompense, is to be prized among the sparkling gems of earth, but a false friend is more to be dreaded than an avowed enemy, for we know the design of an enemy is to injure, but a false friend is like a serpent coiled in the grass lying in ambush for its prey, and its unhappy victim is ensnared before he is aware that danger is near. Some will be our friends while prosperity blooms along our pathway, then all goes on pleasantly, but when adversity, with its chilly blast, sweeps away the flowers of prosperity, and naught but the leafless stock, the recollection of the past remains, then we look around for our friends. Alas! they are gone, yes, gone when we most needed them.

But to obtain true friends, we have a part to act. We must show ourselves friendly to our brethren and sisters and friends, and those with whom we associate. Many of us have had our family circles broken by the impartial hand of death, we have seen a kind father, an indulgent mother, or both consigned to the silent grave. Many of us have received the unwelcome tidings of the death of parents and friends; unwelcome to us indeed it is, while perusing the pages of the fatal letter which bore the message, that made our hearts ready to burst with grief. Painful thought, that we had not the privilege of standing by their couch of pain and administering to their varied wants, or of hearing their farewell advice, nor of seeing the last flicker of the lamp of life as it was gently extinguished by the hand of death. Then how alleviating to the afflicted soul it is to have a friend that will sympathize with us in our deep affliction, and with kind and consoling words, pouring the oil and wine into the bruised heart. Again, if anything transpires to add happiness to the contented mind how brightly that spark will kindle when shared with a true and faithful friend. Under considerations like these, ought we not to show ourselves friendly to all. If we meet with a stranger, treat that stranger kindly, for we know not what secret sorrow is his. We little know what painful emotions are throbbing in his bosom. A mild word, or friendly look or some little act of kindness may be the means of alleviating much heartfelt sorrow. Happy thought.

RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

That this is, by many, considered an abstruse subject, one not connected with a Christian's duties or welfare and hence not profitable for discussion, I am well aware, and yet I am also aware that there are others who have given the subject more than a passing notice, in fact, considerable study; and as a result, even Brethren, have arrived at different conclusions, and I, being one that has arrived at one conclusion after reading and studying the prophecies relating thereto, would fain offer an opinion, with all due respect for the opinions of others, and if I am in error those in possession of better light and knowledge will please correct, as it is not my wish to disseminate incorrect opinions.

That Israel has a promise of restoration at some certain period of time is admitted, I believe, by all, but the points of difference are, 1st. What is Israel to be restored from? 2nd. What is Israel to be restored to? 3d. Who are Israel?

In considering this subject we will first ascertain the definition of the words used. Restoration according to Webster, means, 1st. Act of being restored. 2nd. State of being restored. Restore means to bring back from a state of ruin or decay.

Now, first, we claim Israel is to be restored from ruin or decay or both, and in establishing this position, will quote certain prophecies of the olden time. Just here I wish to call the attention of the reader to the fact that many writers, in attempting to elucidate this subject, have used the prophecies relating to the punishment of the Jews for disobedience and the rewards or blessings they were to receive for repentance and obedience: and also those having reference to the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, which prophecies I propose to eliminate and use only such as remain to be fulfilled.

In pursuance of that I shall first quote Isa. 11: 11. "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush; and Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamar and from the islands of the sea."

Assyria is one name applied to the the empire under which the Jews suffered their seventy years bondage but Isaiah could not have had reference to that bondage from the fact that he mentions several other countries and the islands of the sea while only the one term of Assyria or Babylon, (which are synonymous) is used in connection with the seventy years captivity. It may be argued that these different countries were but integral parts of the Assyrian Empire; admitted—but such was not the case for many years after. I also deduce from the quotation above, that Israel was in an advanced state of decay and consequently of ruin, from the fact that there was only a remnant to be recovered, whereas if my understanding is correct, there was more brought back than went into captivity in Babylon. "And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase. And I will set up shepherds over them, which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord." Jer.—23: 3, 4.

It is evident from the foregoing prophecies that Israel was or would be in a deplorable condition, in a ruined state, for in what worse condition could any people be than to be without the favor and friendship of God, to be without the civilizing, the refining, the Christianizing influences of religion, to be without the soul-cheering presence of the spirit of God, bearing witness with their spirits that they were the children of God and to be subject to all the wiles and machination of a powerful adversary as well as all the ills that flesh is heir to without one assuring hope of rest in this world or in the world to come? It will be admitted this is, or would be, a ruined condition and any people placed in such a condition would naturally deteriorate and decay. And it was from just this predicament that I understand Israel was to be restored. For further support of this, see the fifth, the eighth, and especially the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of Jeremiah.

The second question is, what is Israel to be restored to? I have placed these in the line of rotation in which they are usualy treated, because it required the greatest amount of argument to make the answer, usually given, to this second question acceptable, for it is almost invariably shown or attempted to be shown, that Israel must be restored to nationality first, and afterward would come to a restoration spiritually, but as according to my understanding of the question, this is reversing the two positions Israel was destined to occupy, I will, for my own convenience in treating the subject, transpose the questions and treat the third question first and the second can be easily and briefly answered, especially, as I shall only speak of Israel in a spiritual sense; not that I deny that Israel will be restored to nationality, but simply, that I do not understand Israel is to be settled in Palestine at all or that Israel is to be formed into a nation before its restoration spiritually. And now I will answer the third question, Who is the Israel to whom the promises are made?

The word Israel, when translated means, a prince of God; who prevails with God; hence I do not understand that Jews are Israelites at this day because when we consider the definition of the term it cannot be said they are Princes of God or that they prevail with God.

Again, when the promise was made to Abraham, that in him, and his seed all the nations and kindreds and families of the earth should be blessed, said promise was made as a reward for implicit faith manifested by obedience, and as the Jews are notoriously an unbelieving race, rejecting entirely the Savior and the Testament, He gave, thereby manifesting a want of faith not only in Christ but also in the word of God spoken through the mouths of His prophets since the world began concerning Christ. Hence I argue that the promises of restoration have found or will find fulfillment, not in the Jews but in the true and faithful followers of Christ, for be it remembered that God, by the mouth of the prophet Jeremiah, says: "Behold the days come saith the Lord that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah." Jer.—31: 31. And Paul, in writing to the Hebrews, treating this subject, says: "For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second." "In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away. Heb. 8: 7, 13. Then if the first covenant is old and has been superceded by a new and better covenant, established, as Paul says, "on better promises," and again in speaking in relation to this same subject, "Then said he, 'Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first that he may establish the second." Now if by Christ fulfilling, He taketh the first covenant away, and the Jews claiming and accepting no other covenant, on the contrary they emphatically repudiate that second covenant which Paul says "was made on the better promises," wherein is their promises contained, seeing that "by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified?" I understand that the unbelieving Jew stand in the same alienated relation to God that the unbelieving unregenerate gentiles and unless he believes and repents of his sins that he will suffer the same consequences for a sinful life, the unrepentant Gentiles will, for Paul, in writing to the Romans, argues this fully, and the conclusion that he seems to arrive at, is, that through the faith that Abraham manifested, he was accounted righteous without circumcision, and that circumcision was given unto him as a seal of his righteous faith for, says Paul, the promise that he should be heir of the world was not made to Abraham through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." For, says he, "if they which of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise is of none effect." In another place Paul says. "Who are Israelites: to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises?"

For they are not all Israel who are of Israel; neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called." Again, "but Israel which followed after the law of righteousness hath not attained to the law of righteousness.

Wherefore, because they sought it not by faith, but, as it were, by the works of the law, for they stumbled at that stumbling stone." Paul also says that "he that is circumcised Christ shall profit him nothing;" and I also read that "there is no other name given under Heaven or among men whereby we must be saved only in the name of Jesus." Hence I can not believe that the promises of restoration are made to the unbelieving Jew, but to all those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, be they Jew or Gentile, bond or free, and I thank God that it is so, for if it were not so, those who Paul calls the Israel of of God would lose much of the future joy that I have always thought would be theirs.

Now in regard to the question, what Israel is to be restored to, I will only say, restored to the favor and friendship of God, restored to the serving God and so living that we may, through the atonement of our Savior, meet God in peace and ultimately be received into his family above.

There might be much more written on this subject but this article is already larger than it was designed to be and if the ideas are erroneous it is too large now.

THE things that tend to elevate a person into noble self-sacrifice, generosity, purity of life and communion with God are good; but the things that lead one to selfishness, penury, hatred and the developement of the animal instincts are evil. Let every one ask the question—which way am I tending? Are the influences by which I am led elevating me into a higher life or are they tending to degrade me into lust and sin?—A. B. B.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

A giddy lamb one afternoon,
Had from the fold departed;
The tender shepherd missed it soon,
And sought it heavy hearted.
Not all the flock that shared his love
Could from the search delay him;
Nor clouds of midnight darkness move,
Nor fear of suffering stay him.

By night and day he went his way
In sorrow till he found it:
And when he saw it fainting lay
He clasped his arms around it.
And closely sheltered in his breast,
From every ill to save it,
He brought it to his home of rest,
And pitied and forgave it.

And so the Savior will receive
The little ones who hear him:
Their pains remove, their sins forgive,
And draw them gently near him;
Bless while they live, and when they die,
And soul and body sever,
Conduct them to his home on high,
To dwell with him forever.

A TALK ABOUT FLOWERS.

Spring time is now here in all its loveliness and no doubt, many of my little readers have real nice times gathering the pretty flowers that our kind God has strewn so plentifully everywhere. Flowers are real pretty and the smell is so deliciously sweet that I do not blame you if you do spend a few hours daily amongst them.

But flowers, like boys and girls,are not made to be admired for their beauty alone. If your playmates had no loveliness about them but their beauty, you would soon grow weary of their company. Just so it would be with the pretty flowers that you now so much admire. If they would always remain the same beautiful flower you would soon grow weary of them, their bright colors would lose their loveliness and the sweet fragrance grow insipid and stale, the fact is, you would become so accustomed to it that after awhile you would hardly notice its presence at all. It is the changing from one thing to another that we so much admire. First we notice the little bud, it swells and the shell, that has so long protected it from the cold winds, snows and frosts, burst and the beautiful flower spreads itself in all its lovely colors, with its odor shedding a fragrance all around. A few days of sun and shade and the fragrance grows less and less, the pretty colors fade away and it drops to the ground just as if that was all it was made for, but if you examine the place from which it fell, you will find that it had a purpose and that its work was accomplished, there is the tiny fruit already forming into shape and in a few weeks and months it will be grown or matured in the shape of a delicious cherry, peach, plum or pear or something else equally good. First the bud, then the flower and then the fruit. So you see, everything has its place and order. If there were no buds there could be no flowers, and without flowers there could be no fruit.

I hope you will excuse me for going around so far to tell a short story but I want to set you to thinking. It would be shocking to think of people being born big men and women at once. We could not think of it. The fact is, it would spoil all our enjoyment and we would become weary for want of change. How glad then we ought to feel that everything is made just right. If you will take the trouble to read several of the first chapters of Genesis you will there learn that after God had labored six days he looked upon all he made and he said it was good. The little buds he made were good, the flowers were good, the fruit was good and, did I say the little boys and girls which he makes are also good? Yes, that is what I intended to say. That chubby little brother or sister of yours is the bud, and you, my young readers, are the flowers, but the great question is, will you ever mature any fruit? If not, you do not fill your purpose nearly so well as the flowers we were just talking about. Hundreds and thousands of little boys have lived and died without bearing any fruit just because they were naughty to their comrades and disobedient to their parents. If you wish to be pretty and lovely flowers, OBEY YOUR PARENTS, love your little brothers and sisters and be kind to your playmates and to all whom you meet. Such things are most beautiful flowers and will produce such fruit as will never fail you. Be good children and you will hear from me again.

UNCLE HENRY.

ISAAC'S MISTAKE.

"Please, brother Isaac, won't you go with me after the cows?" asked little Peter Case of his elder brother. "They go in all directions," he continued, "and I have to run everywhere." "Don't bother now, Peter, I want to finish this book to-night," replied Isaac, "perhaps I'll get through in season to stop their going down after the apples though." "Oh! do, for that will help so much,' and Peter hurried away, for the sun was almost down and he feared to be late.

"You may bring in the chips, Susan," said Mrs. Case, "Isaac is very busy reading and I do not like to interrupt him. He'll be a wonderful man some day if he keeps at his books." So, while Isaac pored over the printed page the other children did the chores readily and without a shade of discontent, for Isaac was believed to be a rare genius, a wonderful prodigy, who took to learning as naturally as a duck to water.

"He doesn't seem interested in pigs or sheep or chickens, same as other children be," said Mrs. Case proudly, "but I do believe he'd read from morn till night week in and week out. I do hope his health won't give way, he's such a promising child. Some folks say 'tis hard, hard work to study, but for' me, our Isaac just likes it, he does. He'll 'stonish the world some time with his learning."

In short, the whole family for years cherished the fond hope that one of their number was to achieve greatness. The parents, as you may suppose, had not enjoyed the advantages of good instruction in their younger days, and later the cares of providing for physical wants gave little time for improvement, and as too often happens, that little was neglected. But times had bettered of late; books and papers were easily obtained, and they resolved that no expense should be spared to give Isaac a liberal education. The other children must be content with lesser advantages. Now Isaac shared in all the fond anticipations of future fame, yet if the truth must be spoken, he was of so indolent a disposition that he chose reading merely because it was easier to turn the leaves of a book than the sods in a potato patch. As his teachers did not perceive his extra scholarship, they were voted dull and commonplace, quite unable to guide and assist his soaring genius. So he was permitted to select his own books and study by himself as he pleased. But when little Peter would question him as to what was in some big book, he would either say, "You don't expect me to remember everything, do you?" or, "I can't explain it to a boy."

"But I can tell what I read about to day and explain every point in my lesson," persisted Peter.

"Pshaw? that's nothing," said lazy Isaac, "you only read a page while I have read hundreds."

"One thing well learned is better than a dozen passed over without any attention, my teacher says," replied Peter.

Isaac shrugged his shoulders, saying, "She doesn't know much, I guess.

But as the years rolled away, Peter, who could only be spared an hour or two a day from manual labor, in mental discipline and strength far outstripped his elder brother, who read continually without reflection. The books and papers he devoured without order or method would fill a whole library, but their contents were only stumbling blocks to real progress, and too late he learned that merely glancing at other men's thoughts, however learned or conclusive their arguments may be, will never make one either learned or wise, respected or esteemed.—School-day Magazine.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Editors:—As it is a great pleasure for me to read the PILGRIM, I will relate an occurrence, which, simple as it may appear, I hope will be worthy the attention of your readers. A young lady became convinced of the drawings of the Father which led her to consider the duties she owed to her Lord and Master. Being determined to accept the call, she made her wants known to her parents, which was a matter of great rejoicing to them. She then requests her mother to accompany her to her sisters, and as they were on their way, she noticed her brother in the field plowing and says:

"Mother, see yonder is my brother, may I go and talk to him?"

"Yes, daughter, you can go, but don't stay long."

She then goes to him and says:

"Brother, I have made up my mind to forsake my sinful ways and serve the Lord. I intend to be baptized, will you not go along with me?"

The brother at first seemed to give little heed to her appeals, but a sisters love cannot be put off as long as there is hope, so she followed him several times around his plot, telling him of her determinations and the duties she owed to her Lord, exerting all the influence she could command to get him to go with her, until finally he stopped his plow and said:

"Sister, your arguments are too strong for me, I must yield, I will go with you and aid you in fighting the battle of the Lord."

She then returned to her mother and said:

'Oh mother! I have gained my brother."

The mother, on this intelligence, was made greatly to rejoice and, no doubt, the angels in heaven were made to rejoice with them.

Thus dear young brethren and sisters, you can see what can be done when we exert our influence in favor of the blessed cause of our Master and for the salvation of souls.

Dear Pilgrim:—While items of interesting Church news are carried to the homes of our beloved brethren and sisters upon the pages of our periodicals, we desire also to have a little space that we may encourage others on the way as we have been encouraged by our brethren. On the morning of the 26th of April a snow was on the ground about two inches deep but as the sun arose the snow disappeared, and at 9 o'clock our beloved brethren and sisters gathered in groups in and around the Centre Meeting-house to hold the Annual Council. Bishops Conrad Kahler, George Irwin and John B. Shoemaker being present, council was commenced and immediately after dinner a choice for two Deacons was held, and the solemn responsibility of filling the duties of this office fell upon our beloved brethren Simon Peter Eby and Michael Gehman, who, after expressing their willingness, were installed into office. On the evening of the same day brethren Kahler and Shoemaker delivered each a short sermon–"that came from the heart and went to the heart." The meetings were continued on Sunday and Sunday evening, brother George Irwin also taking part in preaching with zeal and energy. Now the seed is sown and we look with earnest expectation and desire for the fruit thereof. "Paul may plant, Apollos may water, but it is God that giveth the increase."

Dear Pilgrim:—By your permission, I will present to your readers a few thoughts on the character and deportment of ministers, churches, &c. That there is a looseness of Christian principles manifested must be evident to all and there was never a time that the following advice given by Paul to Timothy is more needed.

I Charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word." Tim.—4: 1.

Here is a charge before God and the Lord Jesus Christ for every minister of Christ to preach the Word of God. Now let us see how many of the so called Ministers of God preach the Word, or how many of the members of the different Churches live up to God's holy law. Can any of them be told from the rest of the world by their daily walk and conversation? Can any man or woman go into one of their churches and pick out their member from the rest of their congregation? Do not the members dress in the very height of fashion and do their preachers tell them it is contrary to the will of God? "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but which becometh women professing godliness, with good works." If a person wishes to join their Church and be baptized, the minister will sprinkle, pour or immerse at their pleasure or convenience. Was Paul sprinkled, Peter poured and John immersed? They admit of three different baptisms but Paul says: "There is one God, one faith, one baptism. Eph.—Eph. 4: 5. Now, if there is only one, why do they preach three different baptisms? Paul says: Romans—6: 4. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism.

Again, they will have their festivals and buy and sell, have oysters and ice cream and sell things at auction and their ministers say it is right Christ says, in His Holy Word, Mat. 21: 12, 13, And Jesus went into the temple of God and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple. and overthrew the tables of the money changers and the seats of them that sold doves, and said unto them, it is written my house shall be called the house of prayer but ye have made it a den of thieves." They eat the Lord's Supper but do they wash the disciples feet? Why not? because it is stooping too low, it is not popular, it would be a disgrace to get down so low and wash a brother or sisters feet. "Who art thou, , O man that makes thyself better than God." Read John 13th chapter. Again, do they salute a brother with a holy kiss, or would it shame them? We are commanded to salute one another in several places in the Bible and why be ashamed of that which was commanded of God?

Dear brethren and sisters and all you that desire to live Godly lives, flee such doctrine and live righteously in the sight of God, for if we ever get to Heaven we must keep all of God's commands, 1 John—2: 4, "He that saith I know Him and keepeth not His commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him." And again, Jas. 2: 10, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all, therefore if we wish to live Christians in the sight of God and the Lord Jesus Christ, we must keep even the very least of his commands, love one another and lay aside all pride and vanity and foolish fashions of the world. 2 Cor.—6: 17, "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye seperate saith the Lord." Let us therefore dress ourselves and our children in modest apparel and in the fear of God, and let us take upon ourselves the whole armor of God that we may stand against the wiles of the devil. Let us strive to enter in by the door into the fold of Christ, for "he that climbeth up some other way is a thief and a robber."

In conclusion I will say, in the name of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, when you preach, preach the word, don't try to preach anything that is not in the Bible as the Gospel of Christ, but preach boldly against this so-called popular religion and the fashions of the world. Gal. 1: 8, "But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you let him be accursed."

Roanoak, Ill., May 4, '73.

Dear Pilgrim: For the first time I take my pen in hand to give you a little news from this part of God's moral heritage. Four weeks ago the brethren met at our meeting-house and organized a Sabbath school for the first time in this part of the country among the Brethren, and it is very largely attended, and there appears to be great interest taken in it by the brethren and the friends in general, and I must say we use the best of all books and that is the Bible. We object to those books, that are generally used in Sabbath schools, with those long stories and fables that never transpired. Our prayer is that our school will be a pleasant one, and that great success will accompany it, as we have a great many young people in this part of God's moral Vineyard, and thank the good Lord we had the opportunity, after meeting to-day, of going down to the water-side to attend to one of the ordinances of the Lord's house, namely, baptism. I just thought that many more might follow the same example and make the angels in Heaven rejoice as well as the saints on earth.

Now I must say in conclusion, I am well pleased with the Pilgrim so far as this is the first year I have taken it. It gives us a large amount of good instruction which if we will adhere to, will be good for us in time and eternity. Geo. W. Gish.

DIED.

ROW.—In the Vally River Congregation, near Bealington, Barbour Co., W. Va., our beloved sister Delila F. Row, aged 32 years.

Sister Row had been a member of the Church for 18 months, and during that time she lived a consistent Christian, walking in the laws of the Lord blameless. Her chief delight was to always be about her Father's business. Pleading for His word in its original order was one of her chief characteristics, and when sickness at last deprived her of attending public worship, she was not an idler in the Vineyard of the Lord, but when her friends and relatives would come to see her she would always make occasion to speak in behalf of her Master. Her last moments seemed to be her happiest ones. She plead with her husband, who is not a brother, to serve God, and so warm was her pleading that he promised to follow her example and serve his Master. Brethren pray that the promise may be realized. After complying with the last injunction by being annointed she expressed her willingness to go and her gentle spirit took its flight. Funeral sermon by the brethren from the words, "She hath done what she could," to a large and attentive congregation. She leaves a husband, eight children and many friends to mourn their loss.

J. W. FITZGERALD.

(Vindicator, please copy.)

ZAHN.—In the Fairview District, Ind, on the 11th of April, '73, our dear and well beloved sister Jennie Zahn, aged 30 yrs. 5 months and 20 days.

She had come to the Church from the entire outside world, and was a very faithful sister, made her home a place of hospitality and died in the true faith of the christian religion, leaving a dear husband and five children with many friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services from 1 Peter 1: 24-25, by the writer and others to a large concourse of people.

CRIPE.—In the North Fork, of the Wild Cat District, Ind., April 20, '73 brother Daniel Cripe, aged 57 years, 6 months and 10 days Funeral occasion improved by Isaac Billheimer and others from 2 Timothy 4:6-7-8, to a very large audience. He was a faithful watchman upon the walls of Zion in the second degree of the ministry. No doubt but that the Church will greatly feel his loss, but we sincerely believe their loss will be his eternal gain.

SAMUEL ULREY.

COFFMAN.—In the Manor Church, near Brethardsville, Md., April 28, 73, of Apoplexy, sister Lydia, wife of David Coffman, aged 64 years, and 13 days.

Thus an affectionate mother has been separated from a kind husband, and dear children, but we trust that those who are left behind will continue looking unto Jesus in their bereavement. She was a dear mother, and has always been regarded as one that was respected and beloved by all who knew her. She was a faithful sister in Christ, and finally fell asleep in Jesus.

Dear children, let faiths' consoling power.
Forever restrain your tears of love;
For who that witnessed my parting hour,
Could wish my enraptured soul from above.

ANDERSON.—In the James Creek Congregation, Pa., March, 13 '73, Nancy M., daughter of Anthony and Sarah Anderson aged 11 years, 5 months and 8 days. Funeral preached in the Bethel, April 27, by the Editor.

Nannie was a bright and hopeful little girl, much loved by her parents who greatly mourn their loss, though they have the blessed assurance that she has gone home to Jesus, who has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

HARMINSON.—Near Ogden, Champaign Co., Ill., Mary E., daughter of brother and sister Harminson, April 12, '73, aged 1 year, 3 months and 24 days. Funeral services by the brethren. J. H. MOORE.

How much we loved her, and how well;
God loved her too, and He thought best,
To take her home to be at rest.

A SAD DISASTER.

In glancing over our exchanges our attention was called to the Dixon, (Ill.) disaster which occurred Sunday, May 4th. We have not got the occurrence in detail, but from what we have we glean the following: Baptism was being administered in Rock river at Dixon where a large number had assembled to witness the ceremony. At this place there was an iron bridge across the river on which there were some three hundred persons witnessing the baptisms that was being administered just below, but in an unexpected moment part of the bridge gave way and the multitude were precipitated down into the river, many of them to fill a watery grave. At latest account it is supposed that there were between 90 and 100 lives lost.

To our mind, this sad occurrence has presented quite a chain of reflections. It is a notable fact that the ordinance of baptism administered by immersion is as a sign spoken against everywhere and when it is known that persons are to be thus baptized it generally insures a large crowd, a goodly percentage of which are scoffers. A bridge would be a very fair position for persons thus disposed, and the fact seems to be presented to our mind that many of those who met this sad fate might have been of this class. These impressions have forced themseles upon our minds from observations made at such baptisms. Our hearts have been pained at times when this sacred ordinance was performed, to notice groups of the vain, the gay and the scoffers taking the most prominent eligible position and there talk, laugh and scoff at those who were humble enough to be buried with Christ in holy baptism. Baptism to the prepared penitent is a passing from death to life but it makes us shudder to think what it may have been to some of those who were immersed by the precipitating of the bridge. Our imagination perhaps is too lively, but we can see so many faces changed from the scornful laugh to that of devilish despair, that we are inclined to think it may have been a judgment of God to warn a gainsaying world.

The pedo baptists were so desirous to get a case in which some person was drowned in being immersed that a number of imaginary ones were made. Here now are almost a hundred of real cases. Hundreds and thousands of both saints and sinners have lost their lives in this element, but of the millions that have been been baptized by immersion, not one real case of loss of life can be adduced. This thing of scoffing at the ordinances of God's appointment is a most heinous crime and it is a miracle of mercy that judgment is not meted out more frequently than what it is.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions we extract from the Minutes of the first district of Virginia, and think them worthy of being accepted by the Church generally. The time is here that we should make available, every practicable means of sowing, broadcast, the truth as it is in Jesus. A good religious literature freely distributed will have its effect and produce a copious harvest.

Whereas the District Meeting recognizes the importance of adopting more efficient measures to spread the doctrine of the Brethren, we do therefore advise:

1st. That the Elders of each congregation, by and with the consent of their congregation, appoint a committee of one Deacon whose duty it shall be to act as receiver and disburser of all funds voluntarily contributed for the purchase of the Brethren's publications and testaments.

2nd. That these publications be selected by the Elders, with the approval of their congregations, and distributed where the Gospel is imperfectly or altogether unknown as understood by the Brethren.

3d. That these distributions be made by the traveling ministry or any other safe or practicable means.

4th. That these books be sold at cost and when loaned or bestowed, the party so doing, will report to their congregation.

5th. That the several committees keep a record of their transactions and report annually to the District Meeting.

6th. That our Ministry be exhorted often to a more vigorous effort, to spread the Gospel, and that the congregations aid, encourage and assist them in so doing.

7th. That this District adopt these resolutions as instructed by Y. M. of 1871, Art. 7.

☞ The minutes of this D. M. can be had by sending 10 cts. to E'd. B. F. Moomaw, Bonsacks, Roanoke Co., Va.

POETRY.

THE TWO HERMITS WHO COULD NOT QUARREL.

Dwelt together hermits twain,
Simple men were they--
Part in prayer and part in toil
Spent they every day.

And they loved each other well--
Peaceful was their life--
Never knowing discontent,
Never knowing strife.

Spake one evening brother Paul,
"Surely you and I
Are most ignorant of men!"
"Tell me, brother, why?"

"All men, save ourselves, I know
Quarrel now and then;
Only we not knowing how,
Still in peace remain."

"Teach me," mild spake brother John,
"How to do my part:
I will then if you so wish,
Try with all my heart."

"Lo this brick," said brother Paul,
"Here I place in view,
And you stoutly must maintain
It belongs to you.

"I shall say that it is mine,
And if both can well
Do our part, there shall arise
Quarreling in this cell.

"Now we will begin—I say,
This is mine own brick;"
"Nay, I'm sure that it is mine,"
Cried the other quick.

"If 'tis yours," said Brother Paul,
"Take it if you will;"
Smiling when they saw that strife
Lay beyond their skill.

Saw that they must be content,
Ever to remain
'Mid the contests of the world
Ignorant old men.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

B. F. MOOMAW.

In resuming our sketch of the "royal craft" and presenting an analysis of its origin and operations, in following Masonry through its intricate, obscure and mystical workings, we discover that from the time at which we date its true origin as relied on by honest and intelligent Masons themselves, that is to say, in the year 926 or 4926th year of the world. It had its advances, and it had its reverses, sometimes more, and sometimes less flourishing. Following its path through the space intervening, and arriving at the time of the reign of James the second, we discover that Masonry was very much neglected, about this time. A. D., 1685 Sir Christopher Wren was elected to the office of Grand Master, who appointed Gabrael Cibleer, and Edward Strong his wardens, yet notwithstanding the great reputation and abilities of this celebrated architect, Masonry continued in a declining state for many years, and only a few lodges were held in different parts of the kingdom. Sir Christopher Wren continued at the head of the fraternity till king Williams death in 1702.

During the reign of Queen Anne, Masonry made no considerable progress, Sir Christopher's age and infirmities drew off his attention from the duties of his office, and the number of Masons considerably diminished. It was therefore determined that the privileges of Masonry should not be confined to operative Masons, but that people of all professions should be permitted to participate in them, provided they were regularly approved and initiated into the order.

The former privileges were still allowed to remain to the four old lodges then extant. In consequence of this the old masons in the Metropolis visited all their inherent privileges as individuals in the four old landmarks to be infringed. It is therefore, to this day a fixed principle in Freemasonry that there is to be no changes or innovations allowed in the order, and that in the initiation as a prentice, or, taking the degree of fellow Crast, as well as subsequent degrees, the initiated are pledged most solemnly to strictly observe these landmarks.

An assembly and feast was held in London on the 24th of June, 1719, when Dr. Dersaguliers was unanamously elected Grand Master, at this feast the old regular and peculiar toasts were introduced; and from this time we may date the rise of Freemasonry on its present plan, known as speculative Masonry. That we may better understand what is meant by speculative Masonry we will bear in mind, that under the term of operative Masonry, they claim extraordinary and superior architectural skill, in performance of which they use the compass, square, rule, plumb and level. The assumed object of speculative Masonry is building up, and beautifying the moral character of society, drawing conclusions from the symmetry of highly perfected architecture, to the cultivation of a high degree of moral refinement, for which purpose they introduce the working tools used in mechanical operations as emblems mystically to produce these results. The compass forsooth to limit our desires to those things that is useful, necessary and expedient, to restrain all excesses and all superfluous and hurtful indulgences. The plumb being used by operative workmen to try perpendiculars, and teaches speculatively that we should be truthful, correct and honest in our deportment. The square in their work teaches that we should square our lives by the rule of right, doing unto others as we would have them do unto us, and by the level we prove horizontals, by which we are reminded that although a crown may adorn the head, and a scepter in the hand, yet the blood in our veins is derived from the same Almighty Parent, and is no better than the humblest citizen, and teaches us that we are traveling on the broad level of time, to the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns.

The trowel, an emblem of the Master Mason, is an instrument operatively used to spread the cement by which the building is united into a common mass, but is symbolically used for the spreading the cement of brotherly love and affection, which is to unite us into one sacred band or society of friends and brothers, a temple of living stones, among whom no contention should ever exist, but that noble contention, or rather emulation of who can best work or who can best agree.

In connection with the mechanical tools Masons have introduced a number of emblems, such as the Lambskin apron, an emblem of innocence by which we are reminded that purity of life and conduct is essentially necessary to gaining admittance into the celestial lodge above, where the supreme architect of the universe presides.

The twenty four inch guage an instrument used by operatives to measure and lay out their work, is a symbol used speculatively to teach how properly and profitably to divide our time, a portion for secular employment, a second portion rest and refreshment and a third portion for devotion and the service of God. The common gravel or hammer used by mechanics to break off the corners of rough stones the better to fit them for the builders use, are used as a symbol by speculative Masons for the purpose of divesting our hearts of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds for the spiritual building, "that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Three pillars are erected also, in Masonic lodges as emblems of wisdom, strength and beauty, which is necessary to adorn all great and important undertakings The starry decked heavens, is with them an emblem indicating the aims and hopes of Masons that they may there arrive at last.

The Theological ladder which Jacob saw in his vision ascending from earth to heaven, the three principle rounds of which, are denominated Faith, Hope and Charity, which say they, "admonishes us to have faith in God, hope in immortality, and charity to all mankind. Among the emblems of Masonry are what are termed by them movable jewels called the rough Ashler, the perfect Ashler, and the Trestle Board, or what we would call the rough rock, the smooth rock, and the board for drafting, by which we shall be reminded of our rude and imperfect state of nature, that perfect state at which we may arrive by a virtuous education, our own endeavors, and the blessing of God. The rules and designs laid down by the master workman. So should we endeavor to erect our spiritual building agreeably to the rules and designs laid down by the Supreme Architect of the Universe, in the great book of nature and revelation, which is our spiritual and moral Trestle Board.

The Linets of Masonry, purports to be brotherly love, relief and truth. The cardinal virtues four in number temperance, fortitude, prudence and justice.

The principles proposed to be taught by these emblems, Tenets and Mottoes, are in themselves excellent, and are entitled to the denomination of virtue itself, and why? because they are of Masons who are men." Certainly not but because they are of God from Heaven, laid down upon his own Trestle Board the book of Revelation.

Masonry to make its beauties known,
Must mingle colors not her own.

We propose, therefore, to show that these emblems are unnecessary. Idolatrous delusive and deleterious in its tendencies to the interests of the soul. The necessity of them is wholly superceded by the fact that the principles that they propose to cultivate are all clearly taught in the Holy Scriptures, which is a sufficient rule but it is the only rule for our faith and practice.

The compass to teach us to limit our desires is unnecessary because we are taught in the Bible that we should "not covet our neighbor's house, our neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is our neighbors." Ex.—20: 17. Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children and walk in love as Christ also hath loved us and hath given himself for us." Eph.—5: 1.

But fornication and uncleanness or covetousness let it not once be named among you as becometh saints. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking nor jesting which are not convenient but rather give thanks. "For this ye know that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ or of God." Eph.—3: 5. "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is idolatry." Col. 3: 5 Coupling the scriptures with the history of our great matron in Eden's garden, lusting and then perpetrating the terrible act, that destroyed her own happiness and deluging all posterity in ruin and woe, without calling the mind to the numerous passages besides in which we are commanded and forewarned on this point, we will certainly conclude that it is enough to limit our desires and suppress extravagance, without introducing the compass or any such appliances.

In pursuing this train of thought, I beg leave to be permitted to call to mind the fact that we have set forth in the commencement of this treatise that for all that God designs for us to do and teach. He has been so lavish in his teachings, giving line upon line, and precept upon precept, &c., that for every willing mind there is quite a sufficiency to enlighten the mind, however inactive the intellect may be, with this truth constantly upon the mind of the reader we may be saved the herculean task of giving the many references that might be adduced and will therefore content ourselves with a few in each point

The plumb then is unnecessary because we are taught in the Bible that we should not lie nor steal, that if we do the devil is our father, and that he is a liar and the father of liars, and that all shall have their part with him "who loveth and maketh a lie." We are taught in the scriptures to be careful correct and to "provide all things honest in the sight of all men."

We have no need of the mechanics square, because we are commanded in the scriptures to do unto others as we would have them do unto us, and as an offset to envy we are commanded to "in honor prefer one another" The level to teach that all the children of men are in many respects parallel is superfluous, because the Bible teaches that "God made of one blood all men to dwell upon the whole earth and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation" "that we all came into the world one way and that we all will go out one way" and that "there is no respect of persons with God." Nor is there any necessity for the trowel, to impress the obligation to love the brethren or our neighbors for the command and exhortations and the denunciations upon, and connected with this subject is legion. Second only to the first and great commandment to love the Lord our God with all our soul, mind and strength, and indeed like unto it, to love our neighbor as we love ourself. To say more on this point would seem almost like an insult to the intelligence of the reader, we therefore forbear. The Lambskin as an emblem may be classed with the rest, because the life and character of Christ we have a perfect model of innocence, not only inoffensive in his behavior but sacrificed for a time the joys of heaven and the glory he had with the father, laid aside the robe of royalty took upon himself the form of a servant, suffered a life of sorrow and grief, privation and persecution, "bore our griefs, carried our sorrows, the chastisement of our peace was upon him and by his stripes we were healed." "Led as a sheep to the slaughter and as a lamb before his shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth," thus commending his love while we were his enemies, he died for us, and accordingly commanded us that "we should not return evil for evil but to return good for evil." If our enemy hunger feed him, if he thirst give him drink, and that we should not avenge ourselves of our enemies, but refer all to the arbitrament of him who holds in his hand the scale of justice accompanying our verdict with our earnest petition for clemency and pardon, with this array of light "from Heaven," where is the necessity of such appendages "from men."

THE SOURCE OF CHRISTIAN ENJOYMENT.

The subjects of Christ's purchased possession, as we have seen in our former article are "they that follow the Lamb withsoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. "And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God." John the Divine, in a vision, saw the bride, the Lamb's wife at the consummation of the marriage as a glorious scene delightful to behold; when the "voice of the mighty thunderings, proclaimed, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife has made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; (the emblem of purity, O, may not our departed innocent children be among the number; our heart rejoices, and our soul is enraptured with the pleasing tho't that they will be there), for the fine linen is the righteousness of the Saints. And he saith unto me, write "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, these are the true sayings of God. Brother, sister, would you like to be one of that number? O, yes, seems to be the language, then let us have our lamps brightly burning and our vessels well supplied with oil, ever ready to meet the bridegroom, lest we may be left behind. Trust in God, pray to him in the name of your Advocate, for he has commenced the work and will finish it according to the good pleasure of his own will. "Of his own will begat he us by the word of truth, that we should be the first fruits of his creatures." "Now he which establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath annointed us is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the spirit in our hearts." What more would we want? If the seal of God's Holy Spirit is stamped upon our hearts, and the love of God shed abroad into our souls; we can glory in tribulation, be cheerful in suffering, rejoice in persecution and delight in reproaches; feeling glad to be worthy to suffer for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ, esteeming the reproach of Christ's greater riches than the treasures and sinful pleasures of this ungodly world, having ever respect to the recompense of reward. Christians are pilgrims here, this is not their home, men have no continuing city here, hence they look for a city whose builder and maker is God. Such being the seekings of the children of God their hope of glory, their joy in the worship of God, their delights in the enjoyment and society of one another, their gladness in the knowledge of being the heirs of God, their happy prospect of being redeemed from corruption and in anxious anticipation of a glorious resurrection; and amidst all these enjoyments, they are patiently waiting; looking for the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ An appeal to you dear friends, outside of the fold of Christ; sinners, worldling, moral citizens, nominal professors, callous christians and backsliders, a warning voice declares loudly, you are on slippery grounds, your road is dangerous to travel, darkness and blackness surrounds you; your life is suspended on a tender little thread over a dreadful chasm, the gulf of despair ready any moment to swallow you up, and sink you down into the abyss of woe and everlasting misery. Where is your hope of serving the God of this world, the shrine of fashion? Is there any comfort in the attendency of the Bacchanalian feasts, or in the dancing-rooms, the tipling-houses, or any other places of sinful amusement? Would you wish to be found in hells of gambling, cursing, swearing, and blaspheming your lovely Savior's name when the iron clasp of death shall transport you from time to eternity? O, stop and think! Ponder well, reflect thou hast a soul to save, one that cannot die, that must ever live either in hell or in heaven. O, think of death and eternity! Remember every secret thing thought or action is known to him, who is to be your judge, and if unrepented will be made manifest in the day of judgment. God who made you, and who loved you, and gave his only begotten Son to redeem you by shedding his precious blood to save your undying soul, who has made known his will in the Gospel you have heard preached from time to time, who hath operated upon your soul by the spirit of His grace; that same God whom you have slighted, turned your back and trifled with his word, and whose ministry you have derided, slandered and evil-spoken of, and perhaps cursed, "that same God will be your judge at the dreadful day of the Lord." How shall or may you abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when he appeareth? "For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." This being the fearful fate of the ungodly; we as lovers of your souls urge you to speedily return, forsake your evil ways, turn to God. "Let the wicked forsake his ways and the unrighteous man his thoughts and let him turn unto the Lord for he is merciful, and to his God for he will abundantly pardon." A word to you my dear young friends, you are placed in this world for a noble purpose and you have the advantages of a Christian-like education, you have the privileges of learning to read, a talent is given to every one of you to make you a child of God, an heir of Heaven, by a proper improvement of that talent, you can, Apollo-like, become mighty in scripture; make yourselves well acquainted with the contents of the word of God, it is able to make you wise unto salvation, especially the practical part of the Holy Scripture. Discriminate well what you read, and be willing to obey the demands of the Gospel, be humble, prayerful, watchful, guard against the wiles of the enemy, mark well his artful devices, and shun the company and association of emmissaries, do not accompany them to their places of amusements, though they may be represented to you as innocent, yet depend upon it, there is poison in the bowl or death in the pot. Be not ashamed to separate yourself from the proud, the haughty, the wicked and gay, silly and light-minded. Come out from among them, it does not detract anything from your character, or honor, or esteem among sensible persons of a well balanced mind; and besides will afford you pleasure, in your dying hour, enjoyment in health, consolation in sickness, delight in death, admits you into glory and cause us to shine as the bright stars in the galaxy of Heaven. We are passing away and you are soon called to fill our station in life, therefore qualify yourself to fill that responsible station that the work of the Lord may be successfully carried on when we are dead and gone.

Finally, let us all do our duty that we all may meet in Heaven above, where all is love, where we never more need to part, where all the redeemed of the Lord shall meet with gladness, and forever bask in the beautiful smiles of their glorious Redeemer, and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes. Amen.

A NEW CREATURE.

Therefore if any man is in Christ he is a new creature, old things are passed away, behold all things are become new. 2 Cor. 5:17.

This language spoken by the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians is worthy of our every notice if we are not in Christ we are without hope and without God in this world and consequently we cannot participate with him in glory. It is clearly set forth in the Scriptures of divine truth that we are of a corrupt nature and are prone to evil. Our inclinations are such that will still draw us farther away from Christ, and in order to become new creatures we must undergo a great change, changed from nature to grace. As long as we are in an unreconciled state with God we are strangers to grace, our rational powers, we will very readily admit, are dreadfully impaired, and the soul weakened by sin. The animal passion is strong and corrupt and opposes the dictates of the spirit of God and in such a disordered state we cannot please God until we are created anew in Christ Jesus unto good works—born again as the Apostle says, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever. As long as the children of men are under the power or control of the carnal mind they are dead in trespasses and sin, and unless they become awakened to a lively sense of duty they will not make the necessary change in order to become new creatures. Paul would say to such, "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead and Christ will give thee light." Ephesians 5: 14. Paul says, "to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace, because the carnal mind is enmity against God, not subject to the law of God neither in deed can be, so then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Romans, 8: 6, 7, 8. Hence we understand that the carnal mind must be brought in subjection to the will of God, our carnal inclinations must be subdued and brought under the power and influence of the Holy Spirit. The Apostle says, "that ye put off the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lust, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and that you put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Ephesians 4: 22, 13, 24. Our former life and conduct must be changed, put off the old man with his deeds. So thorough and radical is the change that it is best described as putting off our former selves, having been made willing to hate and forsake sin, all the sinful pleasures of an evil world by repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Repentance always means a change of purpose, a godly sorrow that worketh a repentance unto salvation not to be repented of having within a living faith, a faith that works by love, throwing ourselves entirely upon the promises of God, believing that his grace is sufficient for us and that by making the right application of the blood of Christ our sins will be washed away and thus become new creatures in Christ. We here would ask the question, can this be done by repentance and faith alone? Some are ready to say, Yes, but we beg leave to differ with such for we do not understand it in that way. Remember the subject: "Therefore if any man is in Christ he is a new creature." We will bring up Paul about this matter, Romans 4: 3, 4, 5, 5. "Know ye not that so many of you as have been baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father even so we also should walk in newness of life, for if we have been planted together in the likenes of his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection, knowing this that the old man is crucified with him that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." As the death and resurrection of our Savior were both necessary to complete our redemption and salvation, our matured love of sin and inclinations to commit, which is represented in the old man must be crucified and buried. "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead, buried with him in baptism, by openly renouncing sin, publicly professing to hate and forsake it, risen with him from their death in sin, by believing on him, and thus experieneing in their own persons the same divine power which raised Christ from the dead and thus rise to newness of life. The apostle also says that as many of us as have been baptized into Jesus Christ have put on Christ, thus we see that by the believer being baptized we put on Christ and if any man is in Christ he is a new creature. It is sometimes said that we put too much stress on baptism, but it is the command of the Savior for he says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." We infer from this that the believer must be baptized in order to be saved from his past sins while it would not benefit an unbeliever though he were baptized he would yet remain in his sins. Much might be said about the utility of baptism yet notwithstanding it is an outward washing it has its inward cleansing. Peter says, "the like figure whereunto even baptism doeth now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh but answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." Let this suffice. We would say to all, search the Scriptures and whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it. Therefore if any man is in Christ he is a new creature, united to him by faith created in Christ Jesus unto good works, old things are passed away, our former views and feelings are changed, we enter a new field of labor where as we once delighted in the way of sin, we now delight in the law of the Lord, are willing to take the word of God for the man of our counsel. Behold all things are become new, we have new hopes and new prospects, the child of grace has new rules of action and persues a new course of conduct, having now obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine and being made free from sin become the servants of righteousness we have our fruit unto holiness and in the end, everlasting life.

CONTENTMENT.

Is there any one human being upon the face of the earth that is really contented and happy? The good book says, "A contented mind is a continual feast," and again it says; "Contentment with godliness is great gain." The rich are not contented because they have too much of this world's goods, and the poor are not contented because they think they have not enough of the things of this world. Money making seems to be the main object now a-days with rich and poor, old and young. St. Paul says, we ought to be contented with such things as we have. Those of us who are professors of religion are not contented with what we have. Those who have so much of this world's goods stored away in their houses, and who turn the poor away from their doors empty, are not contented because they have not done their duty. The Lord has placed us here as stewards over what he has given us, and if we do not our duty what will be our condition, what will be our doom when that great day of wrath shall come? And what will be the end of those who are yet out of the ark of safety? They are not contented, because they know their duty and do not do it.

SEEK not to isolate yourselves; imprison not your soul in sterile contemplation, in solitary prayer, in pretending to a grace which no faith not realized in works can enable you to observe. You can only save yourself by saving others. God asks not what have you done for your soul? but what have you done for the brother's souls I gave you? Think of these. Leave your own to God and his law. Labor unweariedly for others good. Such is the holiest prayer. —Mazzini.

THE CHURCH AND DUTIES OF HER MEMBERS.—No. 6.

BY J. S. FLORY.

ALL IN A BODY.

Having spoken of the members of the Church in their separate calling, we now, in this concluding paper, propose speaking to them in general terms as constituting the body of Christ, and God's family of children on earth. We learn that in the Church there are "diversities of gifts but the same spirit" "and there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord." "And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." Hence it mattereth not what be our gifts or calling, how we administer or what be the operation, we are all controlled by the same spirit, governed by the same Lord, and the same God "worketh within us to will and to do." Paul gives a beautiful illustration of the Church and the individual members being dependent on one another, &c., in the 12th chapter of 1 Cor., says he: "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body * * * have all been made to drink into one spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? and if the ear shall say, because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling. But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member where were the body. But now are they many members, yet but one body." Here we see the members constitute the body and those members God hath set in the body as it hath pleased him. Therefore we see all are necessary in their place to which God hath assigned them, whether they be in the laity or in some official position. The private member cannot say he or she is not of the body no more than the Bishop can say he is not of the body. Neither can one say we have no need of the other. The eye cannot say of the hand I have no need of thee; or the head to the feet I have no need of thee. All have need of the other that the body might be a body working together harmoniously through a concert of action on the part of the members. Paul further says, "much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary." Yes, often we see it those members who seem to be weak or backward in lending assistance to some new order of things, are necessary to keep the Church from rushing into some trouble or departure from the faith.

"God hath tempered the body together * * * that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one of another, and whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular."

If by one spirit we have all been baptized into one body, one member should have the same care for another. We know if the foot meets with an accident the hand will care for it, and if the hand suffers the whole body will be pained and there will be a corresponding sympathy throughout every member of the body. So it should be in the Church. If one member meets with a trouble, the sympathy of all should flow that way and do all that can be done to restore that one to a state of health and "comeliness." And if one is honored all should rejoice with it. But often it is feared there is not much rejoicing with some when one in the same station is praised and religiously honored and the name of Jesus through him glorified. Now as we all are members in particular of the body of Christ, let us feel our responsibilities and as "lively stones" work together, one with another that we may truly be "built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

Think of it, private members, much depends on you. Honor your standing by walking worthy of the vocation wherein you are called; honor those who have a rule over you, not with empty honors such as the world delights in, but honor them by being obedient to their rightful councils and admonitions that they give out of love for you and the Church. Did you know how often in secret prayer they call to God to bless you, and how often they spend sleepless hours and wet their pillows with tears because of some troubles in the flock, you would methinks, be more careful of your walk and ways. As a father loves his children so those that are over you love you. How it makes their soul glad to see you take up the cross and follow Jesus in that self-denying path—to see you in your seat at times of worship, and by your chasty conversation and godly walk manifest to all you have consecrated your life to the service of God. As a mother loves her darling babe or a father his obedient child so is the obedient member loved by those that have the charge over them. And the love of Jesus. Oh! how sweet to those that are his disciples indeed.

And ye Deacons of the Church of the living God! Think of the position you hold. Adorn your calling with the spirit of meekness and humility. And ye ministers who hold a commission from God to preach his everlasting word. "Preach the word, be instant in season and out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine." "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." And ye "stewards of the Lord's choosing that have in charge his people." "Be not many masters," nor "Lord it over God's heritage," but "be examples to the flock" which are to be fed by you, "taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind." And then "when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

One and all of the household of faith, let us labor together in love that the glorious principles of the religion of Jesus may be perpetuated, that hundreds and thousands more of Adam's sons may taste of redeeming love flowing so free from Calvary's brow. That crimson flood has not lost its power, the gospel is yet the power of God unto salvation to them that believe, but the number of the enemies of the cross is "legion." The dying groans of the Son of God is scarcely heard amid the din of a worldly religion The wreaking cross is almost hid by the shining mockery of a popular money-loving priesthood. But amid all the clamor made by "the devotees of Moloch" we can yet hear the pleading, loving voice of the Lamb of God whispering "Come unto me." "I am meek and lowly in heart." "Learn of me." Yes beloved, we must learn of Jesus or we will learn amiss Infidel hands would pluck the Christian ensign from the blood-stained standard and trail it in the dust of science. But nay, we must fling it to the breeze, for under no other banner can we hope to conquer. 'Tis the only banner of liberty for condemned souls. The Church of God has stood the storms of persecution for over 1800 years. We hope by the the grace of God her influence may never wane while time lasts. But let me say once more, much, very much depends upon our courage and valor as soldiers of the cross. Let us draw on the whole armor of God that we may successfully combat with error and innovations that we sometimes see looming up in battle array even at the very threshold of the Church. Would we maintain the honor of Jesus we must fight. Would we keep the Church as the Savior adorned it we must fight, would we come out conquerers in the end we must fight—fight the fight of faith. Satan is pressing hard, but the weapons of our warfare are "mighty to the pulling down of strongholds." By and by our warfare will be over, then when the smoke of battle clears away and we "lay our armor by" we will see the light of eternal day, and the shining splendors of a holier clime, —the soldiers home—the saints rest. Where the Church of God shall exist in the light of God's continuance and love as a rainbow encircles her forever and ever.

THE SAINT'S PROMISE.

Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Matt. 28: 20.

This was the parting address of the Savior. He was just about leaving his disciples corporeally, but not without first promising his spiritual presence to remain with them. Let us consider him as just upon the verge of entering upon his ultimate glory, taking his position upon the right hand of his Father and our Father—his God and our God. O, to have seen him! To have glanced at the features and emotions of his countenance just then. His great solicitude for his disciples on previous occasions must then have manifested itself with mingled sorrow and sympathy. He well knew what temptations, persecutions and torture awaited them. Thank God we can with the eye of faith, behold him at present as such; and hear him say, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The promise extends into the future, to the end of the world;—and not only to us, but to our children, to those afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God shall call. With this blessed assurance, let us also consider it as a demonstration of his divinity. Who less than God could have given such a promise? He does not say my blessing shall be with you, but I am with you. This necessarily supposes omnipresence. How else could he be with so many individuals at one time in the various parts of the earth? He not only left the promise of his presence with us individually, but also collectively. While he was at Capernaum, and but a short time after his transfiguration, he said, where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." As to place, he does not designate. In our private houses he is with us as well as in the sanctuary, in the grove as well as in the field. Neither does he designate as to time; for he is the same yesterday, to-day and forever." But as to manner he says, in my name. The number of the assembly, however small, is nothing to him; but to be gathered together in his name is very essential. If we have any objects in view aside of worshipping in the spirit and in truth, it is not in his name. Our affections must be set upon things in heaven, not upon things on the earth. All temporal thoughts should give place to spiritual meditation. His presence wherever we meet, will then be in the midst of us. There is always something impressive in the company of human beings, especially if some distinguished personage is present.

Think of Jesus, the Master, being present whenever his saints are assembled. "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them who are about him. "Nothing short, but God with us," not corporeally but spiritually. When we enter the sanctuary, we place ourselves immediately under his view. Let us then guard against wandering thoughts, drowsiness, formality, or hypocrisy. Let it impress us with the importance and sacredness of divine worship. Let it stimulate us to make use of the means of grace vouchsafed to us. Some think it needless to repair to the sanctuary, because the minister is unable to tell them more than they already know. This is very questionable. If granted, do you know more than your Master? Are you so holy that you need no further blessings? We should not only go because the minister is there, but because the Savior himself is there, whose sufficiency is divine. O, what a privilege, to hold sweet converse, and that he can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities. If we are indifferent to the David's gracious presence here on earth, what right have we to expect his glorious presence in heaven? But if we have his presence here; at death we shall only remove to his temple above, where tribulation and poverty, pain and anxiety, persecution and oppression will be no more; and where all tears shall be wiped away from our eyes. There we shall be before the throne of God, and bask in the sunshine of eternal glory; with Jesus as our companion, and God as our King, who is King of kings and Lord of lords, and whose palace is the universe.

THE CITY OF OUR GOD.

And the city was pure gold like unto clear glass. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones &c. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, every several gate was of one pearl, and the street of the city was pure gold as it were transparent glass. And he showed me a pure river of water of life clear as crystal proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

Such, dear reader, is a part of the description of the holy city which as given by John the Revelator in the 21st and 22nd chapters of Revelations, and it is this city that we may all become heirs to and inhabitants if we are only willing. Dear reader, think for one moment, are we not willing to comply with the will of our heavenly Father and become an inhabitant of such a beautiful place as this, and even more than this, for we are told "that eye hath not seen ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the joys the Father hath prepared for them that love him. Can we not, will we not love such a kind Father who has prepared all this for such unworthy creatures as we. Think, dear reader were such a place to be obtained in this world would we not strive with all our power to obtain an inheritance in it which would only continue for a season, and is this not worth far more which will continue through an endless eternity, and the terms are easy through which we can obtain an inheritance in this happy place, for he says, "My faith is easy and my burden is light." Friendly sinner, think of your condition, should the messenger death call you now where is your hope for eternity? Do you know why you stand where you are trying to satisfy yourselves with the fleeting pleasures of this world?

What are the pleasures earth affords,
How transient and how few,
Compared with heavens eternal joys,
And pleasures ever new.

Dear sinners, let me entreat you as one that loves your precious souls, fly, Oh, fly for refuge to the arms of a merciful Savior, who will receive all who come to him and give you an inheritance in the city of our God.

A CHILD'S REVERIE.

A little girl I am indeed,
And little do I know;
Much help and care I yet shall need,
That I may wiser grow;
If I would ever hope to do
Things great and good and useful too

But even now I ought to try
To do what good I may;
God never meant that such as I
Should only live to play,
And talk and laugh, and eat and drink
And sleep and wake, and never think.

Then let me try each day and hour
To act upon this plan:
What little good is in my power,
To do it while I can.
If to be useful thus I try,
I may do better by-and-by

YOUTHFUL CHARITY.

There is nothing so lovely among children as the exercising of charity. It has such good effects that I am persuaded that a short chapter on it will be both interesting and useful to my young readers.

There are so many ways of practicing this grace that I shall not atempt to tell all of them as there is scarcely an hour of your lives pass but what you can have an opportunity of practicing it. I just now remember of a little occurrence which happened last Winter which I will relate. This will show you one way of being charitable.

A little brother and sister, on their way to school, were overtaken by a snow-storm and being thinly clothed, they soon became chilled and cold. The little sister being the oldest, had a cloak along which properly belonged to her, as mother made it expressly for her use. Now if this little sister would have had no charity she would have folded it all around herself and left the little brother shiver in the cold wind, but she had learned to be charitable and therefore offers to share it with her brother. She offers to wrap it around them both, but the little brother thought it was not large enough to cover them both, and rather than rob his sister of her comforts he would stand the storm, but the sister says, "Come brother, it will be large enough for us both, I will stretch it a little."

Was not that noble? Stretch it a little, how many things, dear children, you might stretch a little for the comfort of your little brothers and sisters! It proved sufficiently large for both and under that cloak two warm and loving hearts were protected and kept snugly warm until the storm was over, when they could go on their way greatly benefitted just because they were charitable.

I hope my little readers will often think of stretching a little, their comforts so the others also may enjoy them.

No matter what you may have, If your little brothers and sisters could be made happy by sharing it with them, stretch it a little and give them part and you will always find it large enough, and you will feel much better than if you had enjoyed it all yourself

UNCLE HENRY.

"DIDN'T THINK."

Susie "didn't think," and so she put a scuttle of coal on the stairs, and it was the cause of her little brother's falling and injuring himself very severely. Days of suffering and months of protracted weakness were the result of that one moment of thoughtlessness. O, if she could only recall the past!—Such was her distressing exclamation when too late. She became a thoughtful girl after this, which simply proved that she might have been so before and it was sad to her to think that it should have required so painful an accident to teach her, when she could have become so without all this suffering to her brother. Lawrance "didn't think to leave a letter in the post-office for his sick father on his way to school, although reminded by his mother; and the delay of a few hours was the means of a heavy loss of property.

But why blame a boy for forgetting, or a girl for not always being thoughtful? Because boys and girls of the ages just mentioned—from eleven to fourteen—are old enough to take a little thought, to consider what will be the consequence of a slight carelessness or a moments forgetfulness. It would not hurt them to try to acquire habits of thought and consideration; besdies, this might save much suffering to themselves and others. It is better to take a little pains now, and avoid much misery hereafter.

"Didn't think" has burnt houses and steamboats, and even cities, thereby destroying many valuable lives. The thoughtless throwing of a cigar or matches among combustible materials, the firing of a cracker among such has caused great conflagrations. In this way the city of Portland was set on fire, and millions of dollars worth of property destroyed thereby.

"Didn,t think" may be called guilty of manslaughter,; since this reckless character has sent hundreds of souls without warning, into eternity; although never intending to commit crime. That imperfect boiler ought to have been attended to long ago, but Mr. "So and so" "didn't think," and the result is the loss of hundreds of lives. That railroad switch ought to have been sooner replaced, or that signal hoisted; but the man 'didn't think,' and his fellow creatures are hurled out of life by the score, as well as life-long suffering entailed on many of the survivors.

Beware of entertaining for a moment that disreputable personage "didn't think." He is often found in companionship with that lawless character. "Don't care," and the two combined may work irreparable ruin and misery beyond the power of conception, causing an unutterable wretchedness to thousands who, but for them, might have had much happiness.—Bright Side.

GOD'S BLESSINGS. — God often reproves our want of faith by bringing us blessings sooner than we expected. A man has concluded that at such a time he will receive something he greatly craves, or that it will come upon the occurrence of some event. But God sends the blessing sooner. He does not wait for the event. It is His own time, and He has brought it about in his own way; but it is also in reproof of the limiting faith which hampered the prayers with conditions and circumstance. Earnest, eager Christians have looked forward to the conversion of their friends, making it depend on some contingency; but God supercedes their plannings by gracious arrangements of his own. How it should deepen our trust when he does better for us than we know how to ask or think!

There is but one breath of air and beat of the heart between this world and the next.

THE GREAT GEYSER SPRINGS OF CALIFORNIA.

I will now give you a sketch, or short history, of the Geysers according to promise, as I see you request it. These celebrated springs are situated in Sonoma county, and as a natural curiosity, there is no part in the United States that can compete with them. The scenery is mild, picturesque and grand in the extreme. The Plutoo or Sulphur Creek runs through i s whole extent, and on the north side is the wonderful Geyser Canon and all the celebrated Geysers or medicinal springs which render this place such a wonderful curiosity. Among the natural, is an eye water that has effected some extraordinary cures, also soda water, sulphur and acidolated springs in both a cold and boiling state. Descending from the hotel about 75 feet, we first meet the spring of iron, sulphor and soda, temperature 73 degrees from Fahr. The first spring going up the Geyser gulch is the tepid Alum or Iron, temperature 97 degrees. Twenty ft. from this we pass the Geyser Bath, temperature 88 degrees and containing amonia epson salts, magnesia, sulphur, iron &c. Higher up is the spring of boiling alum and sulphur. This has a temperature of 155 deg., so also the black sulphur, quite near it. The epson salts springs has a temperature of 146 deg., and within six feet is a spring of iron, solphur and salts at boiling point, then comes the boiling black sulphur spring roaring and tearing continually. We wander over rocks, heated ground and thick deposits of sulphur, salts ammonia, tartaric acid, magnesia, &c., then we come to the witch cauldron, it is over 7 feet in diameter and of unknown depth, and is boiling just as hard as it can. The contents are thrown two or three feet high in a state of great chullition and very black looking, and the steam that rises from it looks like it might be from a large mill or machine shop. It is one of the most frightful looking places I think I ever beheld, approaching as near as we dare, and looking in, we could see the black waters boiling and tearing in mad and pitiless fury, foaming around the sides of their prison. We put some eggs in a can and made it fast to a pole and held them in the cauldron nearly five minutes and they were cooked quite hard, and we were very much overheated ourselves in the operation for the steam would almost completely cover us sometimes, and from a hundred vent holes above our heads the steam would rush out in terrible jets. The ground where we were standing was so heated we could scarcely stand on it, I never beheld anything so awful in its appearance, its temperature is said to be about 500 degrees. Opposite the witches cauldron is a boiling alum spring, and near by, is a scalding spring, from which issue streams and jets of boiling water, sometimes throws the water 15 ft.

The next great curiosity is the steam b at Geyser, sounding just like a steam boat blowing off steam. Just above this the gulch divides, up the left or western one, are many hot springs, 150 ft above apparent action, is found a smooth plastic beautiful clay, temperature 167 deg. From this point we could overlook the ceaseless action, the roar, steam, groans and bubbling of a hundred boiling medicated springs, while the steam ascends many feet above them all, following the usually traveled path, we pass over the Mt. of Fire with its hundred orafices, thence through the Alkali Lake, then we pass cauldrons of black sulphurioos boiling water, one white solphur spring quite clear and up to boiling point. Over most all the ground we traveled, magnesia, alum, salts, tartaric acid, nitre, iron and sulphur abounded. At a thousand places there was hot scalding steam escaping and forming beautiful deposits of sulphur crystals.

Our next visit carried us up to the pluton, past the ovens, hot with escaping steam. We also come to a soda and iron spring 15 feet by 8 and 12 feet, above is cold soda and iron, strong tonic not very invitiog, temperature 56. It is 12 feet by 5 and affords a large sopply. The pluton in the shade was 61 degrees with fine pools for bathing, and a little way above was nice for trout fishing. There are a great many springs of which I cannot speak. There is one red paint spring. It is a nice paint, we brooght some away, then there is another called the devil's ink stand. The black liquid is boiling up all the time and is sufficiently black for writing purposes, I have written letters with it. There is one spring that has splendid tasted water, by adding a little sugar it just tastes like lemonade. There is one place in the side of the canon, near the cauldron that sounds just like a machine shop in operation. It makes a great noise and is called devil's machine shop, I do not know why they give such names. The Indian springs are nearly a mile down the canon. This is the old medicated spring where many a poor Aborigine has been carried over the mountains to have the disease driven out of him by these powerful waters. On its outer wall, rons a cold stream of pure water, temperature 96 deg., and another impregnated with iron and alum, it is beautifully and romantically situated. We have mentioned nothing like all the springs, we pass some at almost every step. They have a whistle attached to one of the springs that is continually blowing off steam and can be heard three miles and is only a small whistle too.

You need not think that desolation, fire and brimstone reign supreme. One of the wonders of the place is, that grass, shrubs and huge trees grow on the very edge and even overhang the seething cauldrons below. The most varied wood abound there, oak, pine, sycamore, laurel, willow, alder and madrone. The scenery is very fine, I wish I could do jostice to the subject of which I am writing about. I have been there twice and then did not see near all the curiosities. I believe a person could spend weeks there and still find something new. One great feature of the Geysers are the hills of crude sulphur for chemical manufacturies, such as gun powder, sulphuric acid, &c., of which it is said half million tons are consumed annually. We visited the great sulphur banks also, quite a distance from the Geysers. That was quite a curiosity, sometimes it takes fire and the flames shoot up very high and is very grand to behold.

WHY IS IT.

Why is it that the brethren and sisters are allowed to use the affirmation, when Christ teaches us in his sermon on the mount: "But I say unto you, swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne, neither by the earth, for it is his foot stool, neither by Jerusalem for it is the city of the great King, neither shall thou swear by thy head because thou canst not make one hair white or black, but let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." Matt. 5: 34, 35, 36, and James 5: 12, says; "But above all things my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by earth neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay, lest ye fall into condemnation."

Now I would suppose the affirmation would be one of the "any other oaths that the apostle speaks of, which, I claim is merely a modified oath, and just as binding as the real oath. Then why not let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay?

Why is it that some of our brethren pray for kings and rolers that are in authority, that they might enact such laws that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all Godliness and honesty? 1 Tim. 2: 2. Why not pray for their conversion, that they might obey the divine law? In the 1st verse of the 9th chapter we are told to pray for all men, and in the 4th and 5th we see; "For this is good and acceptible in the sight of God our Savior, who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." Let the kings and those that are in authority make their laws and we will be sobject to the law for so we are commanded to be subject and not pray for them to enact &c., but pray for their cooversioo.

DISTRICT MEETING OF MIDDLE PA.

On last Friday evening we had the pleasure of a call from Daniel Keller and Daniel Hollinger. Though the weather was unpropicious and the roads extremely muddy, we had a pleasant and interesting little meeting in the Church,—next morning according to their arrangement they left us to remain with the brethren at Clover Creek over Sunday. For Saturday evening we had the promise of brethren John Spanogle and J. R. Lane to be with us, but in the evening we were pleasantly disappointed by Bros. D. F. Good and J. P. Larew stepping into our home. Notwithstanding the bad roads, the meetings were well attended and the congregation well entertained by the four above named brethren.

On Monday morning we all took the train for the District Conference to be held at Clover Creek. After a pleasant walk across Taurus mountain we landed at Bro. J. W. Brumbaugh's who resides only a few rods from the church. After dinner we were favored with a horse and went over to Martinsburg to make a short call at the Echo office, where we found Mr. Lehman, our former help in the PILGRIM office, but now proprietor of the Echo, in the best of spirits and quite hopeful of his enterprise. Mr. Lehman is a man of good moral worth and the citizens of Morrisons Cove should study their own interests and give him a liberal support.

In the evening we returned to the church again where we met quite a number of delegates and others who had gathered to attend the meeting. As the brethren there had decided to have no public preaching that evening we had a meeting composed principally of ministers and those living in the immediate neighborhood. Preachers preaching to preachers proved to be quite interesting and many felt that it was good to be there.

On Tuesday morning after some appropriate remarks by Bros. Grabill and Isaac Myers, the meeting was opened by prayer and organized by the last years officers. An election was then held for the ensuing officers with the following result : Grabill Myers, Moderator. George Brumbaugh Clerk. and H. B. Brumbaugh Assistant Clerk. Out of the 24 churches of the District. 22 were represented in person, one by letter and one not represented.

There was not much business before the meeting, and what was there was principally all of such a character as had been acted upon by A. M. This not being of a general interest we shall not burden our readers with notes. There was one move made in the right direction in which we feel interested, and hope it may prove a success. Altoona is said to be a field of promiso for gathering a congregation. The brethren have been preaching there for some time and report an increasing interest in the meetings but they have no house, and the house in which they now worship can be had only for a short time, therefore there must either be a house purchased or built, or the meetings must stop. The place lies between two congregations and they do not feel able to build a house unless they can get assistance, and as the members residing there and those interested in the meeting are not from these districts alone, but from surrounding districts both East and West a large number of these being brethren's children, it was tho't proper and advisable to call upon the whole Middle District of Pa., to assist in building a house, accordingly, it was presented to the delegates of the D. M., and arrangements made to make an effort in that direction. The move was favorably received by the meeting. The delegates were called upon to express their sentiments in regard to the matter and, with a few exceptions, all manifested a willingness to do what they could by presenting the case before their several churches and then report the result. For this purpose, George Brumbaugh, Grafton P. O. Huntingdon Co., Pa., was appointed as the person to whom all reports are to be sent. Each church or individual member, is to report, between this and the first of July, how much they are willing to give, but no money to be sent until it is known that the move will be a success. John Spanogle, J. W. Brumbaugh and P. S. Myers are appointed as an investigating committee, whose duty it is to determine on the proper location, plan and size of the house and appoint a building committe if the house is to be built.

Now brethren, this is an important matter and we hope that every church will take the matter to heart and act as if souls were at stake which undoubtedly, is the case. Because you have one to build at home is no reason that you should not aid in this. We are only a small congregation, only in moderate circumstances, built a church last Summer, are building one this Summer and yet expect to do our share in this. Brethren, we do not boast, but we believe that the money which we lend to the Lord, is the best investments that we make.

Another important move was made at the meeting in sending Leonard Furry and J. W. Brumbaugh on a mission to fill a call from Crawford Co., Pa. The meeting was one of considerable interest and everything passed off pleasantly and with the best of feelings.

MINUTES of the Middle District of Pa., can be had of us at 10 cents per single copy, or 60 cents per dozen, post paid.

OUR ARRANGEMENT.

Our brethren of James Creek had intended appointing a Communion Meeting with the expectation of having our Eastern brethren stop with us on their way to A. M., but as the time that we would have preferred holding our meeting was taken by the brethren East of us, we have concluded to have no Communion services, but have appointed meeting at the James Creek Church for Saturday evening to be continued over Sunday, hoping that our brethren will still make arrangements to stop with us. By coming this far on Saturday, (May 31), the place of A. M. can be reached by Monday evening. By noticing the "Time Table" on eighth page you can see the connection of trains at Huntingdon. Those who intend stopping off will inform the conductor of their intention so that they may have their tickets attended to. This can be done when he calls for the tickets. For convenience we will make arrangements to have the evening train of May 31 stop at the church. Our brethren will please remember this arrangement as we will be pleased to have all stop who feel like giving us a call.

CHRIST IN THE GARDEN.

SELECTED BY MOLLIE UMBAUGH.

While nature in stillness was sinking to rest,
The last beam of daylight shone in the West;
O'er fields by moonlight, my wandering feet,
Sought in meditation some lonely retreat.

While passing the garden, I paused to hear
A voice faint and plaintive from one that was there;
The voice of suffering affected my heart,
While in agony pleading the poor sinner's part.

In offering to Heaven his pitying prayer,
He spoke of the torments the sinner must bear;
His life as a ransom He offered to give;
That the sinners redeemed in glory might live.

I listened a moment, then turned me to see
What a man of compassion this stranger could be;
I saw him low kneeling upon the cold ground,
The loveliest creature that ever was found.

His mantle was wet with the dew of the night,
His locks in the sunbeams were glistening bright;
His eyes, bright as diamonds, to Heaven were raised,
While angels in wonder stood around him amazed.

So deep were his sorrows, so fervent his prayer,
That down o'er his bosom rolled sweat, blood and tears;
I wept to behold him, I ask him his name,
'Tis Jesus, he answered, from *He*aven I came.

I am the Redeemer, for thee I must die;
The cup is most bitter, but I cannot pass by;
Thy sins like a mountain are laid upon me;
And all this deep anguish I suffer for thee.

I heard with deep sorrow the tale of his woe,
While tears like a fountain of water did flow;
The cause of his sorrows to hear him repeat
Affected my heart, and I fell at his feet.

I trembled with horror, I loudly did cry,
Lord, save a poor sinner! Oh, save or I die!
He smiled when he saw me and said to me "live!
Thy sins which are many I freely forgive."

How sweet was the moment he bade me rejoice,
His smiles, O how pleasant, how cheering his voice!
I fled from the garden and spread it abroad,
I shouted "salvation! Oh glory to God!"

I'm now on my journey to mansions above,
My soul's full of glory, of light, peace and love;
I think of the pardon, the prayer, and the tears
Of that loving stranger who banished my fears.

The day of bright glory is rolling around,
When Gabriel descending the trumpet shall sound;
My soul, in rapture to glory shall rise,
To gaze at the stranger with unclouded eyes.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD.

What is Safe and what is not Safe; What is Right and what is not Right.

BY J. H. MOORE.

CHAP. VII.—Trine Immersion.

It seems neither reasonable nor necessary that we should be called upon to settle the question, whether trine immersion is either right or safe (?) there are but few if any who, doubt this. The main difficulty is not about trine but single immersion.

Among the unlearned the question is, what was the apostolic method? But not so among the learned immersionists, all their able writers, with only a few exceptions among modern critics, agree that the apostles and their immediate successors practiced a three-fold immersion. Nor are they alone, all the ancient writers, without one single exception known to me, who speak of the primitive method of baptizing, state it to have been trine immersion; about this there is no dispute, all the controversy has been about the antiquity of single immersion.

The origin of trine immersion, no man either modern or ancient, has ever found this side of Christ. You may as well try to find the origin of Christianity itself this side of Jesus as to try to find the introduction of trine immersion this side of the same period. But not so with single immersion, no man on earth can more clearly trace Mahommedanism to its early fountain head, than we can trace single immersion to its very beginning near the middle of the fourth century. Even those that first used it knew that it was not of divine authority. And how has it came down to us? I answer through the Roman Catholic Church, who claims to herself the prerogative to change, create and abolish ordinances at her pleasure. Why did she adopt this human invention? Tell me why she adopted sprinkling and pouring, and then you have a key that unlocks the entire mystery.

This method of baptizing, like many other errors, has found its way into many, if not the majority of modern churches, and some now claim for its authority the teachings of the apostles. And even a majority of those who patronize the single immersion, do not doubt the validity of the three-fold immersion, knowing that in it is embodied all the elements that can possibly be connected with the form of Christian baptism. Let the commission given by Christ, and recorded by Matt.—28: 19, teach what it may, either single or trine immersion, there is no sane man on earth who will say that trine immersion does not contain all that is therein taught.

I have yet the first man to find who contends that trine immersion does not meet all the demands of the commission, all the trouble has been in trying to get single immersion to meet all the demand which the commission requires. About trine immersion doing the work there is no dispute, then this is safe, whether the other is or not. If I take a candidate into the water and say "I baptize thee into the name of the Father," [then dip him], "and of the Son," [dip him] "and of the Holy Ghost" [dipping him the third time,] there is no man who would say that I did not do just what I said I would? Will any one say that the candidate was not "baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" about this there is not nor can there be one particle of dispute. This we know is right, it can't help but be right. But if to the contrary I should say "I baptize thee into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" then dip him, it is questioned whether I have done just what I said I would do. If in the former case I did what I said I would, then in the latter I did not. If in the former I obeyed the commission, in the latter case I violated it. No one will say that I did not do precisely what I said I would in the former case, and in the latter case I used precisely the same words, but acted differently. The former we know is right, but all the doubts in the whole matter are about the latter. The former we know is on safe ground, but all the doubts in the entire matter are about the latter being on safe ground. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

As early as nine years after the death of Christ we have an account of a church in Antioch, and this body of Christians continued the apostolic method of baptizing till long after the close of the fourth century, and during this entire period has never been known to practice anything but trine immersion. Chrysostom was one of the most learned bishops that Antioch ever boasted of, and he tells us that "Christ delivered to his disciples one baptism in three immersions," when he gave to them the last commission. He was a native Greek scholar, and fully competent to examine and determine the meaning of the Greek commission. It is then a settled fact that trine immersion was preached in Antioch; about this there is no uncertainty, all the difficulty in the whole matter has been in trying to find single immersion there. In all my reading and researches of antiquity, I must state that I have not found one single instance of single immersion in this Church of antiquity, nor do I believe that any one else has. While this is true respecting Antioch, the same may be affirmed of Cesarea, where trine immersion still prevailed in the fourth century. But we are not yet through with this matter of antiquity; there is more weight attached to this than is generally presumed by the careless thinker. The church at Jerusalem the mother church of the whole world, was founded by Christ and the apostles, and I here remark as a matter of fact that in all antiquity they have never been known to practice single immersion, while the three-fold immersion has always been the prevailing practice at that place.

Cyril a learned bishop of Jerusalem, was born only 215 years after the death of the apostle John, and he declares that they at that time used trine immersion in Jerusalem. There is then no trouble about finding trine immersion in the first church organized by Christ and the apostles, the only trouble has been in some fruitless attempts to find single immersion there. About trine immersion being practiced in all the leading churches there is not one particle of doubt, all the doubts are about single immersion. Even the church at Rome continued the practice of trine immersion till after the sixth century, while the church at Milam continued it much longer, and it was the general practice all over the Christian world till the seventh century. The Catholic church in the west, did not adopt the single immersion till A. D. 633, while on the eastern part of christendom never would consent to a change. When the new method appeared the candidate was baptized into the name or death of the Lord Jesus only, and not "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. All from the least to the greatest knew that the commission taught trine immersion; and in those times the commission was regarded as an unanswerable argument in support of this method. This can readily be discovered in the writings of Tertullian, Chrysostom, Monulus, Jerome and Theodoret, all of whom state that the commission teaches a three-fold immersion. However in course of time some of the Eunomians seemed to have changed their formula, and "baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," by dipping once only, although it was a glaring perversion of language, still during the dark ages the people in part became accustomed to it, so that when the reformation commenced it did not appear so ridiculous as at first. Although as a method of baptizing it did not become general till after A. D. 1517, it soon found its way to the Baptist churches, and has by them been nourished even till our time. Right here is a fact worth knowing by all, and that is the Campbellite Church has received her method of baptizing directly from the Baptists. Campbell was formerly a member of the Baptists and when he ushered into existence his reformatory movement, instead of adopting the apostolic method, which consists in dipping the candidate three times face forward, he incorporated the Baptist method, which was never practiced by any of the churches established by Christ and the apostles. Perhaps there are many of them who are not aware of this painful fact, and when informed that their method of baptism is not yet 400 years old, are struck with perfect amazement. It is therefore high time that every member in the Church, be up and doing. Labor to restore Christianity to its primitive order; preach the entire gospel everywhere, and give the people not only a chance to believe but to obey it.

Single immersion by a backward action is being spread all over our entire land, under the name Christian Baptism, when the facts in the case teach us that it lacks more than 1200 years of being old enough to reach the apostolic age. Several attempts have been made to trace immersion to the apostles, but nearly the entire journey from the reformation, has been performed upon the royal highway of trine immersion, blot this from the facts of antiquity and immersion ceases to have an existence beyond the middle of the 4th century, and sprinkling and pouring remain in everlasting possession of the contested field.

The formula of baptism, "baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," as it stands recorded by Mathew is very elleptical, and, filling up the ellipsis will read as follows, "Baptizing them into the name of the Father, and baptizing them into the name of the Son, and baptizing them into name of the Holy Ghost." This is what Paul calls "one baptism" or as the Greek has it "one dipping" not one dip but dipping; this is the true meaning of the Greek baptisma, and was so intrepreted by the ancient Greeks, in whose mother tongue the New Testament was first written. In the commission there are three distinct names—Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and it is into these three distinct names that we are to be baptized, which possibly cannot be done short of three distinct actions. About being baptized into these three distinct names with three distinct actions there is not one particle of dispute, all confess it can be done, none say it cannot, this then is not only safe but right, and all the difficulty and trouble has been in trying to baptize a person into three distinct names with one action, on this hang all the doubts connected with the whole subject. In the former case there can be no uncertainty, neither can it be doubted, but the latter is where men's faith and understanding fail them.

No one who has ever been lawfully baptized by trine immersion is dissatisfied with his method of baptizing, none doubt it being either right or safe, all the doubts come from the man who has been baptized by single immersion, he is the one who doubts the validity of his method, if there are any doubts at all. All concede trine immersion to be a good baptism, hence it is safe, and not only safe but right. It is so good in the estimation of people in general, that they will patronize it in their own Churches. No one of any note doubts its validity, all the doubts are about single immersion.

SAUL VERSUS PAUL.

We first get acquainted with this man from the 7th chapter of Acts of the apostles, at a time when there was a great persecution of the followers of Jesus Christ, some time after the mission of Christ was ended on earth, and the will of Heaven made known to man. Introducing this kingdom was a mighty work, and was especially intended for the benefit and restoration of man to his primitive glory and enjoyment. The rules and regulations laid down, were so different and so at variance with the customs of the people that it caused quite an excitement among them, although having received their authority from Moses, their Lawgiver, who was authorized by the Most High God to deliver to them a law which was to govern them until the time propheeied for the coming of the Messiah. But they became so wise in their own conceit that they introduced traditions to that extent that the Savior was compelled to tell them that they had made the word of God of none effect through their tradition, and by heeding their tradition they so far lost sight of the prophesied Messiah which was to come and did come, that they did not know Him, and indeed rejected Him, although proving Himself by signs and miracles. But with all that, they condemned Him to death and crucified Him, which was considered the most shameful death, or punishment that could be inflicted upon criminals in their day. Think of the shameful death inflicted upon the Son of God. Yet this disposition was not universal, God be thanked, for there were some that did believe on Him and were willing to enlist under His banner, walk in His footsteps, and gladly suffer persecution for the name of Jesus if need be.

The Evangelist John, in his first chapter, says; "He came to His own and His own received Him not, but as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." Out of that number, He chose witnesses to witness of His life, of His death and of His resurrection. To them gave He power to carry on the great work which He began, yet they were not fully equipped until after He was crucified and ascended to Heaven to His Father again. Then the Holy Spirit was poured out upon them profusely, and actuated them to that degree that they preached the Word with great effect, so much so that great numbers were converted on the day of Pentecost, were made to feel that they were guilty of shedding the blood of the Son of God, and without repentance of their sinful acts, they would be eternally damned. The work did not stop there for the Savior told them while He was yet with them, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and faithful to their trust, they went on with mighty power, demonstrating the Word of God with signs and miracles, so that fear came upon every soul because many wonders and signs were done by the apostles, by this means, proving beyond a doubt that their authority was from above. When this became more generally known, it began to arouse the fury of the adversaries of Jesus and His followers, and persecutions began to rage to a fearful extent, yet this did not intimidate the disciples in the least, they would suffer chastisement in various ways, scourgings, imprisonments and terrible threatnings, but with all this before them, by the help of God, they would stand before the unholy councils and declare whether they should hearken unto God more than men, they might be the judge but preach they would and did.

Now, seeing the field so large and the labor so extensive, they saw proper to call more laborers into the field to help them. Among them was a Stephen, a man with great eloquence and power, who disputed with the great men, yet they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spoke. Then they suborned men to say, "We have heard Him speak blasphemous words against Moses and against God," and set up false witnesses which said, "This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place and the Law, for we have heard Him say that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place and change the custom which Moses delivered us."

Kind reader, think of what the followers of God had to suffer in the primitive age of Christianity and compare it with the privilege you enjoy, the zeal you had, and that will show you how much Christianity is on the decline, although much talked of at the present day. But it is nearly all popular religion, and of the same stamp possessed by the Libertines, Cyrenians and Alaxandrians of that day, who are disputing with the humble followers of Christ, setting aside some of the commandments and ordinances of the house of God, and adding some traditions to make it suit their peculiar fancy and, by their fervent zeal, collect large numbers to them and lead them along in their blindness, getting well paid for it. Stephen suffered death by the hand of those adversaries who engaged in presenting the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, by a shower of stones cast upon him, and to facilitate their work of destruction, they threw off their outer garments and laid them down at a young man's feet whose name was Saul, who was also consenting to the dreadful deed under contemplation, who was hostly giving his consent; being brought up at the feet of Gamaliel and taught according to the perfect manner of the Law, as he afterwards confessed. Some people are very tenacious about what their conscience dictates, believing it to be a true guide to action, but this case proves to a demonstration that it is a creature of education, assisted by reason and governed by understanding. When these great principles are well developed in us, we are always able to determine which is true and which is false, having access to the truth of God's Word. But when led about by Gamaliel and taught his doctrine, we are in danger of going to where Saul was and be conscientious in it, and all be wrong in the sight of God. Oh, how many Gamaliel's there are at the present day! traveling from place to place, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, and with success fearful to look upon. Can it be possible in this enlightened age of literary attainments and Biblical knowledge that we should thus be led astray by such sensational divines, for whom we will not say anything better than they aim at fleecing instead of feeding the flock. To prove this, is only to look around in your vicinity and you will at once see, as these increase in theological attainments, they want their salaries increased or they will say, "God has called me some where else," where a greater salary is offered.

We trace this man Saul a little farther, and find him zealously engaged in retarding the spread of the gospel, although young in years, yet we see what a powerful influence for evil a man can have. In the 8th chapter and 1st verse we read; "And Saul was consenting unto his death, and at that time there was a great persecution against the Church at Jerusalem. But there were devout men who carried Stephen to his burial and made great lamentation over him. As for Saul he made havoc of the Church, entering into houses and haling men and women, committing them to prison." So terrible was his zeal for the promotion of that cause which he learned of Gamaliel, and led on in this matter until he was prompted to extend his persecutions into strange cities. Therefore he desired and obtained letters of authority from those standing at the head of Government, from whom we should think better things, but they granted him power to go and bring bound to Jerusalem such as he could find of that persuasion, for the purpose of compelling them to desist from their course of worship. We think the object was to annihilate the followers of Jesus and strengthen the cause of Gamaliel, In the 9th chap. of Acts we read a vivid picture of the doings of Saul. We see him starting for Damascus with a cohort of assistants, no doubt fully bent on wreaking out his vengeance on all he came in contact with who were engaged in the service of Jesus and His word, Jesus standing at the right hand of God looking on with pity and compassion. And when Saul drew near to Damascus, his heart beating with hope at the good report he could bring his employers on his return, and the number of prisoners he could bring them. The applause and esteem he expected to receive at their hands caused him, no doubt, to quicken his pace,—but when he drew near to Damascus, lo, suddenly, there shone round about him a light from Heaven which was so dazzling he could not bear up under it, but fell prostrate to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, "Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Dear reader, can you imagine the astonishment that must have been experienced by him when he heard that voice from on High, accompanied with the great light? He said, "Who art thou Lord?" The answer was, "I am Jesus whom thou art persecuting," and he trembling with astonishment, said, "Lord what shall I do?" The Lord said, "Go into the city and there it shall be told thee what thou must do." Astonishing, for him to go to the place for instruction where he intended to capture prisoners for Gamaliel! But such is the command of God. The Lord's ways are not our ways, nor his thoughts our thoughts, or else we would often do differently from what we do. Those with him stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no one, being also shocked by the power of God because they were also assisting in the wicked work. They then took hold of their peer, leading him down to Damascus and left him there with his guilty fear pressing him so terribly that he could neither eat nor drink for three days, in which time the Lord prepared one of His servants and sent him to comfort Saul, for he is now earnestly engaged in prayer to be relieved of his enormous iniquity resting upon his soul. Ananias, the Lord's servant, coming into the house where Saul was said, "Brother Saul, the Lord even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

PURE RELIGION.

There are various and erroneous opinions about religion. Religion we learn is derived from the Latin word religio, which signifies oath, because it binds or imposes duties on its followers. So we conclude that when a man receives the Christian religion that he becomes a sincere believer in the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the plan and principle of salvation, and enters into a covenant with the Lord to obey the same and this faith in the Gospel brings about a repentance which will result in a reformation of life. We also learn that pure and undefiled religion is this: to visit the fatherless and the widows in their afflictions and to keep unspotted from the world.

We may infer, from the above quotation, that the religion of Jesus Christ requires its followers to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions and to administer to them as we see their circumstances require. By keeping unspotted from the world, we understand that we must forsake all evil habits and not follow them any more but press forward into all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord as they are recorded in the Gospel. And that we must lay aside all superfluity of naughtiness, gaudy apparel, &c. So we learn from the above definition of religion, that it is a principle to be wrought out and that the christian religion is the principle of eternal life and salvation, which is taught by Jesus Christ and his apostles, and in order to obtain eternal life and salvation which is taught by Jesus Christ and his apostles, we must embrace this religion and work it out with fear and trembling. We have said that when a man receives the christian religion that he becomes a sincere believer, so when a man has properly received this religion he becomes willing to deny all selfish inclinations, to renounce all the works of the devil and live a life of peace devoted unto the service of the Lord.

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." This is a very good admonition, how we should train our children and not to provoke them. Oh, mothers, how many of us are provoking our children! We think there is more than one way of provoking them. There are a great many provoked about the holidays, when mother's are distributing their gifts among their children, when some receive a gift and others none. Mothers, think upon this weighty subject ere another year rolls around. Let us not be drawn by the allurements of satan, for he is going round like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. He is setting traps every day, some in the fashionable way of dress, and some in giving gifts to part of the family and others receive none. Oh, how many children are slighted at home, around the fireside. Perhaps some of our neighbor's children are now sitting at the saloons smoking cigars or drinking rum. Oh, mother, think! Have you not slighted some of these children when they gathered home at their father's house and some would return back with their basket filled while others would return home with them empty? Is this not provoking our children to wrath, for God is no respector of person and is it right for us mother's to be a respector of our own flesh and bone? Methinks not, for we ought to try and encourage our children on the way to Zion. I fear, sometimes, mothers are most too negligent in training those little ones. They are left have their own way too much when young and when they get older they are harder to bend. And then they are slighted around the fireside and will begin to see that mother thinks more of one than she does of another, and the slighted one will begin to start out in the world for himself and satan will do all in his power to help him along, and thus have him to join his army. Oh mothers, be careful how you are using your children at home and do not provoke them to wrath. I have been made to weep when I see old tottering mothers make such a vast difference in their own children.

In conclusion let us mothers be careful and not provoke our children to wrath but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

THE MEEK.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Matt.—5: 5.

The Savior, in preaching the sermon on the mount, pronounces a blessing on the meek. Meekness is one of the essential graces of the child of God. When we approach a throne of grace we must come with a meek spirit. It is meekness which characterizes the child of God. We have an example set before us by our Savior, in His sufferings, when he was clothed in a gorgeous robe and crown upon his head, when they smote him so that the blood trickled down over his face. He did not even turn an angry look upon them, that none but the most wicked hands could do it. He looked upon them with such a meek and forgiving look that even the hard-hearted Pilate could not meet his glance without being awed into pity. Brethren let us all pray for meekness, and holiness. Then there will be no disputings and quarrelings in our midst, but we shall all dwell as one happy family here in this world. Then, peace shall reign here, and when death shall come it will find us prepared. May we all meet in Heaven is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

ALMS are the salt of riches.

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

B. F. MOOMAW.

The twenty-four inch guage is no less superfluous because the light "from heaven" is by no means insufficient, if we will only open our eyes that its rays may reach the organ of vision, the necessity of all such appliances will be wholly obviated. The great architect has wisely divided the time into periods, the year into seasons, spring, summer, autumn and winter, and so disposed his providences as to assign to each, duties peculiar to itself. Into weeks of seven days with the command that "Six days shalt thou work and do all thy labor and the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord, in it shall no work be done." Into days and nights, the day for work. A day consists of twelve hours. See John 11 9. In these twelve hours we are to perform the work that we find for our hands to do, whether it be of a secular or spiritual character, the necessary house for refreshment and recreation excepted, these labors necessarily vary according to circumstances. Some days entirely devoted to secular business, mental exercises excepted, and other days altogether employed in duties of a spiritual character. "The night cometh in which no man can work." So arranged to afford a season of rest for body and mind, hence there is no need of the twenty-four inch guage for these purposes. Nor when the Bible can be procured is there need of the mason hammer to remind us of the depravity and sinfulness of our character, because this is clearly seen in all the ways of unregenerate men, besides it is abundantly taught in the Holy Scriptures, in the history of Adam as well as in the deluvian and antidelnvian world. "God made man upright but he has sought out many inventions." "From the crown of the head to the sole of the feet, full of wounds bruises and putrefying sores, which have not been bound up nor mollified with ointment" therefore in "order to fit our minds for the spiritual building" we must "break off our sins by righteousness." This requires an effort on our part. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force" and the sure word of the prophecy exhorts that the wicked man forsake his ways and the unrighteous man his thoughts, return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon him, and unto our God and he will abundantly pardon. With these Scriptures and the man's parallels before us we may dispense also with the hammer.

It appears that having so fully shown the uselessness of all these appliances we may dismiss this point without noticing particularly the other items under this head, that is the pillars, the starry skies, the ladder, the rough and smooth Ashler, believing that enough has been said to satisfy every intelligent reader that all these things are superfluous and offensive to God, having in our hand the grand trestle board on which we have fully portrayed our origin, our true condition, God's entire will concerning us, an infallible index by which we may shun the awful chamber of death and find our way through the blackened paths of this sin cursed world to mansions of the blessed, having erected our spiritual building agreeably to the rules and designs laid down by the supreme architect of the universe in the Gospel, it being the power of God unto salvation. We regard these symbols as being Idolatrous because they are the inventions of men, and in opposition to the command of God, where he says, "Whatsoever I command you observe to do it, thou shalt not add anything to it nor diminish anything from it." Deut. 12: 32, Rev. 21: 18, 19. "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image or any likenes of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them nor serve them, for I the Lord am a jealous God visiting the iniquity of the father upon the children to the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and showing mercy unto them that love me and keep my commandments." God has nowhere either directly or indirectly commanded these things and therefore they are Idolatrous and sinful.

We regard them as being delusive because it is assumed that the craft is of divine origin, and sustained by divine sanction, and these emblems coupled with the inspired, the less intelligent at least regard them as being equal to it, and attach as much if not more importance to them as to the world itself and risk their eternal interest upon them concluding that if they are pretty good Masons that they are good enough, hence we regard the institution so far as vital christianity is concerned dangerous in its tendencies, and deleterious in its consequences, by engaging the attention and satisfying the mind of the initiated, so that they inquire no farther about the way of salvation, unlike the laborers in the market in the days of Christ, idle, waiting to be employed, they being occupied with Masonry, it is not convenient to undertake any other arrangement.

I wish also to note the failure of Freemasonry in a moral point of view, of accomplishing its assumed object of improving society, for in its practical effects we can discover no advantage whatever in favor of Masons. Morally they are no better than other men exhibiting in their life, character, conversation and their transactions with their fellow-men, visibly all the marks of depravity and degradation.

Before dismissing this royal craft I propose to show its inconsistency with itself professing to be consolidated bound together by the cement of brotherly love when in fact they are politically and religiously in antagonism. Masons of one section meeting Masons of another section on the battle field, engaging in all the horrors of mortal strife, and while as you have seen, Masons are uncompromisingly tenacious for the landmarks of the order, they pander to the prejudices and superstitions of all orders of society, speaking of the qualifications and duties of candidates for Masonry, they inform us that in ancient times the Christian Masons were charged to comply with the Christian usages of the country when they sojourned or worked being found in all nations and of divers religious persuasions, yet is now thought most expedient that the brethren in general should only be charged to adhere to the essentials of religion, in which all men agree.

Lodges, say they, were anciently dedicated to king Solomon, who was our first most excellent grand Master. But Masons professing Christianity dedicate theirs to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist, but to whom Mahomedans dedicate theirs they don't inform us but they do inform us that Lodges were formed in the Ottoman Empire, at Constantinople, Smyrna and Aleppo in 1738. I suppose however they would dedicate them to their prophet or some of his principal votaries, either Allen Beer or Allen Taleb. So then we have according to them, Jews, Mahommedans and Christians, Catholic and Protestants of all grades, including Mormons I suppose.

As a qualification for initiation into the order it is required that the candidate believe firmly in the eternal God, and to pay that worship that is due him. But to accommodate the case to a Jew or a Mohammedan our Savior Jesus Christ must be ignored and left out of the question, thus, after all sapping and undermining our blessed Christianity, dishonoring and insulting the Father, who gave his Son, the only competent mediator, through whom and through whom alone the Father can be approached, for says our blessed Lord, "No man can come to the Father but by me," which proves conclusively that it is not from heaven but of men.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

God calls to us in various ways. Who is it that has not heard his voice, in one way or the other? How often has he called to us through sickness and death, by removing from our side those who were near and dear to us? God calls very loudly to us in this way, in language like the following: "Be ye therefore ready also." He tells us by almost daily observation, and His word teaches us, that this world is not our abiding place; but that we are fast hastening to eternity, and the time and place that now knows us, will shortly know us no more and that forever. Therefore knowing as we do, that we are but pilgrims and sojourners here in this unfriendly world beset with sin on either side, would it not be wisdom in us to prepare for that solemn change which awaits us, and which we all have to undergo sooner or later. "As it is appointed unto man once to die and after this the judgment?" Another way in which God calls to us is when he sends that "still, small voice," whispering to us that all is not well. My dear young friends, have you not heard it? If you have, Oh, turn it not away. If you do, it may never return to you again. Remember, God says: "My spirit will not always strive with man." "To-day if you hear his voice harden not your hearts," and the Savior says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and sup with him and he with me." Therefore see that ye refuse not him that speaketh for if they escaped not that refused him that spake upon earth much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven. And if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at first began to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto us by those that heard him?" He tells us "to-day." Do not wait until next year, or perhaps a few years hence, for a more convenient season. Before that convenient season comes around, death may throw its icy arms around you and claim you as its victim, and you may be hurled into eternity without a moments warning, there to appear before the all-scrutinizing eye of Jehovah, and when the messenger of death calls, you will have to obey whether you are willing or not, whether prepared or unprepared. That will be a call that you cannot resist. Why not obey him now, while you are young and in your prime, "while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Dear young friends, we would say to you in the language of one of old, "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Consider for a moment, look back with me to Calvary's rugged summit, and behold there what our adorable Redeemer endured for you and for me. Well might the apostle say, "Behold what manner of love." It was love toward sinful man that permitted the Savior to leave the shining courts of Heaven, and to suffer the ignominious death upon the cross, and to become the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but for the sins of the whole world. He died for all, there is none excepted. You who are still holding out the puny arm of rebellion against him, he has made atonement for you. "Oh yield to his love's redeeming power, and strive against your God no more." "For the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance upon them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Those who have withstood him will then have to exclaim, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended and we are not saved." You will then have to be banished from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. But to those that hear his name will the sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings. They shall be mine, saith the Lord, in the day when I shall come to make up my jewels, and I shall spare them as a father spareth his own son that serveth him."

Brethren and sisters, let us press onward. There is a crown in reservation for us if we are faithful and endure unto the end, a crown of glory undefiled and that fadeth not away. May the Lord impart unto us grace to do his will here on earth, and when our earthly career is ended take us home without the loss of one to sing his praises, with all those who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

FORETHOUGHT—AFTERTHOUGHT.—The former is a fountain of good in itself—the latter, alone, is only a source of sorrow, as it is born too late to be of service. Life is so short that forethought is needed from its beginning to its close. Not a few undervalue it. Their hope is in circumstances, chance and day-dreaming they call thinking. Forethought calls for work, self-denial and economy, and promises a satisfactory reward. It is an insurance office, of which the young man is president and cashier, and the profits are all his own. Afterthought and its result is a blessing.

THE BETTER LAND.

SELECTED BY SENETH SNYDER.

I hear thee speak of the better land,
Thou call'st its children a happy band;
Mother, oh, where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it and weep no more?
Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
And the fireflies dance toward the myrtle boughs?
Not there, not there, my child!

Is it where the feathery palm trees rise,
And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
Or 'mid the green islands of glittering seas,
Where fragrant flowers perfume the breeze?
And strange bright birds on the starry wings,
Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?
Not there, not ther, my child!

Is it far away in some region old,
Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold?
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
And the diamond lights up the secret mines,
And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strand,
Is it there, sweet mother, that better land?
Not there, not there, my child!

Eye hath not seen it, my gentle child!
Ear hath not heard its deep sounds of joy;
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair,
Sorrow and death may not enter there.
Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom
Beyond the clouds, and beyond the tomb.
It is there, it is there, my child!

AFTERWHILE.

The above word is so frequently used that I have concluded to have a talk about it for the benefit of my young readers.

I object to it, first because it is kind of a home made expression, or rather a throwing two words together in such a shape as to make nothing at all as it is not to be found in the dictionaries nowhere, and it is very important that young persons should always use good language or proper words. But there are a great many words used outside of dictionaries, and they generally have a meaning too. If they always meant some good trait or act I would not have any special objections to them, but some of them are decidedly improper and objectionable.

Mother told Annie that she should run home quick and see that no fire had fallen out of the stove. The answer was: "Yes, mother I will go after while," but after while was just a little too late, the fire had dropped on the floor and the alarm was not given until it was too late, and the house was burned.

The little boy had an offer of a good situation and was to meet his employer at just 9 o'clock, but he concluded to have a game of ball first and go afterwhile, 9 o'clock came but the boy was not there. The conclusion was, if he is tardy and breaks the first engagement, he will break many more, and word is left for the boy that he is not needed. The house was burned and the boy lost a good position all on account of using "afterwhile" instead of "now."

The present is always the best time for making a mark in whatever we intend to do. The time spent between "now" and "after while" is always lost when there is anything to de done. Poor old Felix, that you can read of in the Bible, was made to fear and tremble under Paul's preaching, but instead of getting right to work and doing his duty he adopted the word "after while" or the more convenient season, which means the same thing, and we are not told that it suited him any better "afterwhile" and it is probable that the convenient season never came. It should be remembered that "after while" never comes. No matter how long you wait it is still "afterwhile" How many of my young readers, like Felix, have been made to tremble on account of their sins, but you still put off your best friend with "afterwhile." You wait days and weeks and even years, and you are no better—no nearer Jesus than you was at the first call, and the fact is, you get farther away every day. Whenever there is anything to be done, the only way is to get at it at once and do it and then "afterwhile will not give you any more trouble. Before closing, I will tell you a word I like much better and you can find it in your dictionary. It is NOW. Adopt it and it will never leave you in want.

UNCLE HENRY,

SWEET JESUS.

He is ever near, never fear. He is much loved by all His dear and dying friends of this earthly sanctuary. Don't be afraid to work for Jesus for He will reward you greatly for all you do in His favor. Do not fail to do your duty toward Him whilst on this plne of sin for this is not our home, our home is built on high, far, far above the starry sky.

Farewell, ye dreams of night,
Jesus is mine;
Lost in this dawning light.
Jesus is mine;
All that my soul has tried,
Left but a dismal void,
Jesus has satisfied—
Jesus is mine.

SUSIE COFFMAN.

DON'T TATTLE.—Children, don't tell tales about each other. Don't call one of your school-mates ugly, another stingy, another cross, behind their backs. It is the meanest kind of sin. Even if they are ugly, stingy or cross, it does no good to repeat it. It makes you love to tell of faults, it makes you uncharitable—your soul grows smaller—your heart loses its generous blood, when you rattle about your friends. Tell all the good you know about them and carry their sins in your own heart; or else tell them to God, and ask Him to pardon them. That will be Christ-like. If anybody says to you, "Oh, that Mary Willis did such a naughty thing!" all to mind some virtue that Mary possesses and hold it up to her praise. For your own sake learn to make this a habit.

SPRING WATER FOR CHILDREN.—Spring water for a child to drink is not only the best beverage for his bodily health, but likewise for his mental and for his moral health—tending to keep his mind clear and his morals pure. It is a sin and a shame to give an innocent and healthy child either beer or wine. It makes him love that which, as he grows up to manhood, may, and proably will, become his bane and his curse. The world is full of drunkards, and many of that fraternity were taught to drink—were initiated into the mysteries of drunkenness from their childhood!

THISTLES IN THE HEART.—Bad habits are the thistles of the heart, and every indulgence of them is a seed from which will spring a new crop of weeds. A few years ago, a little boy told his first falsehood. It was a little solitary thistle seed, and no eye but God's saw him plant it in the mellow soil of his heart. But it sprung up, oh, how quickly! and in a little time another and another seed dropped from it to the ground, each in its turn bearing more seed and more thistles; and now his heart is overgrown with this bad habit. It is as difficult for him to speak the truth as it is for the gardener to clear his land of the hortful thistle after it has once gained a footing in the soil. "Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord, but they that deal truly are His delight."—Observer.

CHILDREN MAY GIVE.—Children should be taught to give just as they should be taught to love or to pray. Giving is as clearly a duty as it is a privilege. But children in the Sunday School should be trained to earn or save what they give; not to ask it from father or mother, as if it was a tax on Sunday School attendance. Children usually enjoy giving of their own little treasures a great deal more than their parents enjoy giving it out of their abundance, for avarice is not a child's vice. Calls to giving judiciously may increase the attractiveness to children of any Sunday School, even among the very poorest in the community. It is a great mistake to refrain from asking poor children to give into the Lord's treasury through fear that they will be repeded from the Sunday School when they are thus called on. The proper way is to make giving a part of their training in life, as surely as cleanliness of person, decency of speech, or uprightness in conduct.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Institution is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

OUR DUTY, WHAT IS IT?

Mr. Editor:—You say you have no preference to your contributors but you do not like some of their subjects. The greatest enemy man has are the institutions of this world, and the greatest apparent enemy to man's condition in this world, is the law or word of God.

We are commanded to pray for those who persecute or badly use us, —to forgive under all circumstances. There is no limit this is the sense of the law as I understand it. Now Mr. Editor what is the duty of a Christian? Is it not his duty to combat all kingdoms that are against God and to love man as his brother? Can man serve two masters? What is the New Testament, is it not the Church or government of Christ and is that not perfect within itself? Is it not intended to meet all the wants of this world and do we not live under a government absolutely antagonistic to the principles of God's law? St. Paul tells us to be subject to the powers that be, that is powers that become of God. Who took the lives of St. Paul and the apostles, was it not the authorities that be? Was not Christ Crucified for instituting a kingdom against the will of the powers that be? Are we not brethren and are we not entitled to the privileges that God gives us? If we do not serve him we know the consequence. Has any man a right from God to take my freedom from me and does not the authorities that be do this? A Christian cannot serve his Master and allow any man's freedom to be taken from him under any circumstances. We are commanded to pray without ceasing, to forgive those that trespass against us, or our heavenly Father will not forgive us. Is there any limit? Have we time to take the life or liberty of any man, no matter what the crime is, or will we set all the day long and see our brethren do this and never a caution from the Christian? Mr. Editor, how does civilization come, does it come through the pulpit or the bayonet? If it come by the bayonet at any time, is there not a soul lost in establishing this civilization? Most assurredly man must not fight his brother under any consideration, there is no limit here, God's laws are absolute, the law judges man not I. Men in authority, know me, I preach nothing I do not practice. 'Tis hard to give up the world—pity those men and do your duty. God is able to protect and save the world. Man must deny himself, he cannot serve two masters.

GEO. G. BINGHAM.

Westerton, Md.

REMARKS.—While we object to some subjects we also object to the style that some men use in presenting their ideas without subjects, especially the interrogativn style of our contributor, friend Bingham. We protest from the fact that it presents too many subjects without presenting clear ideas on any. That some of the institutions of man are opposed to grace is evident, but the law of God should be man's best friend and greatest consolation, and is, unless he is determined on rejecting, in which case, it will certainly be a powerful enemy that none can withstand.

The precept of divine love as taught in the command, "Love your enemies and pray for those who despitefully use us," is from above and needs no limit, as the spirit of it is in the letter and, if carried out, will produce the designed effects, "Love thy neighbor as thy self," and who would fight, abuse and persecute his own flesh?

It is the imperative duty of every Christian to combat against the kingdoms of darkness, using the lawfully prescribed weapons, "the sword of the spirit, &c," and we hope that every loyal soldier of the kingdom of Christ is on duty.

The New Testament is the Christian's law, and in it is contained the whole duty of man, but that it will ever become the law of nations is not in harmony with the spirit of its teachings.

That our present government is absolutely antagonistical to the principles of God's law, may be a question of serious doubt, as it is justly termed the asylum of the oppressed, financially and spiritually, and it becomes us as a Christiao people, to tender our grateful acknowledgments that we can yet worship God according to his revealed will, under our own vines and in homes that we are allowed to call our own.

The "powers that be" are allowed of God and we are to be subject only so far as they do not conflict with the "higher powers." Our liberties are allowed of our King (Jesus) and can only be fully realized when we get into the kingdom proper, or triumphant. The position in which we are now placed is mightily contested and we can only claim the liberties of a good soldier, to fight for our King. This warfare is continual and only victorinos in death.

Civilization may be effected by the sword and also by the power of the Gospel. The sword may civilize but it will not Christianize, the power of the Gospel will do both.

To practice what we preach is considered honorable and just provided our preaching is honorable and orthodox, but to preach a false doctrine is wrong and to live it out is still worse.

We highly prize the productions of those who, when they write, have subjects and present logical reasoning thereon. In writing we should have only two objects in view, first, to obtain information and second, to give information. These are both laudable and we hope that all those who desire to assist us in presenting a good and interesting paper to the world will think of these things.

DIED.

OGG.—In the Root River branch, Fillmore Co., Minn., on May the 7th, William Ogg, aged 5 years, 10 months and 3 days. He was a son of our beloved elder Joseph and Susan Ogg. Burial occasion was improved from the 90th Psalm, from the 1st to the 12th verses to a large and attentive audience by brother William Hipes. J. D.

DRURY.—Also in the same branch, April 2nd, 1873, Henry Edward, infant son of George and Catharine Drury, aged 8 weeks and 1 day. Occasion improved from Matt. Gospel, 18th chapter 23rd 24th verses, and 19th chapter and 14th verse by brother Joseph Ogg.

Why is it that God calls such little harmless infants that knows no sin, and leaves a father and mother that is living away from the pales of the church? The answer may be found in the parable in St. Luke's Gospel, the 13th chapter. (Read the parable.) The dresser of the vineyard, has no doubt been digging about the parents of that little tender branch to see if they will not bring forth fruit—to give them another chance to turn in with the overtures of mercy. Dear brother and sister, Christ requires fruit at your hands Christ may come presently and call upon one or both of you for fruit at your hands because he desires fruit from you that may stand to your account as a sweet smelling odor, a sacrifice, acceptable and well-pleasing to God. It may be that God, for Christ's sake, required fruit at your hands, he came and found none, so he took that little tender branch from you because it was prepared to meet its Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in peace, and you, yourselves was not, so I would say to you with the psalmist, "Oh Lord so teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

JOSEPH DRURY.

LIVENGOOD.—Fillmore county, Minn., John, youngest son of brother John and sister Livengood, of the Boat River branch of Spinal Meningitis, age 7 years, 3 months and 13 days.

Only about 30 hours from the time he was taken sick until he plumed his snowy pinions, till he folded them to rest mid the welcome song of rapture on a loving Savior's breast. Funeral discourse by the writer from James 4 : 14, latter clause.

WM. C. HIPES.

RICHARD.—In the Woodstock congregation, Shenandoah county, Va., January 10th, sister Mary Richard, aged 75 years, 4 months and 5 days. Funeral occasion improved by brother Wakeman and the writer from Rev. 14 : 13.

TABLER.—In Frederick, county, Va., eld James D. Tabler, aged 68 years, 10 months and 14 days. Funeral occasion improved by elder G. Shaver, J. Wakeman and the writer, from Proverbs 14 : 13.

Sister Tabler, his wife preceded him to the tomb about two years. She was in her 68th year.

SAMUEL A. SHAVER.

POTEET.—In Fayette Co., W. Va., Mar. 25th, Andrew Poteet son of Bro. William and sister Mary Poteet, aged 13 months.

How suddenly the cold hand of death plucked from the family circle this dear pet. 'Tis gone but not lost; 'tis sleeping awaiting the glorious immortal waking when the same little one shall come forth in a glorified state to meet the angels in the sky. Parents, brothers and sisters, Oh may you so live that you may meet all the dear ones gone before in that blessed land where death is a stranger and troubles never come. J. S. FLORY.

BARNHART.—In the Germantown district, Franklin Co., Va., May the 12th, 1873, elder Abraham Barnhart departed this life. His disease was bronchitis. He was sick some 8 days. He leaves an old sister widow and 5 sons all in the ministry and 2 daughters that are sisters. His age was 77 years, 6 months and 2 days. The funeral was attended by a number of relatives and friends. Preaching by the brethren, from Rev. 14 : 13. We need not mourn as those that have no hope. He has been laboring in the ministry for nearly 40 years. It surely would be wisdom in us to try and imitate his example.

NAFF.—Maggodel district, Franklin Co., Va., May the 11th, 1873, uncle and brother Jacob Naff, aged 73 years, 5 months and 29 days. He had been afflicted about 4 years with paralysis. He got better again so he could walk about some with sticks until about a year ago he got so bad that he was confined to his bed for more than a year and suffered a great deal. He leaves a widow sister and 3 daughters that are sisters in Christ, and 5 sons. We hope our loss is his great gain. He was a deacon in the Church for a long time. His funeral was attended by the brethren. Text the 14th chapter of Rev., 12th and 13th verses.
J. P. NAFF.

SANGER.—March 21st, in Fayette county, W. Va., Charles Earnest, infant and only son of Joseph F. and Hannah Sanger May this dispensation of God's providence bring to the remembrance of the beloved parents with solemn thoughts that they too must die and may they prepare to meet their God and dear son in that happy land where all is joy and peace forever.

RADICALISM VERSUS LIBERALISM.

Some people seem to think that it is really necessary to have two extremes in order that there be a mean, forgetting that it is pleasanter and more safe to be on the middle of a balance than at either end. It is a notable fact that while some of us are too radical in our views, others are too liberal. Both of these are extremes and just so long as one is indulged the other will follow as a consequence.

One clamors for the letter while the other contends for the spirit. Radicalism is dangerous when connected with our own views, and it has been a stumbling block to its thousands. It is so affianced to the letter theory, that anything beyond it has no virtue or shade of comeliness, and some of our own brethren are deeply tinged with it, the result of which, is the extremes that we now have to contend with. It should be remembered that the letter without the spirit is dead. Yes, as dead as a body without a soul.

All the ritual services of the Church have a spiritual import and in the observing of them, more care should be manifested that the design should be realized than that the letter should be carried out. To undertake to strictly carry out the letter of the ordinances of the Lord's house is rank radicalism and leads to very great extremes. Some of these extreme views now threaten to sap the foundation of the Church, destroy propriety and bring in damnable heresies. Some will ransack the whole Bible through to prop up some letter, pet theory and thus entirely lose the benefits of the great design for which God intended them. Many instances might be adduced to establish our position, but we think that the "signs of the times" portray facts in such unmistakable terms that none can fail to see the issue. It is necessary that there be clouds that we may have rain, as without clouds it could not rain, but rain is the object and if we get it in due season we are little concerned about the clouds, their color, height in the atmosphere or the direction from which they came. Just so it is with the ordinances of the Lord's house, we must have them, as they are the avenues through which God showers His grace upon us, but grace and divine favor is the object and end to be obtained. Therefore we should not parley about the shell at the risk of losing the kernel. Baptism is the sign of regeneration, the burial of the old man and the resurrection of the new. Water is the element, but we are not so radical in carrying out the letter as to resort to Jordan or the waters about Enon to be buried with Christ in baptism. In the Communion, we sip of wine as being emblematical of the blood of Christ, but we are not so careful in ascertaining its qualities, believing that the efficacy is not in the wine but in that which it represents. Again, Feet-washing, we all agree is intended to inculcate the principle of humility, humility then is the object and not the washing and wiping, but in all these things, some have made shipwreck of their faith by prying after the letter and thus losing the spirit. These are the results of radicalism when carried to extremes.

Liberalism has a tendency of running in the other direction, ever contending for the spirit and thus depreciating and ignoring the letter altogether. We also have, among us, an element of this kind, but to be candid, we look upon this as being the more excusable from the fact of it being the attending result of the other extreme. While rituals may be justly termed the shell or hull yet the kernal cannot exist or mature without it. A hull may grow and mature without a kernal, but a kernel cannot grow without its shell. Just so it is in religion. A man may live a ritualistic or outward Christian without the spirit or inward graces, but no man can possess and live out vital Christianity without the outward adorning, or complying with those things which have been ordained by Christ the great head of the Church, for our salvation. This is a subject of weighty importance and it is to be hoped that all true followers of Jesus will endeavor to imbibe more of His humble and self-sacrificing principles. The old German proverb comes beautifully in place in this connection, Mittelmass die beste strasse. This truly is the best way and the only way that will keep our blessed Zion harmoniously together. A little more radicalism in points of doctrine and more liberalism in the observing of those things in which there is no point of doctrine at stake, such as contending for the letter in the Salutation, the Supper and Feet-washing. The letter in these things kill and if persisted in, will cause schisms in the Church which will be difficult to heal. In these things we plead for liberality, liberality, LIBERALITY.

REPORT OF A. M.

The question now is, "do you intend to give a report of A. M." We expect, no providential interference, to be there and do the very best we can. We hope that we may have a more favorable report to give than on former occasions. We hope that our dear brethren will consider the importance of the meeting and go up to the place with the determination of working for the Lord and the upbuilding of Zion. Those who are in the habit of taking an active part and especially those who allow themselves to become excited should take heed to their ways and bridle their tongues as some of the leading papers of the country will be represented by their reporters who will catch their words on the wing and sow them broadcast over the land. A hint to the wise should be sufficient.

ATTENTION, PLEASE.

As a number of our readers and agents promised to pay us at A. M. we would just say, please prepare a list of the names for which you intended to pay, with the address as we will not be able while there to know who has or who has not paid us. By attending to this you will confer a favor and much oblige.

BROAD TOP EXCURSION.

We are making arrangements to have excursion tickets to A. M. sold at the following stations: Markleysburg, Coffee Run, Cove, Hopewell and Everett. Those going will make it a point to get tickets at the above named stations.

NOTICE.

Those intending to stop at James Creek over Sunday on way to A. M. and wishing to visit the PILGRIM OFFICE which we would be glad to have them do, should try and come up on the Saturday morning train.

MINUTES.—We have a small number of the Minutes of the District Meeting of Middle Pa. Those who neglected to order at the meeting can still be supplied by ordering soon. Single copy. 10 cents, 6 copies 40 cents post-paid.

MICHAEL FORNEY.—We do not publish any paper adapted to Sunday School purposes. The Children's Paper published by Bro. H. J. Kurtz, Dayton, Ohio, we think, would suit you. He will send you specimen copies and price by addressing him as above.

BREVITY is very desirable in obituaries, notices, and those writing will please not be too lengthy. On account of the unusually large number for last week we were compelled to abridge some for which we hope those concerned will excuse us.

COMPLETE VOLUMES.

We are still prepared to furnish complete volumes of the PILGRIM, commencing with No. 1, of Jan. 1st., 1873, at $1.50. Our back numbers are all perfect and filled with reading that is well worth preserving. Some of the articles are continued from early numbers of the year which makes it more important to commence with the volume which, when completed, will make a handsome volume for binding. Those who prefer it can have the remainder of the year or from Annual Meeting for 80 cts.

BOOK NOTICES.

Under this head we will notice such books &c., sent us for examination that are in harmony with the general character of our work. No fiction or obscene literature of any character will receive any attention whatever. We wish our notices to be a benefit both to publishers and our patrons.

Good Reading.—In reading, everybody has an object, or at least should have. If they have not the probability is that their reading will make an object for them,hence it is the more important what we read. We have, just now, before us the June No. of the Phrenological Journal and in looking over its contents it wonders us how Mr. Wells succeeds in filling so large a magazine with such fresh, live and interesting reading. Any person wishing to be posted on the living and stirring events of the day cannot well afford to do without it. With the July No. commences a new volume. Published by S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway New York at $3.00 per year.

Lives of the Governors of Pennsylvania.

We have received from James K. Simon, Publisher, No. 29, South Sixth Street Philadelphia, Pa., through J. C. Blair, Huntingdon, a work under the above title, by Major W, C. Armor whose connection with the Executive Department of the State offers him superior opportunities for the task he has so successfully accomplished.

It is a very handsome octavo volume of about 540 pages, including the portraits, 29 in number finely and correctly executed ; is printed on fine white paper with large clear-faced type and handsomely bound. It contains the biographies of the Governors of the State from its earliest settlement to the present time ; and in connection with these embraces a complete epitome of the history of the State, including the events of its early settlement, its proprietary government, the wars of the Revolution; and 1812, and the rise and fall of the Rebellion.

It is a book which should be secured by every citizen of the State as a knowledge of the lives and characters of our public men cannot fail to be useful and interesting ,and the vast number of important facts and incidents which it contains must form a valuable adjunct to, and stimulate the intelligence of our great commonwealth. It is sold by subscription and agents are wanted in every county in the State. Address as above. A. B. B.

"Behind the scenes in Washington."—The National Publishing Co., of Philadelphia,has just issued one of the most remarkable and interesting books of the day, bearing the above title.

Of late the whole land has been ringing with the most startling and appalling reports of corruption at Washington—the highest officials—men whose names have hitherto been without a stain, have been implicated in the charges, and the press has rung with accusations and denunciations which have caused all good citizens, without regard to party, to fear for the future of the country. All have an interest in discovering the truth of these reports, and all have an interest to know more of the practical workings of affairs at Washington.

A truthful picture of life "Behind the scenes in Washington" cannot be otherwise than deeply interesting. The low price at which the book is issued, brings it within the reach of all, and no one who wants to know the truth about men and things at Washington, should fail to read this work. It is sold by subscription only, and agents are wanted in every county.

FRIENDSHIP.

There is an emotion of the soul
More kin to Heaven than earth;
'Tis friendship, beauteous attribute,
We never learn its worth.
Its influence so sweet, so pure,
If we ourselves are true,
Through this sweet agency we may
Work for our Master do.

In meditating on God's gifts,
Enjoyed by us while here,
All wisely suited to our tastes,
And each so very dear;
Were all beside it left to me,
And I bereft of this,
Something I'd feel that I had lost,
That I should ever miss.

To all the ills and woes of life
We can be more resigned,
If sympathy from some dear friend
Thrills us with accents kind:
And in misfortune's gloomy hour,
Our saddest thoughts is when
We need words of encouragement,
And are deserted then.

These sweetest feelings of the heart—
O, cruel thought—may change
For these we deemed so true, we may
Forever be estranged.
Slander's poisoned breath can taint
An atmosphere of love,
And friends oft tried, whom we thought true,
Will sometimes faithless prove.

But there is One who ever loves,
If unto Him we pray;
Give Christ your love, make him your friend,
He never will betray.
Man's friendship only is the bud,
Which withers in an hour;
Christ's lasts through all eternity,
And is the full-blown flower.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

CAMPBELL'S GREAT MISTAKE.

It seems a very easy matter for those who are somewhat versed in the history of great reformers, to readily discover that they have freqoently incorporated numerous errors, which are imbibed during the early years of life. Though many of them have accomplished a vast amount of good, none seems to have been entirely free of fatal errors. Had these false principles of religion, extended no farther than the mere practice of the reformers themselves, the mistake would not be of such great moment. Those who look upon such characters as the true embassadors of Christ, have, and are still following closely in the footsteps, and are rapidly perpetuating the growing evil.

Though Alexander Campbell, as a practical religious reformer, has accomplished a great deal of good, neither his teachings nor practice has been entirely free from many great errors which time has stamped upon the minds of the religious part of the world. Few, if any, have done more than he to prove conclusively that baptism is essential to salvation, while immersion is the apostolic method of baptizing. In these he was correct, while his early training almost indelibly stamped single immersion, as well as the backward action upon his mind; and when he ushered into existence, his grand reformatory movement, it contained these fatal errors, that had found their way into the world, sometime after the close of the third century. Had Campbell, in an early period of his life, been able to have moved the Baptist spectacles from his eyes, rolled back the curtains of time, and quietly looked into the three first centuries of the Christian era, he would have found neither the backward action, nor single immersion among any of the early Christians, who followed in the footsteps of the Lord. He, however imbibed these errors, either directly or indirectly, from the Baptist Associations, who from time to time contracted them from those who made it their business to change times and laws.

Thousands who are zealously engaged propagating the same principles under the name Christianity, are not aware that the Gospel which they are circulating, contains practices that are no more evangelical than sprinkling and pouring. Though they are right, in their faithful efforts exerted in defense of immersion, they are teaching and practicing the backward action, that is not half as old as either sprinkling or pouring, while single immersion another element in their teaching and practice, was not invented till after the middle of the fourth century. And why all this? Simply because Campbell made a great mistake, when he incorporated into his plan of salvation the Baptist method of baptizing, instead of the Evangelical mode taught by Christ, when he said: "Baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19. The great trouble is, too many read the scriptures with both the backward action and single immersion in the eye, and look upon the phrase "One baptism" Eph. 4: 5, as refering to a single dip only, not remembering that this "one baptism" mentioned by Paul is the same method that is taught in the last commission given by Christ and recorded by Matthew, i. e. "baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." This is the only method of baptizing ever taught by Christ, or practiced by the apostles, and no one ever dreamed that this commission taught single immersion till long after the rise of the controversy respecting the Trinity, nor did such an idea receive much encouragement till after the commencement of the reformation, A. D. 1517. Among the writings of the first Christians, there is about as much evidence in support of the commission teaching single immersion, as there is in support of it teaching sprinkling and pouring. And when those who did invent single immersion they refused to claim for its support the authority of the commission—"baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"—knowing that this taught trine immersion, and therefore in order to justify their human invention, they simply baptized "in the name of Christ" or "in the death of Christ," and then dipped the candidate but once, and not three times according to the directions of Christ. Finally however, as errors and heresy multiplied, and ignorance increased there were those who ventured to baptize in the three names by dipping once only, which, when first introduced looked about as logical as immersion by sprinkling, or pouring by immersion.

I have given Campbell's writings a very careful examination, and I discover that he has failed to show me one single instance where single immersion was practiced by any of the primitive Churches, while the numerous extracts which he has made from the writings of ancient historians, prove conclusively that trine immersion was the apostolic method of baptizing, and universally prevailed in West as well as in the East during the first centuries of the Christian era. These, as well as a hundred other facts that sustain trine immersion, we would cease to defend, if any of his learned followers, or any one else could convince us that we are wrong in stating that trine immersion was the apostolic method, or show to the world that we are in error, when we assign the origin of single immersion to the fourth century, and the origin of the backward action to the English Baptists who were in error respecting the ancient method of baptizing. They of course, thought the eastern nations, like the English buried on the back, and when they read the phrase "buried with him by baptism," they at once tho't of an English burial and commenced laying the body backward in baptism. The consequence has been that all the Baptists in the world who have either directly or indirectly, sprung from the English Baptists have practiced the backward method of immersion. But from the beginning it was not so. In the time of the apostles the administrator placed his right hand on the head of the candidate and dipped him three times face forward, at the mentioning of the "name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Not one single writer, whose productions have come under my notice, has been able to find any trace of single immersion beyond the middle of the fourth century, while to find one single instance where it was ever practiced in or near Jerusalem, the mother Church of the world, seems to be an utter impossibility. Not one of the learned writers, who advocate a change in times and laws, has ever been able to find single immersion practiced in any of the churches established by the apostles, till some time after the close of the fourth century. While this is true respecting their efforts to sustain single immersion, their researches of antiquity after the backward action has been more than three-fold worse In addition to this array of painful facts it is sufficient to remark that they have failed to produce the testimony of one single ancient author, who states that the last commission given by Christ and recorded by Matt. 28: 19, teaches single immersion, or anything short of trine immersion. You may as well labor to prove that baptizo means sprinkling as to attempt to prove that the commission teaches single immersion. This commission has come down to us in the Greek language, and all the ancient Greek and Latin authors, who have commented upon the subject, without one single exception, have given it in favor of trine immersion. And if it was not designed to teach the method of baptizing, it seems remarkably strange that none of the native Greeks, in whose mother tongue the commission was written, were ever able to understand the simplest command ever written in their language. The same evidence that is brought forward to prove that baptizo means immersion, proves conclusively that the commission teaches a three-fold immersion; and to reject the authorities in the latter, pre-supposes the right to reject them when introduced in support of the former.

Many have looked upon the Brethren as practicing a method of baptizing unauthorized by the Gospel, not having the least idea that their own mode was a human invention in a two fold sense. There has never been a period since the time of Christ and the apostles when trine immersion, as a method of baptizing, did not exist, while single immersion "In the name of Jesus" only, single immersion in the names of the Trinity, as well as the backward action have all found their origin this side of the close of the third century, not one of them being old enough to have been the apostolic method.

Single immersionists should cease to look upon our practice with disrespect, since they can neither find its origin this side of Christ, nor trace their single immersion and backward baptism to anything like near the close of the apostolic age.

Though Campbell did some useful work, there is yet room for reformation. He gave to the world a religion that does not contain Christian baptism, unless it be proven that Christian baptism was not introduced till after the middle of the fourth century, and that it took a thousand years longer to bring it to perfection by associating it with the backward action. Had he gone one, or perhaps two steps farther and reproduced not only trine immersion but the forward action more than six hundred thousand of his mistaken followers would now be facing the world with evangelical baptism. But as it is, he has made a great mistake and thousands are in his footsteps, and why all of this? Simply because Campbell made a mistake.

Nor is this all, his system contains no feet washing, while the Gospel introduced by Christ does. Neither does it contain the Holy kiss as found in the religion of the Christian Church, and all of this simply because the perfect Gospel was not reproduced, and now thousands fail to practice either feet-washing or the holy kiss not because they are not taught in the Gospel, but because Campbell failed to teach this part of the Gospel. What a blessing it would be if such able minds had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God, neither adding thereto nor taking anything from the perfect law.

The Holy Spirit by the mouth of Paul has said, "If any man preach any other Gospel to you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Gal.—1: 9.

J. H. MOORE.

SAUL VERSUS PAUL.

See how condescending and how kind that Jesus was, after being persecuted so long by this wicked Saul, that he immediately renders relief by showing him, through his servant, how he could be relieved of his sins. The plan here laid down, is not excepted by the Gamaliels of the nineteenth century, to arise forthwith, when their eyes are opened and receive baptism at the hands of the Lord's servants, but prefer a probationary state for six months or so and by that time the greater portion backslide, as they call it, which was not the case with Saul. After his baptism, as soon as he received meat, he was strengthened and in a few days began to preach Christ in the Synagogue, that He is the Son of God, and those that heard him were amazed and said, "Is not this the man that destroyed them that called on this name in Jerusalem and came here for that intent that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?" But this did not terrify him for he was truly converted to God, and no more a servant of Gamaliel. Now the fury began against him. The enemies of Christ lost a prominent leader which proved a heavy blow against them, but true to his natural gift "zeal," he now brings it to bear against the enemies of the cross, battling for the Lord with the power of his might, and did great execution by his eloquence and fortitude, being willing to spend and be spent for the name of Jesus. We see him traveling to and fro, calling to the people, come to the Lord, do not spend your time in sin and folly. He sometimes demonstrated his power by performing a miracle as in the case of Elymus, where he is also called Paul. "O, full of all mischief, child of the devil, enemy of all righteousness, perverting the right ways of the Lord, thou shalt be blind not seeing the sun for a season." The Lord caused it to come to pass which caused no little astonishment to the deputy, seeing a demonstration of the power vested in the doctrine of the Lord.

Again we see him traveling by sea and land until he came to Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia, and on the Sabbath they went out of the city by a river side where prayer was wont to be made and speaking to the women that resorted thither, one Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened, attended to the things spoken of Paul, and was baptized and her household, and abiding with Lydia a short time, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met him, which brought her master much gain by soothsaying. After following Paul and acknowledging him to be the servant of the Most High God, and showing the way of salvation, he commanded the spirit in the name of Jesus Christ, to come out of her which obeyed. But it had a tendency to arouse the fury of those that were benefitted, and calling to their assistance the magistrates, they laid many stripes upon them (Paul and Silas), and cast them into prison, into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks, but that did not quiet their tongues for in the night they prayed and sang praises unto God which caused the earth to quake and shook the foundation of the prison. Alarming the jail keeper, seeing the state of things, he drew his sword for the purpose of killing himself, but Paul instantly cried with a loud voice, do thyself no harm for we are all here, as a failure to perform, to the letter the duties of a jail keeper would forfeit his life under that tyranical government, as the case of Peter's apprehension and liberation clearly shows. But God works by use of means, for when the jailer saw and heard, by the mouth of Paul, that the prisoners were all safe, his mind was no doubt attracted to the cause of the commotion and quickly perceiving that Paul must be a man of God, said, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The answer was: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house, and after he preached to them the word of the Lord, the jailer took Paul and Silas, and washed their stripes, and was baptized, and all his household," perhaps in the same river that Lydia was baptized the next morning. He is liberated and becomes a guest at the house of Lydia again, but he travels on and we soon find him in the idolatrous city of Athens standing in the midst of Mars Hill declaring to them that they are too superstitious, for their devotions are to a God of their own make. Then he declares to them the true God, tells them there was a time that God winked at ignorance, but now commandeth men everywhere to repent. He preached Jesus and the resurrection, some believed and some mocked. He then departs from here and goes to Corinth and finds a man by name, Aquilla, lately from Italy, by occupation a tent maker. He abides with him and works at his trade, he also being of the same craft, not a hireling, not a salaried preacher, but works for his living and preaches the gospel of Christ free of charge. Jesus says, "He that is a hireling, when he seeth the wolf coming fleeth, and lets the wolf catch the sheep, and because he is a hireling, careth not for the sheep."

Some at the present day say Paul took no pay from the churches because they were too poor to pay him, but recommends to pay the preachers well for their labors. After Paul having remained there one year and six months, reasoning every Sabbath day out of the Scriptures and laboring through the week at his trade, he took his leave of the brethren and sailed into Syria, and from there to Ephesus. Passing through the upper coast he found certain disciples and asked them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? We never heard there was any Holy Ghost but were baptized unto John's baptism," of course John did not baptize them, for he taught that there was a Holy Ghost, and he had no authority to confer that power on any others, therefore they were not baptized by the proper person, so Paul required them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and when he laid his hands upon them they received the Holy Ghost, and in his sojourn at this place God wrought special miracles by his hands which magnified him so as to cause the people to bring their books of curious arts together and burned them to the amount of fifty thousand pieces of silver. So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed, and soon Demetrious, and those of like occupation, began to tremble, fearing the profits of their business would suffer, which was making silver shrines for the great goddess Diana, whom Asia worshipped. Although Paul finding more congenial spirits at this place, he was permitted to retire from the scene with little or no persecutions, for the town clerk recommended to have things decided in a lawful manner fearing they would be called to account for the days uproar caused by Demetrious and his fellow craftsmen. Paul after this called the elders of the Church from Ephesus to Miletus and said; "Ye know after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind and with tears and temptations which befell me by the laying in wait of the Jews, and how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, testified to Jew and Greek, repentance toward God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, and now I am bound to go to Jerusalem not knowing what shall befal me there save the Holy Ghost witnesseth that bonds and afflictions await me, but I count not my life dear to me so I might finish my course with joy, but I declare that you shall see my face no more, wherefore I take you to record this day that I am pure from the blood of all men, for I have not shunned to declare to you all the council of God, but I know after my departure, shall grievious wolves enter in among you not sparing the flock." My field of labor lies in another direction, after I have gone up to Jerusalem and there withstood the trials and persecutions then I must also see Rome.

He was but a few days at Jerusalem until he was apprehended and dragged before the council where every effort was made to condemn him to death but God had more labor for him, therefore his fate was postponed, then brought before Felix, then before Festus where he is declared innocent, and might have been set at liberty had he not before this time appealed to Cesar not wishing to be tried before the Jews who were thirsting for his blood. Therefore unto Cesar he must go and was sent to Rome, over the boisterous sea where they were once shipwrecked and with great difficulty saved from a watery grave. But God was with him and preserved his life and brought him safe to Cesar. Three days after, he called the chief of the Jews together, stating that he delivered a prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans, for this cause have I called to see you and speak unto you, because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this enain. Then they appointed him a day when they came to his lodging to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God concerning Jesus, out of the law and out of the prophets, from morning until evening. Thus we see that age did not diminish his zeal, nor persecutions thwart his prophetic mission, for he dwelt two whole years there in his own hired house and received all those that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, no man forbidding him. He here begins to write letters to the different churches, which he before established which are so famous and full of instruction and edification for the government of God's people, and the warnings which he so clearly elucidates, putting his disciples on their guard against parties and factions which should arise to pervert the truth. And when his days were almost ended he said, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course and I have kept the faith, therefore there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness and not for me only but for all those that love his appearing." and then the time of his execution arrived, the sword was drawn by his executioner and with one stroke his head was severed from his body and Paul was no more a living acting being, but his name lives and is revered by all civilized nations on earth for the zeal he had for his God from the time became acquainted with him until his death and for the many good and wholesome lessons we have received through his arduous labors.

GEORGE WORST.

THOUGHTS FOR CONSIDERATION.

I devote some of my time to reading, and make extracts of what I read of such passages as appear adapted to enforce the subject treated. Lately, on looking over some of these, I found the following which I offer to the editors for insertion.

"It has been said that a revival of religion scarcely continues longer than one generation, and that there never was any institution, however wise and good, but, in the lapse of time it has been abused." The same writer remarks, it it be prudent or necessary therefore to inquire into the cause or causes of degeneracy in the affairs of State, it is much more so with regard to religion or the various denominations of those who profess it. If upon a calm and dispassionate observation, some cause or causes seem to be operating, or likely to operate, for the worse among any body of religious people, it cannot be deemed unreasonable or uncharitable to point them out in order to prevent, or in some degree to check their growth. When a revival of religion takes place says Baxter, it begins in the ministry. This remark will be warranted by referring to the History of the Reformation by the instrumentality of Luther and his faithful cotemporaries in the ministry, as also of a later period, by Wesley, Whitfield and others, all of whom appeared to have been inspired by reading the Holy Scriptures, meditation and prayer. When corruption gets into the Church, it generally gains admittance through the same channel, diffusing its baneful influence down through every order until death, unless prevented by amputation, has sealed their destiny and the candlestick is removed out of its place. This observation deserves some consideration, when we call to remembrance the history of the Church at Rome. That Church retained her primitive purity through a scene of suffering and persecution, unparalleled, almost, in the history of human transaction. But that which could not be effected by prisons, flames and tortures, was soon brought about by a new state of things taking place. When Constantine, Emperor of Rome, became a Christian and poured honors and wealth on the clergy, then ease and luxury soon engendered pride and arrogance and the offspring of these, a desire of power, which meeting with gratification, soon enabled them to lord it over the poor heritage of Christ, laying the foundation for a system of errors and corruption, at war with the civil and religious liberties of the Christian world. This ought to serve as an eternal warning to all succeeding generations, never to place in the power of the clergy to play the same game.

Let all denominations consider that the department which God has assigned his embassadors is to be examples to their flocks, of meekness, humility and love, totally renouncing the world with all its pomps and vanities, a spirit as opposite to the spirit of the greater part of the ministers in this our day as humility is to pride, or as righteousness is to vice, and yet all acknowledge the preceding to be the character of our Lord and his apostles. Humility indeed was the lesson Christ constantly taught his disciples by example and precept. The princes of the Gentiles, said the blessed Savior, exercise authority over them and they that are great, dominion upon them, but it shall not be so among you, but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your servant, even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many.

We find our Lord, on a certain occasion, when supper was ended, took a towel and girding himself, after pouring water into a basin, he began to wash his disciples feet and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. Considering the dignity of this person, engaged in this lowest and most menial office, that of washing the feet of his disciples, can we wonder at Peter, exclaiming, "Thou shalt never wash my feet?" But hear our Lord explain this astonishing transaction, so contrary to worldly usages and to the views of men who could not conceive that true greatness consists in true humility. Said the divine Redeemer, "If I your Lord and master have washed your feet ye also ought to wash one anothers feet, for I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." As though he should have said, do not suppose that the kingdom I am about to establish, has a tendency whatsoever to cherish pride or gratify the ambition or carnal nature, by creating higher or lower orders in the administration of its government. On the contrary, my design by the example I have set before you, both on this occasion and throughout my whole life, is to teach you the necessity of self-abandonment, meekness and love that you may be led to imitate me your Lord and Master in lowliness and meekness, each esteeming the other better than themselves and in proportion as these heavenly virtues evidence themselves in your whole deportment, the farther you will be removed from a desire of having the pre-eminence over one another and thereby promote the best interests of my spiritual kingdom on earth.

A PILGRIM.

A WORD TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN GENERAL.

I often wish I was better qualified and had more time to write. I could wish for no greater pleasure than to write for the PILGRIM and help to spread the truth, as I consider it a duty that is enjoined upon the faithful followers of Christ as we are told to "work while it is day for the night cometh when no man can work," and I think that night is fast approaching, as every day brings us some wonderful things never before heard of. We are told that great tribulation and wonders shall come to pass and false prophets shall arise. What else do we hear daily preached by many of the fashionable and highly educated preachers but falsehood? They twist the truth into such a shape that it just suits their own fancy, no matter whether it is just exactly as Christ gave it to us or not. It is perfectly shocking to see so many people say they don't believe this or that that is in the Bible and yet profess to be Christians. It is awful to hear such expressions from such that we always thought were true believers. Is it any wonder that we frequently hear people talk, as I did the other day. There was an old friend of mine told me that he was sent to catechism and was taken into the Church and never knew any better but what it was all right, especially, according to his catechism, but when he began to read the Scripture for himself, he began to see it in quite a different light. So I suppose a great many more could say, if they would read the Scripture carefully and prayerfully. But so many read the Scripture and say they cannot understand it and yet it tells us that a fool cannot err therein. Why should it be such a task for those that are well educated if they really want to understand it? We now frequently hear people say that the Bible is not the same as it was several hundred years ago. How that is I do not know but I cannot believe that it would be changed so much that we could not still know enough or learn enough from our present Bible to find the way to heaven by reading and obeying the same. But it is too much of a task to obey what is in our Bible, yet still some claim there are things in the olden Bibles that ours says nothing about. I never saw one of those old Bibles but should like to see one. If any brother or sister that reads these lines can tell me of any infant baptism in the old Bible or of any thing of the kind I will be glad to hear of it. I was told that it did speak about infant baptism in the old editions but unless I hear more of it I cannot believe it. Please inform me if there are such, as I suppose there is some of our readers who have the old Bibles yet.

LOVINA MARSH.

REMARKS.—If you have been so informed in regard to old Bibles being different from present editions, your informant was either ignorant or malicious in design. The only change that has been made is in orthography and phraseology, but the intent or meaning remains the same. Infant baptism is based upon very obscure inferences as not a single instance ever was or ever can be found in the New Testament when a child was baptized. Believers only are fit subjects for this holy ordinance.

THE SUFFERER'S REST.

BY ANNA STOUFFER.

On the death of her little neice, Latura Olive Trostel.

'Twas God gave the sufferer rest,
He called her early, he knew best.
Jesus took the beautiful, dutiful child,
She died mid blooming youth and joy.

Weep not for me dear father and mother,
Soften your grief, sister and brother;
In heaven she went to draw our thoughts after,
To think if we, like her, could face our Master.

She left example for friend and mate,
For them that sobbed if their hearts would break;
"Come to me, cousin, come to me brother,
O! meet me," she prays, "Sister, father, mother."

In the churchyard corner alone she sleeps
And we wish her not again;
For Jesus, we know, safely her keeps,
Till we meet her in Heaven.

CHARITIES THAT SWEETEN LIFE.

Pleasant words! Do you know, reader how potent a spell lies in pleasant words! Have you not often thought of its power to soothe, to charm, to delight, when all things else fail? As you have passed on through the journey of life, have you not seen it smoothing many a ruffled brow, and calming many an aching bosom? Have you not noticed it in the house and by the way, at the fireside and in the place of business? And have not felt that pleasant words are among the "charities that sweeten life?" Ah! yes and their influence has come over your own soul. Not long since when you went bending to the earth, oppressed and weary with life's manifold sorrows, when dark clouds hovered over you, when you were ready to yield in despondency the pursuit of happiness, and give yourself up in unmitigated gloom, when no object of life seemed desirable, oh! who can tell how in such an hour the sound of a cheerful voice—one pleasant word has dispelled the gloom, and given you to the world again, a man, a hopeful trusting man. You can tell us how like an angel whisper was the kind inquiry of that companion, and how the tone of cheerful sympathy sent the dark clouds rolling from your sky, and revealing the light of day, showing you that earth is not all a wilderness, nor man a being utterly deserted to wretchedness.

Or, when the ire of your spirit has been roused, and indignant feelings have reigned supreme in your heart, when the angry threat was just rising to your lips or the malignant wish about to burst from your heart, what mighty spell caused the storm to subside, and spoke the turbulent waves so quietly to rest? Did the soft answer turn away your wrath.

Among the multitudes of the earth, how small the number who habitually and from principle speak pleasantly. You have met them. Now and then they have crossed your path, and I doubt not that your whole soul has blessed them as it ought, for the words which were balm to your wounded spirit. And did you not wish you were like them? Did you not feel that earth would be a paradise indeed, if all the tones of that matchless instrument, the human voice, were in harmony with the kind thoughts of a thoroughly kind heart? But, while you thus wished did you resolve to add one to their number? Did you determine to imitate their example? You think it a small matter requiring little effort. But I assure you it might cost you many a struggle ere you could learn to speak in pleasantness to all whom you might chance to meet, even in one short day; and if you accomplished it perhaps it would be a better days work than you ever did, and you might lay your head on the pillow of rest at night with feelings akin to those of spirits around the throne.

Speak pleasant words to all around you, and you shall ever be lighted by the smiles of those who welcome your coming and mourn your departing footsteps.

Mother, speak gently to the little ones who cluster around you, speak ever pleasantly, and be assured that answering tones of joy and dispositions formed to constant kindness shall be your reward.

Sister, brother, friend, would you render life one sunny day, would you gather around you those who would cheer you in the darkest hour? Let the law of kindness rule your tongue and your words be pleasant as "the dew that descended on the mountains of Zion."

READ THE NEW TESTAMENT.

What is a testament? A declaration of ones will, to test, to be a witness, &c., hence the New Testament referred to above is God's divine will or law, recorded in a volume, a book called the New Testament, the New and last covenant God gave to his people, the new economy of grace and salvation. Why and wherefore read the New Testament? because therein you will learn your duty to God and man, therein you will learn what you must do, that when you die you can go to heaven, or inherit eternal life—therein we learn how to judge ourselves that we be not judged; therein we know what is necessary to know to make us competent judges, to judge when we hear preaching whether it is consistent with God's divine will or not; therein we learn, that many false prophets are gone out into the world. 1 John 4: 1; therein we learn there were false prophets among the people even as there shall be false teachers among you. 2 Pet. 2: 1; therein we learn that in the last days perilous times shall come. 2 Tim. 3: 1; therein we learn that this is the last time. 1 John 2: 18; therein we learn that Paul charged Timothy to preach the word; that the time would come when they will not endure sound doctrine, &c. 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2, 3; therein we learn to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good. 1 Thes. 5: 21. Truly we have much good reading matter in our religious papers but I say again, read the New Testament.

SILENT INFLUENCE. It is the bubbling spring which flows gently, the little rivulet which runs along day and night, by the farm house, that is useful, rather than the swollen flood or warring cataract. Niagara excites our wonder, and we stand amazed at the power and greatness of God there as He "poured it from the hollow of His hand." But one Niagra is enough for the continent or the world, while the same world requires thousands and tens of thousands of silver fountains and gentle flowing rivulets, that water every farm and meadow, and every garden, and that shall flow on every day, and every night, with their gentle, quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds, like those of the martyrs, that good is to be done; it is by the daily and quiet virtues of life—the Christian temper, the meek forbearance, the spirit of forgiveness, in the husband, the wife, the father, the mother, the brother, the sister, the friend, and neighbor, that good is to be done.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.—A mother's love (says Washington Irving) is never exhausted; it never changes; it never tires. A father may hate his child, brothers and sisters may become inveterate enemies, husbands may desert their wives, wives their husbands. But a mother's love endures through all; in good repute, in bad repute, in the face of the world's condemnation, a mother still loves on, and still hopes that her child may turn from his evil ways and repent; still she remembers the infant smiles that once filled her bosom with rapture, the merry laugh, the joyful shout of childhood; the opening promise of his youth; and she can never be brought to think him unworthy.

A GOOD conscience is to the soul what health is to the body. It preserves a constant ease and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions that befal us.

As welcome as sunshine
In every place,
Is the beaming approach
Of a good-natured face.

PENNSYLVANIA SABBATH SCHOOL CONVENTION meets in convention at Titusville, June 3, 4 and 5, '73. Each Sunday School is requested to send two delegates. Pastors of all denominations are invited to be present.

Brigham Young says that, when he went into Utah with his people, the Indians were all about him: but by dealing with them fairly at all times, keeping all his promises and never deceiving them, he had no trouble with them. He thinks the Modocs treated the Peace Commissioners just as they believed they would have been treated if they had fallen into the power of the white men.

Law is more sacredly regarded in New York than it was a few months ago. A decided impression for good is made on courts, juries, and the public generally. There is a prevailing opinion that life and property are safer now than they have been.

So says the Observer. The cause is attributed to the fact that in a few cases it has been honored by allowing justice to overbalance the power of bribery.

A REPORT. Bro. Addison Baker of Carthage Mo., informs us that the brethren at their District Meeting, without a dissenting voice, agreed that the report of the committee sent by last A. M. to settle difficulties in Iowa, Mo, and Kansas shall be sent for publication in the PILGRIM. With such authority, we will be pleased to publish it, but hope it may be written in the spirit of moderation with a due regard for the influence it may exert on the general Brotherhood and the outside world.

GERMAN BAPTISTS.—Two out of every three of the German Baptists in this country take the German Baptist paper, published at Cleveland, Ohio. There are 6,000 German Baptists in America, and their paper has a circulation of 1,000.

Those of our brethren who still clamor for retaining the above, to us, insignificent title, will please make a note of these facts. The German Baptists above alluded to are German Baptists because they speak the German language and read a German paper, but to call the Brethren, German Baptists who have become so English that we cannot support a German paper is both unreasonable and absurd.

MODOC WAR. From present indications, this heathen butchery will soon terminate. At latest accounts, about one half had made an unconditional surrender and it is thought that the remaining party will soon be captured How strange it is that because a few untutored savages, who believed that they had been shamefully abused and deceived, committed murder, the whole tribe must be annihilated while the Modocs of New York and our other large cities can commit cold blooded murder and it takes months and even years of judicial proceeding, with an expense of thousands, before the law can be honored and the public safety insured.

SABBATH SCHOOLS, notwithstanding some good and zealous brethren protest against them, seem to be gaining favor in the Church, and there is a considerable inquiry in regard to suitable books and papers for their use. The Brethren at New Enterprise, Pa., has perhaps the largest school in the State, numbering, if we are not mistaken, as high as 240 scholars. That this school has been a power for good all readily admit that have any acquaintance with that commmunity, and the same happy results might be enjoyed in every Church where there is a sufficient number of children to form a school. There are quite a number of others that are in successful operation that we hope may be attended with equally good results.

WHISKEY VERSUS $100.000.—The late Thaddeus Stevens in his will bequeathed to his nephew about $100.000 providing he would abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks In case he would fail to comply with these conditions the amount was to be used to found an Orphan's Home in Lancaster, Pa. From late accounts it appears that he has broken the will and arrangements are now being made to erect the Orphan's Home.

To money has been accorded, the power that moves the world, but how passingly strange it is that the demon alcohol has a power that even exceeds that of money. Though the nephew loses the fortune, the old father, in his judicious will, may still befriend his blood by preparing a home for his orphans. How great must be that power that makes man its willing slave, strips him of his earthly possessions, lowers to a brute level and finally debars him from the joys of Heaven!

SHE DWELLETH IN HEAVEN.

BY LOVINA H. BURKHART.

She dwelleth in Heaven no more upon earth,
Will her voice swell the cadence, of music or mirth;
She dwelleth in Heaven, your darling is there,
Yes May is an angel in Eden so fair.

She dwelleth in Heaven a blossom so bright,
It can never be injured by dews of the night.
She is singing God's praise on that ever-green shore,
Where angelic choristers weep never more.

She dwelleth in Heaven, her life here was brief.
Her God will protect her from sickness and grief.
Dear parents don't mourn for the one that is gone,
She's happier now than the wayfaring one.

She dwelleth in Heaven, she's waiting for you;
Awaiting and watching 'till you bid adieu,
To the world with its pleasures and trials combined,
To the will of our Father we should be resigned.

She dwelleth in Heaven in robes of pure white,
While her dear little sisters now roam with delight
Through the wood-land and grove in their innocent glee,
Dear Ollie and Ida how happy and free.

She dwelleth in Heaven, no chilling winds blow,
No tempest can ever her pleasure o'erthrow.
There night never comes, dear parents prepare
To meet May an angel in Heaven so fair.

JESUS WHEN A LITTLE BOY.

One time when Jesus was a little boy, only twelve years old, he managed to get away from his parents to talk with some very learned men. I don't know that he ever had seen them previous to this time. I don't believe he did. And how he introduced himself, I am unable to say. Whether he said to those big men, "I'm little Jesus," or whether he at once, told them that he was the Son of the great God, I cannot say. But we know that he did want very much to talk to those learned men who thought they knew it all, when they did not even so much as know that there was a Savior born into the world. Whether they found Jesus out enough to know that he was the one to save the world; the one to set up his Kingdom in the world, I do not really know. But, after he had heard them and asked them some questions, I think we can learn from what then happened, that he had given them a hint of his mission from Heaven into such a sinful world.

It happened while little Jesus was talking so earnestly to those men, so that they wondered at his words, his parents came to him. They had been searching for him for some time, and were becoming very much alarmed, thinking they might never find Jesus. You see they loved him—loved him much more than many persons do now, who don't care whether they ever find Jesus. They told Jesus how they had been seeking him, "sorrowing." Jesus was very much surprised on hearing this, and said: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? Don't you know I left my home in Heaven to save the world?" To save the world? Yes my little readers. And what a useful lesson Jesus teaches you in that he engaged in his "Father's business," while so very young. There is no telling how much a little boy or girl can do for Jesus if an effort is only made. Annie is one of the most peevish and disagreeable scholars in school. She don't like her teacher, nor scarcely any of the scholars. Yet I'm sure, if you speak kindly to her, she can't help loving you. If you then try to get others to love her, you will do something for Jesus for which you will be happy. Every kind word you speak; every good act you do, will make you useful to Jesus.

THE RUNAWAY KITTEN.

Three or four years ago in the village near us there lived a family that had a very pretty kitten but it would not stay at home, but ran away to the neighbors and to one of the stores, where it was stepped on and abused (as runaways are apt to be), until finally it followed two of my sisters home. We thought it was so pretty we would let it live here. We fed it, and it soon began to like us, but it was so very sore that we could hardly touch it without it scolded or spit at us. It was but a kitten when it came here, but it has been here four years and now it is quite a large cat. He has a very beautiful coat and is admired by all that see him. His coat is a velvety black and dark gray. He spends much time on it and is very choice of himself. When he comes in he looks all around for a cashioned chair and then waits and sometimes he goes to the parlor door and begs to go in. He is marked very singular; has an M in his face right above his nose, and then he has almost a perfect heart on one of his sides. There are some who think he stands like a tiger.

We think him a very intelligent cat too, for he seems to understand much we say to him. If we ask him if he wants a mouse he pricks up his ears and does not wait to be called long, but comes and begins to smell around and spring at everything that moves. He always seems very much pleased when he catches one and most always comes back for the second. If he does not find one he seems very much disappointed and does not stop hunting for some time after we leave him.

If he does not have his new milk morning and night it always seems to make him feel all out of sorts. Sometimes when he is teasing, we ask him if he is hungry? He will answer back as long as we talk to him. It is very amusing to see him when some strange dog comes here; if the dog comes near, he will growl and spit at it and then run to the house with his tail as big as he can make it. He does not seem to be afraid of our own dog, but a strange dog he cannot bear. He still retains his old habit of running away, and sometimes will he gone a day or two, but he always comes back hungry and I should think glad to be at home again.

We once had a black and white kitten which we all thought a great deal of, he was so playful and useful too. If he caught a mouse he would play with it a long time and when he got tired he would eat it. I have known him several times to lose a mouse playing with it, and then he would begin to cry, as if imploring help to find it again. If we went to help him and found it he was perfectly satisfied. One morning he was sick and went away and we saw no more of him until one day we found him dead.—Young Folk's Rural.

THE FOOLISH FOX.

In the depths of the forest there lived two foxes. One of them said, "Let's quarrel."

"Very well, but how shall we begin?"

"O, it cannot be difficult," said fox number one; "two-legged people fall out; why not we?"

So they tried all sorts of ways, but it could not be done, because each one would give way. At last number one fetched two stones.

"There!" said he, "you say they're yours, and I'll say they're mine, and we will quarrel, and fight and scratch. Now I'll begin. These stones are mine!"

"Very well, you are welcome to them."

"But we will never quarrel at this rate!" cried the other, jumping up and licking his face. "You old simpleton, don't you know that it takes two to make a quarrel?"

So they gave it up as a bad job and never tried to play at this silly game again.

What are thy crosses to thy comforts, thy miseries to thy mercies, thy days of sickness to thy days of health, thy days of weakness to thy days of weakness to thy days of strength, thy days of scarcity to thy days of plenty?—Thomas Brooks.

AN EXPLANATION.

By special request of the brethren of California we admit the following, but of the facts of the case we have no acquaintance. It is written in the spirit of love and we trust is the prompting of honest and sincere hearts. There is an apparent discrepency somewhere but we hope there is enough charity among the brethren concerned to have it set aright.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—We brethren of California desire to make some explanation through the PILGRIM of the position we occupy toward Bro. Gipson, who the standing committee of last A. M. cut off. The reason we desire this is, that the facts may be known to the general brotherhood and thereby we will stand on the merits of the case. We know we have been strongly censured by many for fellowshipping Bro. Gipson after he was cut off by said committee.

In order to give a correct idea of the case we will review from the time the Church in Macoupin Co., Ill., called for a committee of Elders from the churches around them, to hear the case. The committee met with the church and heard the grievances from both parties and rendered a decision.

Eld. D. B. Sturgis, who afterwards visited Cal., was chairman of said committee. In their decision they laid an admonition on the church in MaConpin Co., and an acknowledgment on Bro. Gipson. The matter was not reconciled at that time and Bro. Gipson removed to Cal. He told us how he stood and his statement was afterwards confirmed by letter from the brethren in Ill. There were several letters passed between Eld. Wolf and the brethren in Ill. They expressed a strong desire that brother Gipson might be reconciled to the Church, for said they, he is a valuable man. Thus the matter rested until Elds' Miller and Sturgis come to Cal., clothed with power from the brethren in Ill., and appointed by A. M. also a letter of recommendation to us from the brethren of Indiana, which we thought was credentials sufficient to act in any case of difference between two brethren or more.

It was in my presence that Bro. Sturgis had his first interview with brother Gipson. It seems Bro. Gipson labored under a mistake in regard to the extent of the acknowledgement required of him. He tho't they required of him to recant his former conviction or belief in the single mode of Feet-washing. When he heard from Bro. Sturgis what the committee that tried the case, required of him he was perfectly willing to make the acknowledgment and did so in my presence to Bro. Sturgis. Then we went in the house (for we had retired to talk the matter over privately), where the brethren of Cal. were assembled in church council.

Bro. Sturgis introduced the matter and spoke with much warmth and love, feeling glad that his labors were crowned with success and that reconciliation was made. Bro. Gipson arose and made the acknowledgment before the church. Then the brethren gave him over to the church in California, and they received him in full fellowship.

The following was drawn up by Bro. Sturgis and signed by the brethren the day after the Church Council, and the last act of the Brethren in Cal:

San Joaquin Dist., Dec. 10, '70.

In Church council assembled, A. P. Gibson accepts the decision of the Church with the committee in Macoupin Co., Ill, and confesses his faults and asks forgiveness. We accept the same in behalf of the Church of Macoupin Co., and he is now received by the Church here as a private member.

Witnessed in behalf of the Church of Cal., by Eld. G. WOLFE.
" J. MYERS.

When the Brethren saw fit, they advanced bro. Gipson to the ministry and he labored with us in word and doctrine and was at peace and in perfect union with the Church when we were informed that the standing committee had cut him off, and that too, without preferring a charge against him, and to this time, have given us no reason for their action, only informed us we should not fellowship him any further.

It was promised that the whole matter would come out in our periodicals but we have seen nothing of it since. I do not wish to criticise the action of any of the Brethren for some of them are gone and will have to give an account of their stewardship to that judge that does not only see their actions but knows the motive that prompts them to act. With these facts before you brethren, where is there a Church that would have done different from the Church in Cal?

We don't claim to be perfect but if we err I trust we shall ever do it on the side of mercy.

WHY IS IT?

In PILGRIM No. 20, current volume, an article appears under the above heading, written by Sarah J. Miller asking the above question, why the brethren and sisters are allowed to use the affirmation, and then quotes the language of Christ which he spake in reference to swearing recorded in Matt. 5: 34, 35, 36, and also that of James 5: 12. on the same subject. And then says; "Now I would suppose the affirmation would be one of the 'any other oaths' that the apostle speaks of, which, I claim, is merely a modified oath, and just as binding as the real oath. Then why not let your yea be yea and your nay, nay?"

Now for the information of the sister I would say, when we make use of the affirmation, we do just what the Savior and James say that we should; we say no more than yea or nay. This is not an oath, not even in modified form. We are asked by the magistrate: "do you solemnly and sincerely declare and affirm that you will speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?" Then we answer, yea. Now there is nothing in this interrogatory that has the appearance of an oath. The government must have some form, and when we are to be put upon the witness stand and are thus interrogated and we answer yea, we merely promise what we intend to do, and by all means should do, that is, speak the truth. The words declare and affirm are defined, the former, to make known publicly, and the latter, to establish or ratify, to declare positively. This is required of us to satisfy the "powers that be" that we are qualified for the witness stand. The officers of the law know very well that there are many who consider themselves more under obligation to speak the truth when they are on oath, or even have been affirmed, than they would without an oath or affirmation. And as there is nothing in the form of affirmation used by the Brethren and others that conflicts with the Gospel, it is our duty to obey the law.

But that this is just as binding as the real oath, I admit; for the Christian religion, without any oath or affirmation, binds us to speak the truth. I once heard a man say that he would just as soon speak an untruth when he was on oath, as tell a lie without an oath, for, said he, we read that "all liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone," and he could not see how there could be a greater punishment for such as would speak an untruth with an oath.

The sister also finds fault with those brethren who pray for kings and rulers that are in authority over us, that they might exact laws that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life &c., and says; "why not pray for their conversion," To this I would reply that the brethren do this because the apostle exhorts us to do so, and from his words, 1 Tim. 2: 1, 2, we plainly infer that he means that we should pray that they would rule well, for he says; "that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, &c. Now if we would pray for their conversion and our prayers would be answered that is, if they would be converted (which it is not likely that all of them will) they would cease to be kings and rulers in the kingdom of the world, and then others would fill the vacancy and there would still be kings and rulers; and while the present state of things exist, God will need such as his ministers to protect the children of God and to punish the evildoers, and keep them in check and to them he has given the sword. But when the Millenium dispensation will commence he will not need those rulers any more. Christ will then reign and his saints shall reign with him. So there is no impropriety in praying that they might rule well and enact and wise good laws, &c.

Answer to Query.

HUDSON, Ill., May 18, 1873.

Dear Pilgrim:—In No. 19 I find a query propounded by Bro. M. J. McClure, found in the latter part of the 9th. verse of the 10th. chap. of John, thus, "I shall go in and out and find pasture."

Our Savior here uses a metaphor taken from a custom then prevailing in the East, namely: by going before the sheep, while the sheep as faithfully follow the shepherd, who led them from the fold to the pasturage; where they grazed upon the green grass, until evening, when they followed their shepherd to the fold again. Here is the point to be considered. The sheep realized a real pleasure in partaking of the green grass through the day, or while they were out, and again at night, when they are in, they will ruminate upon what they had so much enjoyed when they were out, here they realize a double pleasure, and no doubt the second, is by far, the greatest. So with Christ's followers, while complying with the outward ordinances it affords a real pleasure, because Heaven has commanded it and promised a blessing upon it. The willing hands, the penitent hearts, yea the whole soul is fixed upon the thing signified. Faith now is strong that the end will be accomplished, by the power of God, while the humble supplant is complying with the means of Heaven's own appointment.

Now this child of God will, within himself, have a real pleasure of knowing that he has obeyed from the heart, that form of doctrine delivered to him; hence, when he goes within, there is a new creature, and when he goes out, here he uses or has used the means that secures the end.

T. D. LYON.

LATHROP, CAL., May 15th, 1873.

Dear Pilgrim:—Our crop will not be as bountiful in the San Joaquin this harvest as we anticipated in January and February from the fact that our Spring or latter rains, was nearly an entire failure. Therefore if we get a half crop this harvest it is as much as we can expect. Heading grain will commence in the San Joaquin valley in two weeks. Haying is about done. On the coast and other valleys north, the yield of grain will be equal to other good seasons.

ELD. GEO. WOLF.

QUERY.

Dear friend Brumbaugh will you or some of the members of your Church give an explanation through the PILGRIM of the 6th chapter 16th verse, Matt. which reads as follows: "Moreover when ye fast be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance for they disfigure their faces that they may unto men to fast, verily I say unto you, they have their reward. Romans 10th chapter 13th verse, "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. 1 Cor. 5th chapter, 11th verse, "but now I have written unto you not to keep company. If any man that is called a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortion with such a one no not to eat.

THE TRUE CHURCH.

We have been asked, "Is the Church of the Brethren the true Church?" This is an important question, and one that every man and woman has a right to have answered. But that answer must rest on a basis sufficiently sure to make it safe. Every right and wrong, true and untrue, is determined by law. Law is the basis of all judgment and without it, no decision can be made. Then, to answer our querist, we must first determine whether we have a law by which we can decide, and second, whether that law will admit of us being called the true Church. The first proposition, it is not necessary for us to prove, as all religiously disposed persons are ready to admit that the New Testament is the Christian's law, and that it, finally, will either condemn or acquit us.

Admitting this, we are ready to enter our second proposition and determine, according to that law, who or which is the true Church. As this law is universal in its application and all are to be judges, we would say to the querist and all who are interested in regard to the true Church, come and see, for thus saith the Lord. "Stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." In the matter of determining the true Church we want all to have equal privileges as we are all equally concerned and have the same law. Our great King and Law Giver would say; "Ye are the judges, hear what I say." The True Church consists of that people that acknowledges Jesus, as the Christ and His word as their law. Now it is altogether rational to conclude that the organization or Church that endeavors to walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, must be the true Church. This is what the Brethren do, and just so far as they come short of this effort so far are they short of being the True Church. But says the querist: "If you are the True Church, will all others be lost?" Judgment is not given into our hands neither do we desire to pass judgment. This is not our mission, neither was it that of our blessed Redeemer. He says; "I judge no man—but the words which I speak, they shall judge you in the last day." It is our duty to preach the truth, the whole truth and the truth alone. Such preaching, if accepted, will produce a True Church and nothing short of this will do it, because it consists of God's people and God's people will comply with this law. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," is a point of law and forms a test whereby the True Church can be known. "He that saith he loveth me and keepeth not my commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him." Then, stand in the ways and see; take the chart of salvation in hand, view them well, ever remembering that, in the day of judgment, we shall not be judged by the creeds of men, but by the gospel of truth. Keeping these facts in view, it is scarcely possible that any should fail in finding the True Church. Our convictions are that the Church of the Brethren is the True Church, because there is no other Church known that walks so nearly, in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless. What will be the end of those who are not willing to comply with all the requisitions of the Lord will only be determined in the day of final accounts, when every one shall be called upon to have their lives squared by the living oracles of God.

Broad Top R. R. is now supplied with new engines, two baggage cars and four splendid new traveling coaches of the latest style and modern finish. As they pass along they present a grand and glittering display and reflect great credit to the company. The road is also in a better condition than it has been for a number of years and nothing is left undone by the gentlemanly Superintendent and conductors to make travelers feel safe and comfortable. It richly deserves the large increase of patronage it has received under the new superintendency and may justly be considered a road of first class accommodations.

Next Week's Pilgrim will be some behind time on account of ourself and some of our help attending Annual Conference. We expect to make good use of the time and give our readers as much information in regard to the business there transacted as possible.

Only 80 cents.—The Pilgrim will be sent from A. M. to the end of the year for 80 cents. Our agents and those interested in the welfare of the Pilgrim will please make this known and solicit a few more names for us.

Excursion.—Last week in giving the offices at which excursion tickets will be sold on the Broad Top line we omitted Saxton. We expect this paper to reach its destination in time to make this correction.

Tune Books.—Orders for Tune Books will be filled as soon as we get another supply.

HUMAN BUTCHERY.

The following is the sentiments of C. H. Spurgeon on war as expressed in regard to the French and German war. It is plain pointed and powerful and should cause all men to examine well the grounds taken to defend honorable human butchery.

"Did either of you ever think of what war means? Did you ever see a man's head smashed, or his bowels ripped open? Why, if you are made of flesh and blood, the sight of one poor wounded man, with the blood oozing out of him, will make you feel sick. I do not like to drown a kitten; I can't bear to see a rat die, or any animal in pain. But a man? Where's your hearts, if you can think of broken legs, splintered bones, heads smashed in, brains blown out, bowels torn, hearts gushing with gore, ditches full of blood, and heaps of limbs and carcasses of mangled men? Do you say my language is disgusting? How much more disgusting must the things themselves be? And you make them! Do you fancy that your droms and fifes, and feathers and fineries, and pomp, make your wholesale murders one whit less abominable in the sight of God? Do not deceive yourselves; you are no better than the cut-throats whom your own laws condemn; better, why you are worse, for your murders are so many. Think, I pray you, for your poor people will have to think whether you do or not.

Is there so little want in the world that you must go trampling on the harvest with your horses and men? Is there so little sorrow that you must make widows by the thousand? Is death so old and feeble that you must hunt his game for him, as jackals do for the lion? O, kings, their souls are as precious in God's sight as yours; they suffer as much pain whenever bullets pierce them as ever you can do; they have homes, and mothers, and sisters, and their deaths will be as much wept after as yours, perhaps more. It will be hard to think of the blood you have shed when you lie dying, and harder still to bear the heavy hand of God when he shall cast all murderers into hell. Have pity upon your fellow-men. Do not cut them with swords, tear them with bayonets, blow them to pieces with canon, or riddle them with shots. What good will it do you? What have the poor men done to deserve it of you? You fight for glory, do you? I am a plain-talking Englishman, and I tell you the English for glory is damnation, and it will be your lot, O, kings, if you go on cutting and hacking your fellow-men. Stop this war, if you can, at once, and turn to some better business than killing men. Before the deep curses of widows and orphans fall on you from the throne of God, put up your butcher knives and patent men-killers, and repent."

STRENGTH IN ADVERSITY.

Pilgrim on life's rugged road,
Tearful, fainting 'neath thy load,
On thy Lord thy burden roll;
He with strength renews thy soul:
Hath not Jesus said to thee,
"As thy day, thy strength shall be."

In the bitterness of grief,
Though thy prayer find no relief;
Bowed, forsaken, and forlorn,
Though thy sighs prevent the morn,
Tarrying long he comes at length,
To revive thy fainting strength!

Though thy Savior long forbear,
He will hear his people's prayer!
What though he, when sorrowing sought
Make as though he heard thee not?
Watch, and without ceasing pray,
That thy strength be as thy day.

When temptation cometh in,
With a surging flood of sin,
And the burning billows swell
From the lowest depths of hell;
O my Savior! say to me,
"As thy day, thy strength shall be."

Some distrustful of their Lord,
Fear to lean upon his word;
One day, by the hand of Saul,
They are fearful they shall fall!
Still that word is sweet to me,
"As thy day, thy strength shall be."

What though his approach be late?
It is good on God to wait:
He will prove his promise true,
By his gifts, not small, nor few:
His salvation thou shalt see,
"As thy day, thy strength shall be."

When wild winds thy vessel sweep
O'er the dreary boisterous deep,
And thy prostrate strength shall fail
As she drives before the gale,
Then cry mightily and say,
"Let my strength be as my day!"

Dark may be the midnight hour,
With Death's shadow covered o'er;
Yet how drear soe'er the night,
God hath said, "Let there be light!"
Jesus can, if thou wilt pray,
Turn thy darkness into day.

Art thou tempted oft to say,
God with thorns hath hedged my way?
Dost then sit alone and weep,
Doth thy heart sad vigils keep?
Weeping may endure a night,
Joy shall come with morning light.

As Thy people once were fed
With the heaven-descended bread
Feed me thus in righteousness
In life's howling wilderness;
And, when fainting by the way,
Let my strength be as my day.

O thou comfortless and tost,
In thy Lord and Savior trust!
Lo! the daysprng from on high
Speaks thy great Deliverer nigh!
Leave thy fatherless to me;
"As thy day, thy strength shall be!"

Oh! when Death, with iron blow,
Strikes some dearly loved one low,
Vale of Shadows! though Despair
Walk in awful silence there;
Light in darkness thou may'st see;
"As thy day, thy strength shall be!"

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

BAPTISM OF JOHN, WHENCE WAS IT, FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

E. F. MOOMAW.

It might probably be expected that we would next notice as an institution conceived and introduced by men without divine authority the order of Odd Fellowship, but as I have not the means at hand of securing a knowledge of the order sufficient to warrant a critical examination of it, and as it is comparatively of little magnitude, simply an outgrowth of Freemasonry, with similar aims and objects, we will therefore class it with other unauthorized inventions of men and pass it by.

In passing along through this promiscuous world and interviewing the various institutions, human and divine, we necessarily meet in social intercourse with Sunday Schools. And in prosecution of our undertaking we must inquire "whence is it from God or of men," and associating again in the mind the facts as presented in our investigations. In the first several chapters of this treatise of institutions of universally acknowledged divine authenticity, that the scriptures so fully abounds with commands and exhortations that it leaves no room for a doubt as to whence they come. And in that the subject of this article is so extremely barren, destitute of precept or example in the history of primitive Christianity that I am compelled to doubt whether it is "from Heaven" or that it is divinely approved, neither am I prepared to admit that it can be made to subserve the best interests of vital Christianity. It is true that quotations are made from scripture in support of the institution, but are they, or are they not, susceptible of question, whether they are merely an afterthought to sustain, and not the basis of the organization. Let us notice for a moment the relevancy of these quotations, Eph. 6:4. contains the language which is invariably used when scriptural authority is demanded. "Fathers provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." But the reader will please notice that this scripture is a part of the apostles instructions upon family regulations. The duty of children to parents, parents to children, of servants to their masters and masters toward their servants, nothing here, as I opine that would ever have suggested the idea of Sunday Schools. And it is probable that it was the awakening in the mind of this fact, that induced the convention of Episcopal ministers at Pittsburg (the place where Sunday Schools were first established in the United States) to abandon them and throw the responsibility upon parents of bringing up their own children, as noticed in the PILGRIM of recent date. One more passage is sometimes referred to as sustaining Sunday Schools, "And God has set some in the Church first, Apostles; secondarily, Prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, government, diversities of tongues." The application of this passage is that we may employ "helps" as our judgment may suggest and hence the expediency of Sunday Schools. If such latitude is allowable, then the promiscuous singing and praying, the relating thrilling anecdotes, the rubbing the hands, the mourner's bench with all the altar exercises of modern revivals is in place. Surely if the above was designed by God as authority for Sunday Schools, it is a great departure from his usages on other institutions, and the apostles and all Christians were very slow to perceive, in that sixteen centuries were suffered to pass away before the discovery was made.

The origin of Sunday schools is said by some to date back to the reformation to the beginning of the reformation of the sixteenth century. Dr. Sears says, "that as early as 1527, ten years after the commencement of his great work, Luther laid the foundation of these schools, &c." "Eustace in his 'classical tour' speaking of the celebrated Charles Borromeo who died in 1584 says, many of his excellent institutions yet remain and among others that of Sunday Schools."

From Frieselanders, State of the poor in Germany, we learn that in 1773, a respectable ecclesiastic named Kindermann formed a Sunday School and that his example was soon followed by others."

In 1767 John Frederic Oberlin, pastor of the Waldbrich in the Ban de la Roche, commenced his Sabbath School. Joseph Allien, Miss Hannah Ball and others, come in for their share of the honors of the introduction of Sunday Schools. But finally Robert Raikes of Gloucester, England, is by the world regarded as the honor instrument, who stampel perplexity on the system and made it known to the world by publishing it in the Glowcester Journal of Nov. 3d, 1783.

The first Sunday School in the United States upon the present plan as said above was established in Pittsburg in Pennsylvania in the year 1800, in 1814 in Delaware and in New York. In 1816 the first Sunday School was organized in Virginia at the Baptist Church, called Ground Squirrel in the following manner, Captain Charles P. Goodal at the April muster of a militia company, he formed the men into a hollow square and invited all who were friendly to the cause, to meet him on the next morning, being the Sabbath with their children at the Ground Squirrel Meetinghouse, to organize a Sunday School, free of charge.

The above is the account of the origin of the system and as given by professed Christians, but Robert Owen the infidel, who declares that all religion is founded upon ignorance, and that it is the true source of all the crime and misery existing in the world, contests the claim, and charges the votaries of Christianity with borrowing the idea of infant schools from himself, he having first introduced them at New Lanark, five years before they were introduced elsewhere. But the priesthood, says he, has laid hold of these institutions, and are now moulding the children with them, to their own purposes. Whether Kindermann, Oberlin, Raikes or Owen, is entitled to the honor of the invention, the conclusion is inevitable, that it is of men and not from Heaven and belongs to the same class as Freemasonry, &c. One of the objects as claimed by its friends is to afford an opportunity, and encourage the indigent and neglected children, to learn to read, &c., that they may be able to read the Scriptures. It is certainly important that all should have this benefit, but looking at the subject from a literary standpoint, I regard it as secular in its nature and as such, to attend to it would be a desecration of the Sabbath day. This difficulty appears to have existed in the mind of some in the early days of its existence, to obviate which it is said that a right reverend bishop of that day gravely proposed to remove it, by suggesting that the Sunday Schools should be held on the Saturday afternoon.

Much has been claimed by the advocates of Sunday Schools for the cultivation of morality among the children and youth where they are in progress. On this point I can only say that I have been a close observer of its operations for nearly half a century and have failed to see the beneficial effects in that direction. In my youth I was an attendant at Sunday Schools for a considerable time, and have been surrounded by them all my life, some families patronized them others did not, and I have yet to see any advantage derived to those who attended over those who did not. If any difference the others have it. Our brethren as a class have never had anything to do with them, and I challange investigation to-day, and then if we do not show a better record than others in point of freedom from crime and evidence of high-toned morality, I yield the point.

The above is my experience and observation, and I am not alone on this subject, for I have before me a quotation from an author of the early history of the institution in England, as published in London 1794. He complains that Sunday Schools have existed there for nine years and no single instance of moral improvement has occurred to distinguish any of the Sunday School children from others and that he (the author), and his friends believed that the Sunday School violated the morality of the Sabbath, and the commandments of men are taught in connection with pure Christianity. This sentiment I fully endorse.

As to Sunday Schools being a divine institution I think ought to be fully settled in every intelligent mind, when the principle is applied as presented in the treatise, seeing that what God designed that men should do, he has so forcibly enjoined, and that this as well as all other human institutions is so extremely destitute of any support from the scriptures. And even admitting for the sake of argument, that we are justified in employing it as a help to extend the doctrine of the Bible as understood by the Brethren, it is worthy of serious consideration whether more would not be lost than gained. If we were strong enough to have our own schools in every neighborhood and control them in our own way, we might wield an influence over our own children and as many as would patronize us from other families, but here is the difficulty, and the danger, there are but few localities where this is the case, then what is the alternative? Why we must associate with other denominations, and we must meet them upon equal privileges in the selection of books, and giving instructions, &c., and then what is the consequence? It is that we lose instead of gaining, the children of others will most assuredly not, sacrifice the priviliges of fashion and other indulgences that they are taught to regard as innocent, and conform to the usages of these peculiar people, for so long as they can believe that they can be saved without making these sacrifices they are not going to make them, and this is not all for our own children seeing that we virtually recognize them as acceptable worshippers by uniting with them in devotion, will naturally incline to shun the cross and sympathize with them and their religion more or less. So every time we assimilate with them, the advantage accrues to them in the accession of numbers and our cause suffers loss. This is the inevitable consequence, and we cannot avoid it, and if we adopt the Sunday School system generally, we cannot possibly avoid assimilation more or less, and the final result will be that having employed the Sunday School as a "help," we will have to employ all the helps of corrupted Christianity, inordinate indulgence in the fashions and superfluities, with the mourners bench exercise corrupted to keep up our fraternity in name, and then the principle is lost, we must persevere in our exclusive practices, or abandon our peculiarities there is no alternative that I can see.

The better way as it appears to me is to keep the text constantly before the mind. Is it from heaven or of men seeing that our heavenly Father has in all his acknowledged institutions so faithfully instructed and "called us unto fellowship with his Son Jesus Christ," as in the observance of the Holy Sabbath the passover baptism, the Lord's Supper, feetwashing, the holy kiss, to which we may add the doctrine of peace, self-denial, taking up the cross, &c., and forwarned us of the danger of adding to or taking from, or allowing any innovations whatever. Stand still in the way and ask for the old paths and walk therein, and the promise is sure, that we shall find rest unto our souls, oh the glorious prospect the grand consummation.

In victory death is swallowed up,
All danger passed away;
No more to drink of sorrows cup,
We live in endless day.

My head thou wilt annoint with oil,
My cup will overrun;
I'll rest from all my care and toil,
The work assigned is done.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

It was our happy privilege, recently, to mingle in one of the extraordinary and uncommon scenes of the present day and times; being what is sometimes called a "Golden wedding," but more properly a "Family Reunion," which was celebrated May 22nd 1873 at the house, and in the family of our aged brother and Father-in-law, Samuel Meyers residing 3 miles north of McVeytown, Mifflin county, Pa.; whose family consists of ten children, six sons and four daughters, all of whom are still living and were personally represented with their companions on the above occasion.

The meeting at the old home-tend was a scene of much joyful interest and feeling on the part of all. The aged parents who apparently are almost ready to depart this life, and pass over, were once more, on the earth, permitted to take by the hand sons and daughters; from whom they were separated by long distance and time; some residing in Ill., some in Ind., others in Ohio, while the remainder in Pa.

With tears of joy, the aged father and weeping sons and daughters meet, and greet each other with the deeply comprehensive expression, "we are all here yet." It made our heart throb with joyful emotion to hear those loving words fall from aged and trembling lips; expressive of so much gratitude to the great preserver of all things.

The history of the family is as peculiar as the circumstances that brought about the reunion. The father, whose age is nearly 76 years, and the mother 5 years less, were married 50 years 2 months and a few days. The father moved to the valley, or place where he now resides, 3 years before marriage, which took place March 27, 1823. The mothers maiden name was Elizabeth Shelenberger, born and raised in Pfontzes Valley, Juniata county, Pa. The father was raised in Lost Creek Valley, same county. Moved to Mifflin county in 1820, where they have lived ever since, without any move except from an old log house a few yards away, into the large brick building in which he and his son Reuben P. Meyers now resides: and what is most remarkable there has never a death occurred in the house. Two of the sons are ministers and one a deacon, also two of the sons-in-law are ministers and one a deacon. The remainder of the family are all members of the Church except two sons and one son-in-law. There are 59 grand-children living and but few deaths have occurred; showing a remarkable longevity, and a strong tenacity to life; as a peculiar characteristic of the family.

The order of arrangement for the occasion was excellent, and of a strictly religious character. At about ten o'clock the family and a few guests assembled in the large room, seated and furnished for the occasion. Elder Joseph R. Hanawalt and wife, were seated at the head or first; after him the father and mother, then the children, with their companions according to age, beginning at the eldest, after this the guests which male in all about 30, besides, some of the grandchildren.

The services were then opened by the aged and gray haired father, who rose before his honored family and guests, leaning upon his staff and with trembling emotion delivered a free and complimentary address, followed by reading an appropriate passage from the Bible, and singing of a hymn, which was followed by a season of fervent thanksgiving and prayer, by Elder Hanawalt; after which privilege was given to sons and sons in-law, to address the meeting: James R. Lane, who was the oldest son-in-law spoke first, followed by P. S. Myers and myself, briefly, all of which assumed an air of elegance, and a truly religious character. A deep feeling of gratitude formed the chief element of the whole affair. After the family compliments were all offered, then rose to the floor an old neighbor, Mr. Gabriel Dunmire, who furnished the guests with a historical account of the father's early settlement in the Valley, and many complimentary remarks, which was done with much feeling and respect, who was followed by the old family physician, Dr. Rothrock of McVeytown, who did much credit to himself and the family by his very appropriate remarks and laudible address. Then our much respected Bro. J. R. Hanawalt closed this exercise by a short but touching address to all, in a very becoming and Christian manner. The scene closed by singing and prayer, after which the company of guests were conducted to an adjoining room and seated in order around a table richly ladened with the good gifts of the earth, when all were made happy in the partaking of these refreshments and in pleasant converse with each other. A move was set on motion by Mr. Dunmire and Dr. Rothrock to present the father and mother each with an easy rocking-chair, as a token of the high regard all had for them, which was soon put into effect, and a sufficient amount was raised for that purpose.

The distance of travel, counting for one person, in coming to the place would be about 11272 miles and and whole expense about $210 00. The occasion seemed to be highly appreciated by both of the parents, and afforded a season of refreshing to both of their souls that we hope will be pleasantly remembered while they live, and was a scene of much joy and pleasure to all who participated in it, while we trust that God was honored in all that was said and done.

UNLAWFUL INTERCOURSE.

Ephraim hath miseried himself among the people. Ephraim is a cake not turned. Strangers hath devoured him and he knoweth it not. Moses 7 : 8.9.

The tenor of the above charge against Ephraim can hardly be mistaken. It is that strangers hath devoured him and he knoweth it not, that is, by familiarity with strangers to God, he had become initiated into their ways and practices and consequently had brought the displeasure of God upon him, and so intereeptibly had this evil crept upon him that he even knew it not. So dangerous a thing is it to have familiarity or unawiful intercourse with strangers to God or enemies to his cause, and yet how common a thing it is in the Old Testament to hear complaints against Israel for their too great familiarities with the heathen, and shall we, who are called Christians, make no difference in the choice of our company or connections between the pious and profane or between the formalist and the real Christian? We find that the primitive Christians did make this distinction and St. Paul asks: "what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness and what communion hath light with darkness and what concord hath Christ with Belial?" Should we not therefore take upon us this part of the cross of Christ in this day of degeneracy, and neither abet nor encourage either by our presence or support, and of the popular and fashionable schemes of religion of the present day lest we thereby treat with too much familiarity or hold an unlawful intercourse with those who, though profess to serve God and say that they are of the circumcision, yet their circumcision has become uncircumcision and they are, in reality, enemies to God and to the cause of his Christ, enemies too, more dangerous to the souls of men than the heathen or infidel, for from the latter we fly as from an adder. Sanctity and bearing the name of Christians, are considered as proper examples to go by and therefore lead others to imitate their conduct, principal trait of which is pride and covetousness. I therefore, consider such professors of Christianity to be equally avoided as a heathen or infidel by those who live in the life and power of religion. "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and will be a father unto you and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty. A PILGRIM.

A WORD TO OUR YOUNG BRETHREN AND SISTERS.

Now these things have I spoken unto you that you should not be offended.—John 16:1.

These words were spoken by Jesus to His disciples after He had told them that the world would persecute them. He had been warning them of this persecution and telling them that when it came, they should not be offended at Him or His doctrine, and it applies to His followers to-day just as well as it did then. So when the world persecutes and hates us, and makes us the filth thereof, we should not be offended, but take fresh courage and try to live nearer Jesus whom it hated before it did us.

My dear young brethren and sisters, I know some of the trials and persecutions which young Christians have to pass through, but let us ever look to Jesus who is able to keep us from becoming offended at the narrow way which leadeth unto life. Many, in our day, are becoming offended on account of pride and worldly lusts, and leaving the narrow way. But hear the Apostle on the subject; "Love not the world, neither the things in the world, if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in Him." Then how careful we should be that we do not let the vain and transient things of this world occupy our time and talent. So my brethren and sisters, when we go astray from the fold of Christ, and we are admonished by our brethren, let us not become offended, but go to Jesus on our bended knees, in our closets, and ask Him to give us oil in our vessels that our lamps may burn brighter, and that we may be a light to the world. There are a great many temptations and worldly things to draw us from our Savior, but He has conquered all these things before us, and will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear, if we will go to Him and ask for help, for He is a present help in time of trouble. BY A SISTER.

A LEAF FROM MY KNOWLEDGE DRAWER.

Christ says; "Do not kill." A Christian will obey Christ, therefore a Christian will not kill.

Jesus says; "If my Kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." But his Kingdom is not of this would, hence it follows that his servants will not fight.

If the Old Testament had been written by the Christians, it would not have been acknowledged and received by the Jews. But the Jews do acknowledge and receive it, therefore it was not written by the Christians.

The Old Testament was first written in the Hebrew language, and afterwards translated into the Greek about 300 years before the birth of Christ.

The backward action in baptism was invented about 1489 years after the death of Christ.

No two truths ever contradict each other. The Bible is truth, whatever contradicts the Bible is not truth.

Christ told his disciples that they ought to wash one another's feet. The disciples did what they ought to do, therefore they washed one another's feet.

The apostles practiced christian baptism in their day, but single immersion was not invented till long after the death of the apostles. Therefore single immersion is not christian baptism.—J. H. Moore.

PUTTING OUT A PIPE.

The late Rev. Thomas Collins was a model tract-distributor, being instant in season and out of season. He often traveled in smoking-cars, in order to have a wider field for doing good. In his interesting memoir recently published, are recorded some incidents of one of his journeys.

"In the train I presented a New Testament to a soldier; he received it gladly, and I was pleased to see that he caught the meaning at once when I called it a "sword."

"A cooper got in at an early station, and, without an apology, lighted his pipe. After a little introductory talk, I submitted for his consideration whether the cost of that cloudy gratification would not send a child to school; and whether that would not be a better outlay as it would confer a benefit that would last forever?"

"He said:—'I never thought of that, but is true. So out goes the pipe, and here's for the child.'

"Do you mean so? Will you give up the practice?"

"'I be sure I will, and send the young un to school.'

"I am so glad to have put your pipe out. Will you oblige me by the gift of the cast-off thing?"

"'Certainly sir, here it is.' So with joy I brought the trophy home."

Reader, are you a tobacco user? If so, would not the money you spend on cigars and tobacco go a great way toward increasing the comfort of your family? Will you not "put your pipe out" for their sake?

HE that makes but one step up stairs though he is much nearer to the top of the house, yet has stepped from the ground, and is delivered from the foulness of that. So in the first step of prayer: "God be merciful to me a sinner."

FORBEARANCE is a domestic jewel.

WORKING FOR OTHERS.

That men and women are not placed in the world for their own welfare or their own interest alone, is a fact which we are prone to overlook. We should work, not only for ourselves, but for others also. Everybody should work. Do we know for what great work we are placed in the world? Is it not to prepare ourselves for a state of immortality? Yes, this is the work that is required of us, and this is the work in which we should assist each other. Do not construe this language in such a manner as to make me say that we are not required to labor for the sustenance of the body for without this we could not labor for the salvation of the soul. I simply mean, that if the support of this tenement of clay would be the only work which we have to perform, our existence would be a blank of no importance whatever. Indeed, I doubt very much whether we would have any existence at all. The salvation of the soul, then, is our life work. Have you ever thought of this, my young friends? If you have not, will you please think of it now? Will you not be so kind to yourself as to not only think, but also act upon it now? Will you now, while you are yet living, act upon it yourself and strive to get others to do the same, that it may be said of you, when you are gone, that you did not live for yourself alone but that you assisted others in starting toward the bright home of Saints?

Do you not feel that if you take this course in life, your prospect in the end will be cheering, and that the otherwise dark cloud of futurity will beam radient light? Ah, yes, and then those dear friends whom you leave behind will not mourn as they would for those for whom there is no hope, but would be animated and cheered with the thought that you have gone to a better world and that by being good and faithful in the cause of their Savior they may join their loved ones in the eternal regions of glory. Let each one, then, instead of working against others by evil speaking, work for others by giving words of comfort and consolation, always exhorting to a life of holiness. It is true that our life may be blotted over with many errors, but when we know this we should remember that "to err is human, but to love divine." Then let the divine institution of love reign in every breast, and then this earth will become more like Heaven, thus bringing about, to a certain extent, an answer to the beautiful petition, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Then, let every reader of the PILGRIM labor for this end in order that the world may become both wiser and better, and we may see the beautiful approaching of God's kingdom, for which the earnest appeal of God's holy people is daily ascending, as it were, upon a spiritual telegraph wire, to the regions of bliss.

THE CONSOLATION OF ISRAEL.

"Waiting for the consolation of Israel." Luke—2: 25.

Several glorious titles of Christ have been considered, out of each of which much comfort flows to believers. It is comfortable to a wounded soul to regard him as a physician: comfortable to a condemned and unworthy soul to look upon him under the idea of mercy. The loveliness, the desirableness and the glory of Christ are all so many springs of consolation. In the context you have an account of Simeon's prophecy concerning Christ, and in the text a description of the person and character of Simeon himself, he was a just and devout man; and "he waited for the consolation of Israel." That the consolation of Israel is a phrase descriptive of Jesus Christ is beyond all doubt, if you consult verse 26, where Simeon is satisfied by receiving Christ into his arms, the consolation for which he had so long waited for, as all the believers of the the times which preceded the incarnation of Christ waited for that blessed day. Simeon and others that waited with him were sensible that the time of the promise was come, which could not but raise a general expectation of him, but Simeon's faith was confirmed by a particular revelation, ver. 26, that he should see Christ before he saw death, which could not but greatly raise his expectations to look out for him, whose coming would be the greatest consolation to the whole Israel of God.

Jesus Christ is the only consolation of believers, and none besides them, so speaks the apostles; "for we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus and have no confidence in the flesh." Phil. 3: 3. Those that worship God in the spirit are sincere believers; to such sincere believers Christ is consolation. "Our rejoicing is in Christ Jesus," and they have no consolation in anything besides him; nothing in the world can give them comfort without Christ. The Gospel is glad tidings of great joy, but that which makes it to be so is Jesus Christ, whom it reveals to us. Several things here require attention. What is meant by consolations that Christ, and he only is consolation to believers? 1st. Jesus Christ brings whatsoever is precious to the souls of believers. Is pardon desired by a person condemned? This Christ brings to all believers, "and this is his name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our righteousness." Jer.—23: 6. This cannot but give strong consolation; righteousness is the foundation of peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Rom. 14: 17. "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever," Isa. 32: 17. Come to a dejected soul laboring under the burden of guilt, and say, cheer up; I bring you good tidings, such an estate has fallen to you, or such a trouble is ended. Alas, this will not reach the heart, if you can bring me, says he, good news from heaven that my sins are forgiven and God is reconciled how soon should I be comforted! And therefore, as one well observes, this was the usual receipt with which Christ cured the souls of men and women when he was here on earth. Son, daughter, "be of good cheer thy sins are forgiven thee." Are the hopes and expectations of heaven and glory cheering? Yes, nothing is if this be not, we "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Rom. 5: 2 Christ brings to the souls of men all the solid grounds and foundations upon which they build their expectations of glory. "Christ in you the hope of glory." Col.—1: 27. 2nd. Jesus Christ removes from believers whatever is uncomfortable, therein relieving them against all their affliction and sorrow. Is sin a burden and trouble to believers? Christ, and none but him, removes that burden. "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death; I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom.—7: 24, 25. The satisfaction of his blood, Eph. 5: 2. The sanctification of his spirit, 1 John 5: 6, his perfect deliverance of his people from the very being of sin at last. Eph. 5: 26, 27. This relieves at present and removes finally the matter and ground of all their troubles and sorrows for sin. Do the temptations of satan burden believers? Temptation is an enemy under the walls, it greatly endangers and therefore cannot but greatly afflict the souls of believers, but Christ brings the only relief against temptations. The intercession of Christ is a singular relief at present. "But I have prayed for thee that they faith fail not." Luke 22: 32, and the promises of Christ are a full relief for the future. "The God of peace shall bruise satan under your feet shortly." Rom. 16: 20. Is spiritual desertion and the hiding of God's face the ground of affliction and distress to believers? "Thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled." Psa. 30: 7. Christ brings to believers substantial consolation against the troubles of desertion, he himself was deserted of God for a time, that they might not be deserted forever in him also the promises are made to believers, that notwithstanding God may desert them for a time, yet the union between him and them shall not be dissolved. Heb 3: 5; Jer. 32: 40. Though he forsake them for a season in respect to the manifestation of his favor, yet he will return again and comfort them. Isa. 54: 7. Though satan pull hard yet he will never be able to pluck them out of his father's hand. John 10: 28, 29. Are outward afflictions the ground of dejection and trouble? How do our hearts fail and our spirits sink under the many smarting rods of God upon us, but our relief and consolation under them all is in Christ; for the rod that afflicts us is in the hand of Christ that loveth us. As many as I love I rebuke and chasten. Rev. 3: 19, his design in affliction is our profit. Heb. 12: 10. That design of his for our good being accomplished. Rom. 8: 28, and after that no more afflictions for ever. "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Rev. 21: 4.

METHOD OF GRACE.

KNOW WHAT YOU TEACH.

The great want of the ministry is deeper Christian experience. You may feel the need of more enlarged study. You may be conscious that wider reading, and travel and experience would enable you to light up your sermons with apter illustrations. But there is no lack by which you will feel so crippled as by the conviction that you do not yourself know what you desire to teach others. A pastor said to his people, in a discourse on the Sabbath after his installation, "I shall point you higher than I have been myself." Point them! Yes; but your flock will not go for your "pointing them;" they must be led. The "shepherd goeth before them and leadeth them out." You can not make a sinner feel that the most momentous thing conceivable is for him to save his soul, unless your own heart has been penetrated with the awful realities of the future world. You can say nothing of redeeming love that will melt them, unless your own heart has first been melted. In the drama of common life it may be possible to "assume a virtue though you have it not;" but in winning souls you cannot buy with counterfeit coin. Your power will depend upon your speaking things which your own eyes have seen, and your own heart has felt. This is all I really cared to say, because I so deeply feel that here is the secret of the Lord, here is the hiding of power.

But on this point, brother beloved, I charge you with all my soul:—Sit at Jesus' feet for your sermons. Do not stand on the outside of truth and try to look in; but get inside the truth and try to look outward. Your ministry will hang on you like a leaden weight if your own experience of the truth does not lay upon you a sweet necessity to preach to others. But you will wear it as a garment of joy when you can say, "The love of Christ constraineth me." The Master knew that human resources are futile for this work, and so he said to his disciples, "tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." There are many qualifications which you are very earnestly and laboriously to seek in order to be a good minister of Jesus Christ; but the one thing you can not do without is the endowment of the Holy Spirit.

"If thy presence go not with me," said Moses, "carry me not hence." And he said, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." —Advance.

LITTLE MARY'S WISH.

"I have seen the first robin of spring, mother dear,
And have heard the brown darling sing;
You said, "Hear it and wish, and t'will surely come true;'
So I've wished such a beautiful thing!

I thought I would like to ask something for you;
But I couldn't think what there could be
That you'd want while you had all these beautiful things;
Besides you have papa and me!

So I wished for a ladder; so long that 'twould stand
One end by our own cottage door,
And the other go up past the moon and the stars,
And lean against Heaven's white floor.

Then I'd get out to put on my pretty white dress,
With my sash and my darling new shoes,
And I'd find some white roses to take up to God—
The most beautiful ones I could choose.

And you and dear papa would sit on the ground
And kiss me, and tell me 'Good by;'
Then I'd go up the lader far out of your sight,
Till I came to the door in the sky!

I wonder if God keeps the door fastened 'Tight?
But if one little crack I could see,
I would whisper, 'Please, God, let this little girl in:
She's as tired as she can be!

She came all alone from the earth to the sky,
For she's always been wanting to see
The gardens of Heaven with their robins and flowers,
Please, God, is there room for me?

And then, when the angels had opened the door,
God would say, 'Bring the little child here;'
But he'd speak it so softly I'd not be afraid,
And he'd smile just like you, mother dear!

He would put his kind arms round you dear little girl,
And I'd ask him to send down for you,
And papa, and cousin, and all that I love—
O dear! don't you wish 'twould come true?"

The next spring-time, when the robins came home
They sang over grass and flowers
That grew where the foot of the ladder stood,
Whose top reached the heavenly bowers.

And the parents had dressed the pale still child
For her flight to the summer land,
In a fair white robe with one snow white rose
Folded tight in her pulseless hand.

And now at the foot of the ladder they sit,
Looking upward with quiet tears,
Till the beckoning hand and the fluttering robe
Of the child at the top appears.

JEM'S ANGEL.

Jem was cold and hungry and miserable. It had rained all night, and toward morning a sharp north-east wind began to blow, freezing the rain as it fell. Jem's bed was a pretty hard one—a pile of straw partially held in place by what had once been some lengths of blue jean, and covered by the remnants of an old calico quilt. Once Jem had thought himself quite well off, but then that was when Bob was alive. Old Lottie, who was a kind soul if she did get drunk, pitied the poor homeless boys and gave them the privilege of sleeping in her garret at three cents a night. In the morning they went out often without breakfast, to do anything they could find to do—run of errands, sweep crossings, hold a gentleman's horse for a minute, anything that was not begging.

Bob had splendid dreams of some day becoming a newsboy. The time was always coming—alas, it never came!—when such an amount of surplus funds would be left over after the days expenses, that Bob would enter at once upon his career, and then good-bye to hunger and cold and the ills of life. It would take but a few days for Bob to make profits enough to set Jem up in trade too, and then wouldn't they lead a jolly life? Bob's imagination even saw a little cottage in the country and old Lottie in it, cured of her love of strong drink, and peace and plenty everywhere. Jem believed in Bob devoutly. It never occurred to him that such glorious plans could fail. Bob had always taken care of him, and always would, of course. He was so much bigger and stronger and then he was so cheery. There was never a time so dark that he couldn't see something bright just ahead.

Poor Jem! all that light was gone now. Bob was very tired one night, and the next morning he didn't even know Jem, but kept talking about the green fields, though it was in the depth of winter, and the little baby sister who died before Jem could remember. Old Lottie didn't go out that day; she had a few pennies in her pocket, and she did all she could for the dying boy, but it was no use. He smiled once before he died, on the wretched little boy at his side, sobbing with cold and terror, and said, Cheer up, Jem; it'll all come right."

The overseers of the poor took Bob away and Jem was left cold and hungry and miserable.

The sun shone out from a wintry sky that morning after the cold rain. Jem went out. He didn't know where he was going and he didn't care. He just wanted to be where Bob was. Bob was his heaven. He wandered on. Once he stopped and looked wistfully at a stall; there was hot coffee and rolls and great slices of bread, but he didn't say anything. The man at the stall saw him. "Poor little chap," said he, and threw him a thick slice of rye bread. He felt better after that, still he couldn't see how it was to come right, as Bob had said; but then Bob always knew.

He had got a long way from the garret by this time, but he was very cold. Two little boys, warmly clad ran a long ahead of him. One said, "I'm 'fraid we're late," and then they turned in at a church door. As they disappeared the chorus, "Yes, Jesus loves me," came ringing out. Jem stood looking in, and wondering what it meant. The singing went on, and then a sudden longing filled his aching heart to learn who it was that loved the little boys and girls in there so much. He pushed the door open and entered. A great stove, bright and glowing stood right by the door; he slipped behind it and no one saw him. Pretty soon they sang again. This time it was, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me." Jem was in a maze of wonder and delight. It was all beginning to come right; he knew it would but he didn't expect it so soon. Finally the warmth stole into him and he slept.

When he woke a gentleman was talking. Jem rose to his feet and listened. A great card was hanging where all could see it, and though Jem could not read, he knew that the gentleman was talking about the words on the card: "He shall give his angels charge over thee." Jem didn't know what that meant, but he listened, and the gentleman spoke very simply. "Is there anything in all the world to be afraid of, dear children? Why, think! God gives an angel—a great, strong, powerful angel—the charge of you, that means the care of you. He sees that you are not able to take care of yourselves, and so he giveth each one of you an angel to go with you and take care of you. He is with you every day, and at night, when you lie down to sleep, your angel watches over you, and keeps you from harm." Jem heard with his heart in his throat. Why, this was just what he wanted, now that Bob was gone. He didn't know who God was, or what an angel might be, but felt pretty sure by this time that Jesus of whom they sang, and the good God who sent the angel, and even the angel himself, ware all one and the same good being who took care of everybody in the world, and so would take care of him. Bob must have known all about it, and that was why he said it would all come right.

They sang again, and then the children went away. Jem wanted to make quite sure. He must ask the kind gentleman about it, so as to know where to find God. Nearly all had gone before the gentleman came. He saw the eager face of the ragged boy before he reached him, and stopped.

"Please, tell me," began Jem, "where is the man what takes care of little boys as hasn't got any Bob."

"It is the good God, who takes care of everybody, my poor boy," said the gentleman kindly. "But what has become of Bob?"

"I do' no; they took him off an' put him in the ground; he said it 'nd all come right, but I was 'fraid till you said as how God 'nd send an angel; say, m'ster, be you an angel?"

"No, my boy," said the gentleman in a husky voice, "I am not an angel, but perhaps God has sent me to you for all that. He takes care of you all the time, and it is he who sent you here to-day."

"Yes, I guess he did. I was so cold an' hungry, an' I didn't know what to do, 'cause Bob's gone and wont never come back. But I ain't 'fraid now. I'll go home an' tell old Lottie. God'll send a angel to go long with me, an' it'll all come right. Bob said so. Thank you, sir, for tellin' me 'bout it."

The brave little fellow started to go out, but Mr. Brown stopped him to learn where he lived, and the next day sought out the child who had taught him such a lesson of trust. Old Lottie wasn't drunk, and told him how friendless the poor lad was; how his father died of hard drink, and his mother a gentle lady, straggled a little and then died, leaving her boys too young to know the name of mother. Mr. Brown's eyes grew moist as she told of Bob's devotion to his little Jem, and when she ended, he took the child by the hand and went out.

Jem never forgot, in the happy, prosperous days that followed, the lesson of trust he learned that morning in the care of the dear Father, and Mr. Brown's faith is strengthened every day by his simple assurance that every thing will somehow and some time "come right."

WHAT AILED OLIVER.

"Get up little boy. You are lying in bed too long; breakfast will soon be ready. The canary bird has taken his bath, and is now singing a sweet song. Get up, get up, or I shall throw this pillow at you!"

That is what sister Charlotte said to Oliver Reed one frosty morning in November. He was a good little fellow; but he had one fault—he was too fond of lying in bed in the morning.

"Don't throw the pillow at me!" cried Oliver; "I'll promise to get up in five minutes."

"If you would be 'healthy, wealthy, and wise,' you must rise early, little boy," said Charlotte.

When Oliver came down to the breakfast table, his father said, "How is this, Oliver? You are late again."

Oliver hung his head; and Charlotte said, "I woke him in good season, sir; but he went off to sleep again the minute I left the room, though he promised to be up in five minutes."

"I went to sleep and forgot all about it," said Oliver.

"Come here, my boy, and let me feel your pulse," said his father. "I should not wonder if Oliver were suffering from a disease which is very common at this time."

Oliver gave his hand to his father, who, after feeling his pulse, said: "Yes, it is as I thought. Poor Oliver has Slack's disease. Take him up to bed again. Put his breakfast by the side of his bed; and when he feels strong enough he can eat it. He may stay at home from school to-day."

The little boy wondered what Slack's disease could be; but he went up stairs with his sister, and he was put to bed. He could not sleep, however. He heard children playing out of doors; he heard Ponto barking, and Tommy, the canary bird, sing a sweet song.

Then Oliver called his sister, and said; "Charlotte, what is Slack's disease? Is it very dangerous?"

"I rather think not," said Charlotte. "You dear little simpleton, don't you know what father meant? He meant you were troubled with laziness; that's all."

Oliver saw that a trick had been played on him. He jumped out of bed, dressed, and ate his breakfast, and ran off to school, where he arrived just in season.

Since that day, Oliver has been the first one up in the house. He is no longer troubled with Slack's disease.—Nursery.

THE PRECIOUS LITTLE PLANT.

Two little girls, Bridget and Walburgia, went to the neighboring town, each carrying on their head a basket of fruit to sell for money enough to buy the family dinner. Bridget murmured and fretted all the way, but Walburgia only joked and laughed. At last Bridget got out of all patience and said vexedly:

"How can you go on laughing so? Your basket is as heavy as mine, and you are not a bit stronger. I don't understand it."

"Oh, it is easy enough to understand," replied Walburgia.

"How so?"

"I have a certain plant that I put on the top of my load and it makes it so light that I can hardly feel it. Why don't you do so too?"

"Indeed! it must be a very precious little plant. I wish I could lighten my load with it. Where does it grow? tell me. What do you call it?"

"It grows wherever you plant it, and give it a chance to take root, and there is no telling the relief it gives. Its name is patience!"—Healer.

Dear Pilgrim:—On last Saturday eve., I had the pleasure of being with brother John Stamy and his kind family. Our acquaintance was an agreeable one, and our first visit, one that will be remembered with pleasure.

On Sabbath morning I accompanied him to church at Milltown, some eight miles distant. The meeting was largely attended. Sermon by brother Stamy, followed by brother Keller, subject, baptism. Two souls were added to the fold. At this place a Discussion was held some years ago between the Brethren and Campbellites. The discussion did not result in a general change of sentiment, yet our Brethren lost nothing, while several of the Campbellites have since united with the Brethren

On Wednesday last, (May 28,) the brethren met at the Foglesanger M. H to hold their Lovefeast. Brethren Keller, Hollinger, Stouffer, Stamy, and an other brother whose name I cannot recall, was the ministerial force from abroad. The meeting was well attended, and an interest manifested. The order during the evening exercises was good, although the house was crowded and uncomfortably warm. The next morning Bro. Stouffer discoursed from the words, "Our Father who art in Heaven," followed by brethren Keller and Stamy. The meeting was a good one, and we have it to say, it was good to be there.

Since here at school, I have formed the acquaintance of most of the brethren of this little congregation and can truly say, I feel at home among them. Bro. Eckerman is the Elder, assisted by brethren John and D. M. Foglesanger and —— Mahn. Through the kindness of the brethren here I get to church nearly every Sabbath, and in this respect I am much better suited at this school than I could be at some others. I am still having some hopes, however, that some plan may be devised by which a Brethren's school may be started in the East. A school of this kind would suit me and all of our brethren and sisters much better. I hope that our brethren may keep thinking about this matter. Things that go into effect so hastily, sometimes do not terminate so well, so let us keep thinking, and when the time comes that we can do something, we will be the better prepared for the work. The only obstacle in the way now, is a lack of funds, and when I look at the wealth in the Church, it does not seem that that ought to be in the way. But perhaps I cannot see, I only hope it is not the love of money that is in the way.

MEXICO, IND., }
May 25th, 1873. }

Dear Pilgrim:—By your permission I will try and make you somewhat acquainted with this part of the Brotherhood, generally known as the Mexico Church, Ind. The Church has seven ministers, two of which are Elders, about ten Deacons and about 365 members in all. They have a large brick Church house near Mexico, one Church house near Wolleytown, and are building a third house not far from Chili.

The church is in a prosperous condition, although the accessions are not so numerous as in some of the churches I see represented in the PILGRIM, owing probably to the cause that the brethren do not indulge in any series of meetings, no more than their regular meetings. They do not seem to think much of what they call protracted meetings, and probably fear to indulge such would be drifting too far from shore, but the apostle saith, "forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is." He does not say regular or call meetings and for our part we do not see but it would be right, and have a tendency to good to have, say a few days meetings for the awakening of those that are slumbering in their sins, and for the encouragement of those that are already traveling on the narrow way.

We, of course, when we sow do not expect for all the seed to mature, as we find some fell on stony ground and sprung up but for the want of depth of earth it withered away. Maybe if such were cultivated and watered with a few extra showers from the pure fountain and told of the "hope which is laid up in heaven for them whereof they have heard before in the word of truth of the Gospel," Col. 1 : 5. "They might become rooted and built up in Christ and established in the faith," "and awake to everlasting life."

As I have so far deviated from the subject I will not return again, but say, finally brethren whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think over these things. Phil. 2 : 8. Those thing which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, do; and the God of peace be with you all. 4 : 9.

Think the PILGRIM ought to be in every house of both saint and sinner. Take it brethren for yourselves and children to read.

Occasion improved by W. R. Lierle, from 2 Cor. 5 : 1, "For we know that if our earthly house were dissolved," &c. Both of these were very promising young sisters, and we feel their loss, but our loss is their gain, wherefore let us comfort one another in this faith.

The community has lost one of her best neighbors, the church one of her brightest lights and the family a most affectionate mother and companion, but we have all reason to believe that our loss is her great gain. Peace be unto her ashes till they shall be called forth by the trump of God. Funeral occasion improved by J. H. Filmore and the writer.

OUR ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

We have now returned from our Conference, and no doubt our patrons who had not the pleasure of being there will be anxious to hear something about it, and we are glad that we can inform our readers that we are prepared to meet their reasonable expectations. In this No. we will not give the deliberations of the Conference but simply the outside and preparatory part of it, and even in this, we feel to be as brief as possible. Our Conference is getting to be entirely too big a thing, attended with more labor and cost than what is justified by the ends accomplished, and if we continue to encourage its growing prominence as a place for a grand social and brotherly association of our brethren and sisters, its original design and true character may be measureably lost. This meeting, as now held, seems to have a double character. First the "Brethren's Association" and second, the "Brethren's Council." The characteristics of both of these may be very good and conducive to the growth and prosperity of the Church, but whether the two should be combined and both be held at the same time and place, might be another question—and in fact is now a subject of serious thought in the minds of many of our brethren. That there should be but one leading object or design in our Annual Conference is evident to every thinking mind, but when we go to these meetings and there see the thousands of anxious brethren and sisters present to hear the proceedings of this body, it is against the characteristics of our religion to deny them of this privilege. Therefore it behooves us to get into some plan by which the information there obtained, can be had at home. This can only be done by giving a fair and correct report of their business transactions through our periodicals. This has now been granted with a, perhaps, necessary restriction and we are now prepared to give a report from which as much satisfaction of the proceedings of the meeting can be learned by reading it as was obtained by those who were present.

On Monday morning (June 2,) we with a number of others took the train at our station, where we met a pretty fair delegation from the Eastern Churches, but not as large as we expected on account of a large number having gone up on Friday and Saturday previous. Our company was enlarged at almost every station, so that by the time we reached Bridgeport we numbered about 300. At this place we were necessitated to lay over some four hours with no very desirable accommodations. After being there a short time and learning fully our situation, it was moved that some religious services be held, there being a number of ministers present. The move was favorably received and we soon found a suitable, shady location where there was a temporary stand made, using logs and rocks for seats, which by the way seem to be one of the characteristics of the place.

Bro. D. Keller opened the exercises by lining a hymn, some appropriate remarks and prayer. The exercises were continued by John Gotwals, L F. Good, J. R. Lane, George Brumbaugh and others. The time, though of a considerable length, was pleasantly and we trust profitably spent. Bridgeport is the present terminus of our line of road and also a point on the Connellsville road. At the regular time the train from the South came along when we all got aboard for Dale City. The train was already pretty well filled and by the addition of our company it was slightly overloaded and in consequence, had a very slow ride. The road from this point to Dale City passes through an extremely rugged country, but the scenery is grand and makes the trip extremely interesting to educated and nature appreciating minds. After a pleasant ride we came to Dale City, the place of our destination. Here we were met by brother Shoemaker and taken to his home where we were well cared for during the meeting. The attendance of this Conference was larger than the two previous years out not as large as on some former occasions. The accommodations were very good and all were entertained as well as could be reasonably expected under the circumstances. The Conference was held in a large barn which is now vacated on account of being within the borough limits. It was well seated and accommodated a large number of people. The eating tent was made of boards, 160x40 feet and seated 750 persons at a time and generally took from three to four tables to accommodate the multitude.

The eating arrangement was especially good, from the fact that they had the right man in the right place. The provisions were in abundance and a surplus of several thousand loaves, so that all were cared for and none turned away empty.

The facilities for having the word preached, was also good, and a large number of sermons delivered during the meeting in the town and surrounding vicinity, which we hope may have a christianizing effect upon the community.

The Conference deliberations were very similar to that of former occasions, and the queries generally were such as had been discussed in former meetings. Some of those who made themselves prominent as speakers became unduly boisterous at times, but on the whole, it was about as good as could be expected especially while we have among us those who have not yet learned that the greatest victory we can achieve is to conquer ourselves. But notwithstanding our seeming difficulties, the meeting was a good one and hope it may have a salutary effect upon the general brotherhood. The meeting and being together of the brethren and sisters was the most congenial feature of the conference and was beautifully expressed by the clerk of the meeting, in the closing remarks of which we have a full report and will be published in the close of the proceedings of the meeting.

During the meeting, we had the pleasure of meeting and forming the acquaintance of many of our patrons and friends and on account of our time being largely taken up in a business relation we could not give our friends that attention that we would have been pleased to do under more favorable circumstances, but for this, we hope all will make due allowance and feel assured that all favors are highly and duly appreciated.

On Thursday A. M., the business part of the meeting closed and our labors ceased. The afternoon we spent pleasantly in taking a view of the town and making a few calls. Friday morning we took the train homeward bound, with a number of others, and after a pleasant ride landed safely home where we found our work about three days behind time. This we will either make up, or lose to run it in at the close of the year. Hoping that all our dear brethren and sisters have safely reached the place of destination and have been greatly benefitted by what they saw and heard we close for the present, expecting, the Lord willing, next week to commence a full report of the proceedings of the Conference.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

For a number of years our brethren and sisters have been calling for a full and correct report of the proceedings of our Annual Conference. Heretofore, this could not be had, but to this meeting we took with us a competent short hand reporter with the determination to give our readers just as much of the proceedings as would be allowed. The subject was before the meeting and the report was granted with a restriction which will be noticed hereafter. We have now a full and correct report of the meeting, including the opening address of the Moderator with all the discussions and the concluding remarks of the Clerk, so that those who remained at home can have as complete a knowledge of the business part of the meeting as those who were present. This cost us money and we hope to be remunerated, in part, by our agents and friends making a determined effort to increase our circulation. 400 or 500 names can be had if our friends will go to work at once. The report will commence next week and be continued until published. The PILGRIM will be sent from No. 24 (or next week) to the end of the year on the following terms. Single copy 80 cents. 5 copies 3.75. 10 copies, 7.00. 15 copies, 10.50 and 20 copies 14.25. Now brethren and sisters, think of it. Many of you have spent, twenty, thirty and some fifty dollars to have the benefits of this meeting. We offer to give nearly or quite the same information for 80 cents. There is scarcely a member in the whole Brotherhood but what would take the PILGRIM the remainder of the year if they were informed of this report. We have now 500 single subscribers. One half of these can send us one name at 80 cts. if they will try. Please try. How many clubs of ten, fifteen and twenty can we have? Go to work at once and let us see what can be done when there is a determined effort made. Those that have not got the money now, we will wait them until after harvest or during the year. In making this offer, we want our agents to take only such as they would not be afraid to trust themselves. As an extra inducement we will send each subscriber, a PILGRIM Almanac FREE as long as we can supply them. We will issue a large extra edition commencing with the "Report" so that all new subscribers can have the proceedings complete. Remember, this report will give all the queries, their discussions and answers. Every body that has any interest in the proceedings of our A. M. will want to read this report. Give them an opportunity by asking them to subscribe for the PILGRIM. We can still supply some twenty volumes complete at 1.50.

PILGRIM ALMANAC FOR 1874.

All those who have any corrections to make in our ministerial list should do so at once or as soon as possible. Please examine it and wherever you see a mistake, correct it and send it to us. Also give us the names and address of those which were not in last year and those that have been elected within the last year. We also wish reading matter for its columns. All those who wish to assist us will please do so as soon as possible.

AIR-BRAKE.—The Franklin Institute committee of science witnessed a series of experiments with the Westinghouse air-brake, on the train on the Pennsylvania railroad this afternoon, (the 20th) operated from the engine. A train going at the rate of thirty miles an hour was stoped in sixteen seconds, moving 503 feet after the brake was applied. Operated from the center car, it was stopped in fifteen seconds, within 515 feet. Acting automatically, by severing, the train was stopped in twelve seconds within 367 feet. When going forty miles an hour, the brake was applied by severing the engine from the train, and a stoppage was effected in ten seconds, within 316 feet. Various other experiments were made, which were altogether successful.

POSTAL CARDS.—The demand for postal cards is still increasing. Up to date orders received at the Post-office Department aggregate over 22,000,000; prior to the 1st inst. orders for over 12,000,000 were received. The average daily orders since the 1st inst. have been about 1,050,000 This morning orders for 1,400,000 were received. All of the large cities have sent for their second or third supply. The third order from New York was received to day, and is for 1,000,000. Heretofore there has been some tardiness in the production of cards, but to day the manufacturers notified the Post-office Department that they now have three cutters in operation, which cut a little less than 500,000 daily. They state they will add another cutter this week, and three more later, and that an additional printing press will be started as soon as they can supply enough paper to manufacture 650,000 daily.—Washington Star, May 21.

AMERICAN WORKING PEOPLE.—The Scientific American foots up the whole number of working people in the United States at 12,505,923. The number of inhabitants of the country is 38,558,371, so that the active workers constitute very nearly one-third of the population, the ratio having considerably increased since the census of 1860, at which time it barely exceeded one quarter. 10,669,436 are males, and 1,836,487 females. Between the ages of ten and fifteen years the males outnumber the females in a ratio of nearly three to one; between sixteen and fifty-nine years the ratio increases to nearly six to one; while at ages above sixty years there are more than twelve times as many men at work as there are women. These figures apply to men and women in actual outside employment. It will be noticed as the women grow older their numbers in proportion to the men decrease. This is accounted for by their marrying, abandoning their employments, and settling down to household.

MY CREED.

BY PHŒBE CAREY.

I hold that Christian grace abounds
Where charity is seen; that when
We climb to heaven, tis on the rounds
Of love to men.

I hold all else, named piety,
A selfish scheme, a vain pretense,
Where centre is not, can there be Circumference?

This I moreover hold, and dare
Affirm where'er my rhyme may go:
Whatever things be sweet or fair,
Love makes them so.

Whether it be the lullabies
That charm to rest the nursling bird,
Or that sweet confidence of sighs
And blushes made without a word.

Whether the dazzling and the flush
Of softly sumptous garden bowers,
Or by some cabin door, a bush
Of ragged flowers.

'Tis not the wide phylactory,
Nor stubborn fast, nor stated prayers,
That makes us saints; we judge the tree
By what it bears.

And when a man can live apart
From works, on theologic trust,
I know the blood about his heart
Is dry as dust.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

IS IGNORANCE BLISS?

It may seem strange that I should take a subject of this kind, especially the affirmative, but from general observation, this is the conclusion that has been forced upon me. I argue from the fact that when a thing is full or complete, capacity is exhausted and all above fullness has a tendency of destroying our happiness.

In pursuit of perfect bliss we may ransack the world from center to circumference and nowhere will such perfect happiness be found as is realized among the poor where education is generally limited, the fact is, large intelligence and forced poverty is a most unfortunate composition, and invariably causes sorrow and vexation of spirit. The most contented family I ever saw were day laborers and could, by judicious economy, make their ends meet at the end of the year. Had this family had their minds opened to the inexhaustible mines of wealth that lie hidden behind the charming curtain termed knowledge, their condition would be quite otherwise. To them, "ignorance was bliss. And to-day, thousands are contented and happy because they know no better, and to gather and weigh all this with that afforded by worldly wisdom the balance would be strongly in favor of the conclusion I have come to, that "ignorance is bliss."

Knowledge is a prolific tree and bears much fruit that is intended to make us happy, but there is a principle connected with it that destroys our relish for enjoying it. It is so much like the Eden apple that I can not help but notice the similarity. It is always something to be desired, yet never obtained, ever reaching and grasping after a glorious bubble which when secured, like the Sodomite apple, burst into ashes. Knowledge gives birth to a child called ambition and it is one of the most restless and unhappy spirits that ever had an existence in the world. It is all glory, glory, and its cravings are so exceedingly capacious that it cannot be satiated. The more it is fed the greater becomes its capacities for devouring. So completely did this principle overcome a king of old that after conquering nation after nation, he went out on a mountain and wept bitterly because there were no more worlds to conquer. Such is the nature of that principle which is awakened by a general knowledge of the sciences as now taught.

I have affirmed that "ignorance is bliss" but in doing this I have not asserted the quality of bliss it affords. Bliss has different qualities and degrees. One kind is such as the hungry cow enjoys when first turned into a field of good pasture. It is full and complete. Her capacity of enjoyment would not allow her more, but, it is only animal and for the present, not knowing that it may be a step towards the slaughter house and death. Such ignorance is bliss and is a very fair representation of all the bliss that ignorance affords. We see hundreds and thousands of people who are happy simply because they have sufficient to satisfy their animal wants; and when they seat themselves around the festive board, their feelings and aspirations are not very unlike the cow when grazing the new grown clover. Such bliss is not what we are living and striving for, it is from beneath; ours is higher, purer and more lasting. It elevates the spiritual by casting the sensual down.

Brethren and sisters, let us examine the character of our enjoyment, and see from whence it is. We are creatures of circumstances, and are surrounded by many different elements which seek assimilation, and will get it, and will mould our lives according to their qualities or characteristics. We are tending somewhere. Blissful ignorance will lead us downward, while wisdom with its thorn will elevate us to be assimilated with the high intelligences above.

Knowledge is objectionable and dangerous only when unseasoned with that wisdom which is from above. It is like salt that has lost its savor; or, still worse, it is dangerous—a mighty weapon of destruction and death when devoted to a wrong cause. Ignorance is bliss because its capacities are less than its enjoyments. Knowledge is grasping and unsatisfied, because its capacities are large and unfilled.

The aspirations generated by knowledge are different in their tendancies, while one runs for worldly ambition, the other yearns after those heavenly graces which characterizes the truly devoted christian. This is owing to the character of the person, and the influences by which he is surrounded. If an educated man is surrounded by christian influences, the chances are that the power of his information obtained will be exerted in favor of religion and the cause of Christ. Hence the great necessity of watching over the influences that surround our children while in pursuit of this knowledge. Money and education are two great powers in the world. No christian parent would think of sending his son to a place where he knew a bad and dishonest influence would be thrown around him, in order that he could make money and thus become rich. He would naturally conclude that it would be dangerous, and that the gain in dollars and cents would not balance the loss of character sustained.. A loss of character is a great forfeit to pay for the sake of perishable wealth, but let me assure you, it is not greater than may be sustained by sending our children to such schools where an influence may be thrown around them that may ultimately destroy the soul. This is one of the strong arguments that ignorance is bliss and can only be successfully refuted by affording our children facilities for obtaining knowledge without being thrown into the ungodly influences that are brought to bear against them at many of our popular institutions of learning. When will it come to pass that a wise man will hear, and will increase in learning; and a man of understanding shall attain to wise counsels.

LIFE AT HOME.

It is practicable to make home so delightful that children will have no disposition to wander from it or prefer any other place; it is possible to make it so attractive that it shall not only firmly hold its own loved ones, but shall draw others into its cheerful circle. Let the house, all day long, be the scene of pleasant looks, pleasant words, kind and affectionate acts; let the table be the happy meeting place of a merry group, and not a dull board, where a silent, if not sullen, company of animals come to feed; let the meal be the time when a cheerful laugh is heard and good things are said, let the sitting room at evening, be the place where a smiling company settle themselves to books or games till the round of good night kisses are in order; let there be some music in the household, music not kept like silks and satins to show to company, but music in which father and mother and sister and brother join; let the young companions be welcomed, and made for a time a part of the group, so that daughters shall not deem it necessary to seek the obscurity of back parlors with intimate friends, or to drive father and mother to distant apartments; in a word, let the home be surrounded by an air of cozy and cheerful good-will; then children will not be exhorted to love it—you will not be able to tempt them away from it.—Dr. Arkom.

The idle should not be classed among the living; they are a sort of dead men, not fit to be buried.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BRETHREN, HELD AT DALE CITY, PA., JUNE 3rd, 1873.

The meeting convened about 8 o'clock in the morning in a large barn, which was fitted up for the occasion with accommodations for perhaps 2000 persons. The building is situated at the north-west end of the town, and was filled to its utmost capacity by the brethren and sisters assembled from all parts of the Union.

Previous to the entrance of the Standing Committee, the interval was occupied in singing in English and German, in which the entire congregation united.

The Standing Committee entered the room, and the Moderator, H. D. Davy then addressed the meeting as follows:

While assembled on this occasion, let us try to remember that the eye of God is upon us, and that we engage in the worship of Him with that degree of solemnity and becoming reverence that may meet his approbation. We name the 253rd number of this collection, "I love thy kingdom, Lord," &c.

After singing this hymn the Moderator said: I trust brethren and sisters in the Lord, that we have tried to appreciate the sentiments contained in the rhymes of the poet, and now, on the occasion for which we are assembled, let us have before our eyes the important thought of the salvation of souls; and in order that that may be accomplished, we must turn our attention and fix our hearts upon the God of our salvation to endow us with wisdom from on high; that wisdom which comes from above, which is first pure, &c. Then as we need that wisdom and God has in store a reservation for us all, we should try to come before Him with a meek and lowly heart, and a contrite spirit, and, as one man, unite our voices with our hearts together in solemn prayer, that He may come right down here amongst us this day, and exercise his power around and over us, and so influence us that all that we may say or do may be consistent with His divine will.

Let us try to realize what we have cost; nothing more nor less than the suffering and death, the groanings and agonizings of the Son of God, who has left the shining courts of Heaven and came down and suffered and died, and spilled his blood that we may be heirs of God. And now, with God before us as the object of all worship, let us unite in prayer.

Elder John Wise then read the 13th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and the officers of the meeting were announced as follows:

Moderator—Bro. D. Davy.

Assistant—Bro. D. P. Sayler.

Clerk—Bro. J. Quinter.

Assistant—Bro. John Wise.

Bro. Sayler stated the object of the meeting. The Brotherhood is apportioned out into Districts with authority to do business of a local character. A great many churches and some Districts prefer to send their matters to the Annual Meeting, to be submitted to the decision of the Brethren sent by the different districts to represent them in the Standing Committee; hence the necessity for this committee to hold private sessions for the purpose of examining the letters addressed to them on the different subjects, a great many of which come to them in the form of unanswered queries to which they are expected to frame an answer before submitting them to the meeting for the approval or disapproval of the entire body.

Some further explanations were given by the Moderator, who concluded by urging upon the members the importance of preserving order and maintaining a spirit of Christian unity and feeling.

The first query presented was from the Western Maryland District, as follows:

Is it consistent for brethren to have their lives insured, and how to proceed with those brethren who have their lives insured?

Answer—Concluded to send this query to the Annual Meeting, with the decision that it is inconsistant for brethren to do so.

The answer to the above query, as furnished by the District, was passed.

2nd What Scripture shall we name as an answer to the following question: "How shall those officers among us be installed whose duty it is to serve tables and to attend to the wants and necessities of the poor members?"

Answer—Acts VI, 6.

A protracted and somewhat animated discussion followed the question as to the disposition of this query, which was participated in by some of the brethren, the tenor of the remarks being about as follows:

Bro. Joseph Arnold. The persons referred to are doubtless what we term Deacons, and there is no authority in the Gospel for laying hands on them at their reception.

John Wise. Give us some other Scripture to show how they are installed.

Jos Arnold. I do not know that I am prepared to give any other answer at present.

P. Nead. The Church has authority to say in what manner they should be installed, and every brother and sister is acquainted with the manner, namely with hand and kiss.

D. P. Sayler. When we have the Word as plain as "thus saith the Lord" let us not omit it.

Jesse Roop. This subject has agitated our church very much and inasmuch as the Western District of Maryland has under consideration the same subject, I feel it necessary to say something about it. There can scarcely be two opinions about it in the way the question is brought up. It is simply asked "what answer we shall give," &c., and I apprehend we can give no other answer than that furnished in both these districts of Maryland. (Eastern and Western) If the question came up as to whether it is right or wrong, I might use different arguments and there might appear to be two sides to the question. It may be said that those persons refered to in that portion of God's word are not called deacons, neither does the query say they are. It styles them in their true character. They were to serve tables and attend to the necessities of the poor, and yet we have a mode of installation which some think is not precisely correct. The question we are called on to settle is, is that answer correct?

E. Slifer. There can be no two opinions in reference to the answer, under the artful manner in which the question is framed. No deacon in our district desires a change. Our oldest deacons are opposed to it. Those persons we hold and call deacons are not the persons refered to in the chapter and verse. The deacons are the creatures of the church, and it defined and laid down their duties at length in the year 1835 at their Annual Meeting, in reference to which you will find that they are a different class of officers. Our deacons have no authority to preach the word or baptize. Those named there did both. Our church has laid down the duties of the deacons and the order of their installation, and with this I am satisfied, hoping the matter will be passed by without further argument.

S. Z. Sharp. I am not satisfied—It think that inasmuch as Scripture has been demanded, the Church which proposes to be governed by the Holy Scriptures must be very cautious in this matter.

We announce to the world that we are governed by the New Testament and if we shirk our duty in this respect, we are violating the principles laid down for ourselves. If we say that we have no Scriptural answer for this question, then we say we do not go according to Scripture. If there is a Scriptural answer, why shall we not give it? If we have one to give and fail to give it, we only stultify ourselves. The brother who spoke, said that years ago the Annual Meeting defined the duties of deacons. That does not answer this question, for the question does not ask for a definition of the duties of the deacons, it simply asks for a Scriptural answer to the question. If it was thought necessary at Jerusalem to have a bishop we who profess to follow the primitive Christians, either do not have such a body, or we have a body different from those and install them in a different manner—one we originated ourselves.

If there is a Scriptural mode of installation, I hope we will adopt it. I have read all the minutes ever published upon this subject, and they define how the Church says, but I have not yet found that they point us to what Jesus Christ or his apostles said. We want to know what the primitive church did, or were instructed to do. We therefore appeal again, that you give us some proper Scriptural authority, and ask that we be not put off in a careless or indifferent manner, but that we receive some satisfaction.

H. Myers. My idea of this question you will find in 1st Timothy, I think near the last chapter, where it is not permitted to lay hands upon any man suddenly. In that same letter Paul wrote to the bishops, explaining that the next class of persons to them were the deacons; and if I understand that aright, it refers to the preachers. Now why should we lay hands upon the table servers, and not on the preachers?

My idea is that the apostles did not at first understand all.

J. S. Holsinger. Is it the duty of this meeting to tell the church what answers to give to every question they may ask? If so, we might continue the session all the year.

J. Roop. Our object is just the reverse. This question did not originate in the east of Maryland, as I understand it. While it is true, as brother Saylor says, no one there is dissatisfied; it is because there is a disposition to forbear. There are brethren there who have ever felt conscientious, and whose object in framing the question as it was framed, honestly, is to have all controversy allayed upon the matter; and we hope the answer may be affirmed by the church; yet the church has the privilege to say what the order shall be in installing.

It is true, that those, the apostles named, had other duties; but that does not affect the question. One of the brothers has told us, that our brethren who serve tables, have other duties too. I think that the brethren's consciences should be respected and regarded; and I claim that the church may answer this question affirmatively, and yet not interfere with the practice of the Brethren. I would therefore propose, instead of tabling this question, that it be taken home and considered by the church as to whether this will confirm or reject this answer; and if accepted, to decide also how it shall be approved.

Jno. Knisley. If we refer to that scripture, or give it as an answer some of our churches may install their visiting brethren by laying on of hands, and others not. We want one order and not two. These things have before caused trouble, and we don't want it hereafter. Some of the churches believe that the deacons should have hands laid on them and this answer will allow of it.

Sturgis. This subject came up years ago, and was settled satisfactorily at that time. But we do not blame the church for inquiring, to know what is the true literal meaning of the scriptural command. The circumstances in the apostolic time were different from now. I will now read a passage of scripture, that applies to the authority the church has according to the necessities of the age in which we live. The Holy Spirit saw, that in future ages different practices would be required; hence the apostle offered the instruction you will find in the 4th chapter of Phillippians. In instructing the church he says, "Finally Brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise think on these things." Therefore the church—the true church—has got up an order here, that is not contrary to the mission; it is just and right that we should select such as we now need and have; and until it can be shown that the office spoken of corresponded with that we now have, we have no right to speak of that installation. I would refer the question back, and if it is not what is wanted, it can come up to next Annual Meeting.

D. Gibbon. Brethren it is the light we want. We have learned from the law of the Lord that we should sanctify him in the heart, and be ready to give the answer to those who would inquire of us.

We know of nothing we may answer such individuals as make inquiry concerning the ordinations of these officers. Should we accept the custom and give that as a reason? I left all connections to unite with a society which has followed the Scriptures. It has been said that there were none dissatisfied, where this originated. It must certainly be a mistake. I, as one, after finding the brotherhood, this was the first to which I took exceptions, and under the present circumstances I would be anxious to be able to give an answer to those who would inquire of me. I also have read the decisions of the Annual Meeting, which are recorded in the Brethren's Encyclopedia, but that not being satisfactory to my mind, and feeling, too, that there may be others that would unite with us who would have no more light or knowledge than ourselves.

It has been said that they were ministers in the second degree, and that they preached the Gospel; but that they preached the Gospel afterwards does not say that they were set apart for this special purpose; for we find that one of these seven afterwards practiced polygamy, and to the church at Pergamos—it was said afterwards that their deeds God hated.

J. Brindle. I think that we apply this command to the wrong answer. Who wait on the table of the Lord, or those who break bread for the communion? I understand it was our Elders, and our Bishops.

J. Arnold. I am satisfied with the remarks of Bro. Sturgis except in one thing and that is that these dissatisfied brethren let it lay over till another meeting and by that time prepare themselves to prove who these seven brethren were, whether what is called deacons or some other class in some other office.

C. Forney. The question demands a true answer, for which purpose consider the necessity for the election of those appointed, which was the neglect of the widows in the daily ministration. We are bound to come down to the idea that they did serve tables daily. Paul said it was not meet to leave the word of God and serve tables. Let us submit that scripture as an answer. If the brethren consider that it would not be deemed advisable to serve tables and preach the Gospel, let them say so and let them remain there as table servers until thought worthy or necessity dictate a further move.

J. S. Flory. Let the scripture answer stand, and the church continue to install as they have ever done. Let it be amended so as to say that the scripture answer is right so far as the officers referred to are concerned.

J. Wise. I don't know as I can throw very much light on the question, but I would wish to call the attention of the young brethren to the language of the "Acts of the Apostles" The language used in the Acts 6: 3, is: "Wherefore Brethren, look ye out from among you seven men of honest report and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." I don't say "to do this business," but whom we may appoint OVER this business to superintend it, and to direct how it should be done. In the Church we have others appointed to do the work that is necessary to be done, serving the tables, &c.; we have men appointed who are ordained by the imposition of hands, and we have men appointed to do the business without the imposition of hands, consequently those who are appointed to look over the business, are appointed in the manner prescribed in the 62nd chapter of Acts. This is my understanding of the subject, and if it will enable the young Brethren to answer those who ask regarding it, I am satisfied, and I hope they will examine into the phraseology of the text.

H. D. Davy. I have waited some time, and listened to the remarks of our brethren; and when our young brethren come to us as fathers in Israel, and ask us questions as touching our duty toward them and the church, I feel a great responsibility, and feel disposed to give all the assistance in my power. Almost 40 years ago, when I united with the Brethren, as a young brother from Maryland said, "that was the first thing I stumbled upon." I soon got into conversation with older brethren, who took a great deal of pains to instruct me. Now, as I told you this morning, different views will come up on different portions of the Scriptures. They had one view and I another, and they undertook to reconcile my mind to that, to the point, and they did it fully to my satisfaction.

A portion of the church 100 years ago understood that it was the office of deacon; for they had got the idea from a closer examination that it was the first installment—the first laying on of hands on bishops. Now this investigation caused different opinions to be presented to the meeting. Some supposed it was the visiting brethren that had hands laid on there, and others took the position that it was the first installed that had the hands laid on them. A portion of those seven men were ministers. Take them from the ministers and put them to the tables, they thought it would not harmonize with the teachings of the scriptures. Now go down into the tent, and you have an illustration. Here we have a man appointed to oversee the tables. Does he serve the tables? No. Does he oversee? Yes. But when he hears of suffering and want, he does his duty, and attends to seeing that their wants are supplied.

This discussion seemed to satisfy the church, until of late years, when young brethren came into the church. Serving is one thing and overseeing is another.

D. Longanecker. The apostles were appointed by Jesus Christ. They were not to serve tables, and they appointed bishops under them.

John Metzger. The apostles would call them helps, and Paul again says, "Lay hands suddenly on man."

H. D. Davy. It has been proposed to let the matter stand as it is; let it be deferred, that is, not let this query stand, but let the custom stand as it is, for another year, and let us examine the matter thoroughly, so that we may have oneness of practice, theory, and feeling among us.

P. Nead. I am not going to make many remarks. Those seven brethren, on whom hands were laid, I understand to be evangelists, and mind you, they were to have common stock in that day of the apostles, and these seven teachers were to oversee the common stock.

J. Steel. I must say publicly and openly, that I feel perfectly satisfied with the view of brother Davy and Wise.

H. Garst. We wish the union of the Church. Once we felt as our younger brother, but after close examination relative to the query and answer, we concur with our old brethren, and are satisfied that there was a different class of officers who were called deacons.

— Hady. By giving the scripture explanation, this matter could go on the minutes and never need come up again.

— ——. We have had two classes, overseers and table servers; had we not better make use of different names to separate these characters?

A suggestion was made by one of the brethren that the question be withdrawn by those who presented it.

D. P. Sayler. We can assume no such responsibility.

H. R. Holsinger. We have no plain scripture before us that these persons were selected and appointed over this matter that required supervision. If the bishop, by virtue of his office, is to oversee the church why give a second appointment, and then lay hands on him and retain him as a bishop? And if these are the ministers to serve at the tables, why does the apostle say afterwards, "who will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word?" Then those men are to be appointed, and those bishops to look after those widows and serve those tables, and those who appointed and laid hands on them were to stay at home. Those persons that compose the Church and have the oversight of it to observed that it required other officers inferior to them to look after those widows. It was a question of looking after those widows and serving the tables, and now the superior officers of the church go to work and select with the counsel of the church, men qualified for this business, and appointed them to the duties of the offices, that they may not be required to serve the tables but give themselves continually to the ministry. Because our deacons are appointed to this duty it is not expected that they do all the work, but the deacons are appointed over the work as the Scriptures says. I do not see what objection we could possibly have simply to refer the interrogaters to the very passage of Scripture and ask, as a people who understand God's word, to point us to some other Scripture that will answer the purpose. If there is another passage that authorizes the appointment of deacons, then point it out, but do not evade the question. Why not stick to the plain letter of God's word here? I do not say you must give the answer, but I ask that we have a Scriptural answer, as we have these officers and the people wonder where you get the authority. The duties specified are precisely like the duties of our deacons, and the people think they have got that from the 6th chapter of the Acts and they may pass by and not ordain them by laying on of hands and accuse us from deviating from the plain letter of the Scripture. If there is another passage that will give you the plain Scripture for establishing deacons in the manner you have then point us to that Scripture and I will be satisfied, even if half as good as the 6th chapter of Acts. I see no occasion for evading this question. If you cannot follow it,let us do so who have the plain language of God to authorize it. I cannot see why you should read us any part of God's word in that way. Deviate from the plain literal explanation and you can make anything out of it.

P. Nead. We have no common stock in our day. The bishop had the oversight of the matter and the deacons attended to the widows.

A brother objected to the use of the word evade, as used by brother Holsinger.

Bro. Sharp. In our church we lay a part of the funds together for the support of the needy, I was always under the impression, that was the common stock of the Church. I ask for information.

P. Nead. It seems there were wealthy brethren who threw all that they had into a common stock which belonged then to one brother as much as to another. No such custom now in the church, every brother throws in his mite for the benefit of the poor.

Bro. Berkey. If the installment is not right why not make a change?

Bro Sayler. We have no knowledge of any ordination by the imposition of hands till after they sold their possessions and laid the price down at the apostles feet. There was then a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews that their widows were neglected in the daily ministration, implying that they had a ministration and some one to administer the things concerning this association. The apostles did not take time to investigate this national dispute but called the church together and asked them to choose seven men &c., just as now when the church is called on to send a committee to a certain place to investigate certain matters. They laid their hands on them but did not invest us with that authority. They saw fit and proper to lay hands on these seven, and when that was settled their visit ceased, and we find Stephen advocating the cause of Christ and sealing the testimony to the truth with his blood. Philip going down to Samaria preaching and baptizing. Nicholas in Minor Asia having got up a scheme in the church and showing that he was liable to err as well as we are. There is no similarity between those seven and our deacons who come in under the head of helps to the church and we install them according to the order laid down by the church.

J. Wise It is manifest to every careful reader of the Acts that there must have been persons to attend to the distribution of the common stock. Brother Sayler has alluded to it, that they sold their possessions and laid the money down at the apostles feet. There were young men there on that occasion to attend to business that the apostles did not attend to: and it is certainly very manifest that the circumstances would produce the necessity of persons to the distribution of the goods of the Church when placed at the disposition of the Church at that time; and to my mind it is very clear that there were persons appointed by the Church for this work, to attend to this distribution prior to the appointment of these seven in the 6th chapter of the Acts of the apostles; and there was dissatisfaction in regard to the manner in which these persons distributed the stock of the Church. the murmurings of part of the Grecians against the Hebrews, that their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Who neglected it? Did the apostles neglect it? That was not their business; but the simple fact of complaint being made, I infer it was made to the apostles, and to show that it was not their business, they appointed subordinate officers to attend to the business. Those seven men were to see that the daily ministration was equal; that there was none neglected, that all were satisfied and supplied out of the funds of the church, and their duty then being discharged, everything being set in order, they would have time, of course, to contend for the faith; said Stephen did so, as brother Sayler says, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom ontend for the faith, and his arguments were so potent that they could not be withstood and he had to seal his faith with his own life. There were certainly persons appointed before the seven. When the dispute was settled and until there was another dispute arose there was no necessity for the appointment. Our helps in the church have the oversight in the church in bearing the provisions to the table. they call on others to assist perhaps, but never in our experience do I remember.when the visiting brethren did not come to see and ask what they were to do, knowing that they were subordinate to the overseer of the charge. In this case there was reason for the complaint, not because the apostles were not discharging their duties, but because the minor servants could not do what was necessary for them to do; consequently seven men were appointed for this business, and I want to see the Scriptures to answer the question, to show a passage authorizing a form for the appointment of the brethren we have appointed.

D. Weimer. If it is not out of place I would like to say a few words. We understand by the language of the Apostle that there was a ministration, and if there was such a thing as a ministration, there must have been administrators befor the seven were appointed to oversee this administration.

Moderator—The clerk has the answer ready to read.

Answer as read by the clerk:

Inasmuch as it is not certain that the seven persons on whom hands were laid according to Acts 6th chapter, 6th verse are to perform the precise work as our visiting brethren are to do, and if they were not, then the manner of installation may differ, and the manner of installing our visiting brethren may be sought for in the general principles of the Apostles and not in any one passage, and so the answer of our brethren may be given.

The next paper was offered by the representative of Western Maryland.

Inasmuch as the scriptures lay every disciple under the obligation to answer from the scriptures every scriptural question with regard to any and every part of our faith and practice. therefore, we, the brethren of Brownsville church, inquire of the Western district Council of Maryland what scripture we shall bring as an answer to the question, "How shall those officers among us be installed, whose duty it is to serve the tables and to look after the general interests of the poor members."

By agreement, the answer given to previous question was a lopted to this one.

Query 2nd. Is it not sufficient and according to the Gospel to ask the candidate for baptism, while in the water, the question, "Dost thou believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, instead of the words of the formula, found in the minutes of 1858, Article 41?

. The answer of one of the congregation of this district was, "It is sufficient and according to the Gospel," but it was not approved by the District Meeting; yet the majority said, send the question with their answer, together with the decision of the District Meeting, to the Annual Meeting for its determination.

Quinter. Here is a disposition to change the regular order among us from asking three questions to asking one question. Supposing that the church that has got up that question and brought it here to be granted their wish; then the next thing will be to come up, may not that question be asked out of the water? why did you not think of that? that would be wiser, why did you not think of that? Philip asked the question whether he did not believe. We are sure he asked it out of the water. Then we may go on here,in a house and elsewhere. Thus you see the question will be agitated unnecessarily. As regards the renouncing of the world do we not do it? I suggest that there be no change; but that the demand of this question did not warrant us in making any change.

Naff. I think that to ask that one question and not the others would be entirely out of place.

S. Z. Sharp. While I agree with brother Quinter's remarks there is one thing entirely omitted and that is that the religion of Jesus Christ requires obedience to his commands, while we might have faith in him that did not imply obedience to him. It is necessary that,we take the candidate into the church that he may avoid the world. Unless that condition is announced and agreed to by the candidate, I don't see how we are going to follow the command of our Lord, and I think the original order should be retained.

Wise. I propose that this question be tabled.

Sayler. I will just say that those brethren who advocated this question, bring up their arguments.

Moderator. Brother Sayler calls for the argument for the opposite side. If it is not given we will put the question, on passage that the brotherhood may know that this meeting desires no change. If you table it you would not give it that privilege. If I understand the duty of this meeting and its privileges, most assuredly our clerk has the privilege of putting questions into proper shape, and of forming an answer which is very short. If you simply table it here. so far as the authority of this meeting is concerned the brotherhood will know nothing about it. If brother Quinter don't want to put it on the minutes in its simple form, this meeting has the right to do it.

Holsinger. It appears on that that was the intention. The District Meeting sustained the conclusion of this one congregation, and there should be some expression that the brotherhood may know that we go on as before.

Lane. I hope that this question will go on the minutes, that in the future, when these old gray-headed brethren are gone, the young generation will know that in this year,1873, the question came up and was settled.

Question with answer read by the clerk.

Is it not sufficient and according to the Gospel to ask the candidate for baptism, while in the water, the only question, "Dost thou believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God," instead of the words of the formula, found in the minutes of 1858. article 41. Answer. We think one question is not sufficient and therefore make no change in our present practice

Passed without objection.

DISTRICT OF WESTERN PENN'A.

Jos. Berkey. We have the question but it has not been forwarded to myself nor to my colleague. At our District Meeting last year, we had a question which should have been forwarded to this Annual meeting, therefore I refer to it now. While there is a difference of practice among the Brotherhood, in proceedings with members who trespass in a congregation in which they have not their membership, some trying the case in the congregation where the offence

OUR PERIODICALS.

At our late Conference our periodicals were made the subject of some consideration and from what we could learn of the deliberations of the Standing Committee, some of the old fathers favored the idea of consolidating and running the thing as a Church institution. This would be a new departure and we are inclined to think that the result might not be as satisfactory as may be anticipated. Time and again there has been attempts made to have the Church take charge of a Brethren's school, but it was "no go." After repeated trials and failures, an individual district took charge of the affair and started a school and the result is, a complete failure. The friends of education have become disgusted with the school business as a Church institution and are now turning their efforts towards a private enterprise and the result will be, a success, and that in a short time too. Now if the Church wishes to go back on the publishing business we of course will submit, but wiser heads than ours, predict the same result. It is a notable fact that there is not a self-sustaining Church paper in the United States. It is only by a liberal system of donating that they are sustained. Are our brethren willing, in addition to paying for their paper, to donate liberally towards sustaining a Church paper, and are they compelled to patronize a periodical that they do not wish? The great probability after all is, that the paper published as a private enterprise would get the patrons. If we wish a successful division in the Church, get up a Church paper and thus deny freedom of expression and the end will be accomplished. There is an element in the Church that only needs the spark to make it burn, therefore every possible effort ought to be made towards unity. To accomplish this, conciliatory means must be used.

We do not doubt the purity of the motives that gave rise to this move, but sometimes we act before our plans are matured. We do not see how a move of this kind could better the matter as we are all to be subject to the Church, and it has just as much power over us as individuals in an individual enterprise as it would have if our business was made the Churches business. The only advantage we can see would be to fill the position with better men. This would be possible, but even the best of men would be liable to err and might possibly commit as grievous faults as our present editors. The better plan for the present would be, for those who think we do not conduct our papers as we should, to come forward, as fathers in Israel, and teach us how to do better. We think we are always willing and humble enough to take instruction and advice. It is a fact worthy of note that those who object most to our work, are the ones that contribute least. Brethren, if you have the welfare of Zion at heart, let us hear from you We have never, as yet, refused a single article of good sound doctrine. If you wish a good and readable paper, go to work and write for us. Our chief business is to select and prepare matter. You do the writing and we will prepare it for the press, but do not object to contraversial writings and then go to work and do the same things yourselves and insist on having them published simply because you wrote it. We have been placed in just such a position and submitted our judgment to accommodate such as stand as fathers in the Church. When you meet an occasional sentiment to which you cannot assent, think of the difficulties under which we labor and we think that you will be prepared, to make some allowance for us. That we have too many periodicals among us is evident and we are favorable to consolidation. The Church ought, and will support two good weeklies, one monthly and a juvenile paper. To this number we ought to come and remain for the present. If any others are anxious to enter the field they should buy out some of the present publishers. This could be done as we suppose, any of us would sell at a fair price, not because we are discouraged or have a desire to abandon the cause, but because every additional periodical has a tendency to curtail the prosperity of those already published

In conclusion, we believe that, notwithstanding we have erred, we have been doing a good work and have made many an isolated home glad on the reception of the messages of salvation as delivered to them through the weekly calls of the Pilgrim. Brethren and sisters, labor and pray for us that our work may go forth sanctified by the spirit and produce fruit to the honor and glory of God.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

For a number of years our brethren and sisters have been calling for a full and correct report of the proceedings of our Annual Conference. Heretofore, this could not be had, but to this meeting we took with us a competent short hand reporter with the determination to give our readers just as much of the proceedings as would be allowed. The subject was before the meeting and the report was granted with a restriction which will be noticed hereafter. We have now a full and correct report of the meeting, including the opening address of the Moderator with all the discussions and the concluding remarks of the Clerk, so that those who remained at home can have as complete a knowledge of the business part of the meeting as those who were present. This cost us money and we hope to be remunerated, in part, by our agents and friends making a determined effort to increase our circulation. 400 or 500 names can be had if our friends will go to work at once. The report will commence this week and be continued until published. The Pilgrim will be sent from No. 24 (or this week) to the end of the year on the following terms: Single copy 80 cents, 5 copies 3.75, 10 copies, 7.00, 15 copies, 10,50 and 20 copies 14,25. Now brethren and sisters, think of it. Many of you have spent, twenty, thirty and some fifty dollars to have the benefits of this meeting. We offer to give nearly or quite the same information for 80 cents. There is scarcely a member in the whole Brotherhood but what would take the Pilgrim the remainder of the year if they were informed of this report. We have now 500 single subscribers. One half of these can send us one name at 80 cts. if they will try. Please try. How many clubs of ten, fifteen and twenty can we have? Go to work at once and let us see what can be done when there is a determined effort made. Those that have not got the money now, we will wait them until after harvest or during the year. In making this offer, we want our agents to take only such as they would not be afraid to trust themselves. As an extra inducement we will send each subscriber, a Pilgrim Almanac Free as long as we can supply them. We will issue a large extra edition commencing with the "Report" so that all new subscribers can have the proceedings complete. Remember, this report will give all the queries, their discussions and answers. Every body that has any interest in the proceedings of our A. M. will want to read this report. Give them an opportunity by asking them to subscribe for the Pilgrim. We can still supply some twenty volumes complete at 1.50.

Warriorsmark Lovefeast.

On Saturday morning, June 14th, we, according to arrangement, took leave of our office to attend a Lovefeast with our brethren of Warriorsmark, Pa. For want of connection, we were detained in Huntingdon until evening, when we took the train for Tyrone and there made a direct connection with the Bald Eagle road.—At Bald Eagle station, we were met with a conveyance, and in a very short time we crossed the ridge, a distance of two miles, and arrived at the church just as they were preparing to commence feet washing, when we found present, beside the resident ministers, Stephen Hildebrand and Wright. The house was well filled, and the best of order maintained during the exercises, which were not as long as usual, on such occasions, on account of the number of communicants not being so large, but interesting, and, we trust, profitable to both communicants and spectators. After the exercises, we were kindly entertained at the house of our old sister Beeks, whose greatest joy see us to be to administer to the wants of the brethren and sisters and all others who place themselves under her roof.

On Sabbath morning we again met for public preaching, when it fell to our lot to address a very large and interesting congregation, followed by a few appropriate remarks by Eld. Grabill Myers. The meeting was a pleasant one and we have seldom seen such a general interest manifested in so large a congregation.

At 3 o'clock, p. m, services were, again held, when the congregation was entertained with a very able discourse from, "Who is on the Lord's side?" by Bro. Stephen Hildebrand, followed with some remarks by Bro. —— Wright. The congregation throughout the meeting seemed well entertained and we hope by the blessing of the Lord, good may result therefrom.

This congregation is not large, but the members are kind and sociable and make those feel at home who visit them. The speakers are Eld. Grabill Myers, Samuel Cox, Wm. H. Quinn and Conrad Imler.

On Sabbath evening we spent a pleasant time at brother——Nearhoof's, where we remained for the night. Next morning we started homeward bound—spent a short time in Tyrone with Bro. Quinn and by evening arrived safely home, for which God be praised.

KEEP US SUPPLIED.

Sometime ago we seemed to have an over abundance of copy and intimated something of that kind. Since then our supply has not been so abundant, and in consequence, we are getting short. Please notice this and keep us well supplied with good original articles. Short essays are preferable to long ones and let them be as free from personal ideas as possible. Those who have the time and ability should write for the instruction and comfort of those who have not.

Now is the time to subscribe for the Pilgrim. Only 80 cents from April to end of the year.

THOUGHTS IN A GRAVEYARD.

BY LOVINA H. BURKET.

Dear angel cherub, thou art gone,
How peaceful is thy rest;
Thy loving parents need not mourn,
For thou art gone to rest.

Thou wast too beautiful for earth,
A blossom bright and fair—
A bud that faded at its birth,
To bloom more brightly there.

How like an angel was thy face,
Clothed in the robe of death;
This earth was not thy resting place,
Though thou wast born to wealth.

The valley clods will hold thee fast,
From view thy form is hid;
Soon thou will be with things of past,
Beneath that coffin lid.

With tearful eyes, your parents turn,
To leave this mournful place;
Their loving child from them was torn,
Cold, cold in death's embrace.

But they may meet that angel one,
In Heaven, where all is bright;
Then, loving parents, do not mourn,
But seek that world of light.

For O, that bright and better world,
If we, its portals see;
The glorious news has been unfurled,
Like children we must be.

So innocent and pure and good,
Like that dear child of clay;
Believe in Him whose cleansing blood,
Will wash our sins away.

OUR PRIVILEGES.

Things the angels desire to look into.—1 Pet. 1 : 12.

Peter, in the first part of this verse, refers those whom he addressed to the prophets and then endeavored to impress them with the value of the Gospel, and the privileges they enjoy, by a comparison of their situation with that of the prophets. They prophecied concerning the glorious future, but you, says Peter, are enjoying the benefit of those predictions. You are permitted to see clearly the truth which these holy men themselves saw only obscurely, and thus in many ways you are favored above those holy men

After having shown them the value of the Gospel and the privileges they enjoyed by referring to the prophets, he makes the idea still more impressive by referring to the angels. You enjoy "things which angels desire to look into." If angels, the inhabitants of the skies, are concerned in reference to things which you now enjoy, should you not feel that your privileges are great, in that you are now partakers of these things.

The things which angels desired to look into are the same as those which the prophets so much desired to understand—the great things concerning the suffering and death of the Redeemer, and the effects that would follow from the presentation of the Gospel, which has now become the power of God unto salvation. Even Simeon, that good old saint, waited patiently for the fulfillment of the revelation, that should see this great salvation, and then breathed a heartfelt prayer that he might depart. So were angels interested in the coming of the Messiah. They were John's messengers when he was preparing the way; an angel conveyed to Mary the intelligence that she should become the mother of the Redeemer; an angel warned the parents of danger, directed them in the way they should go, so as to refute the design of Herod in destroying him; in short they had a desire to look upon these things, and contemplated them with interest. They sensibly feel the condition of man, a fallen creature, tempted, suffering dying and exposed to eternal death.

But what is it that causes the angels to be interested in these things, and what leads them from heaven to earth? There are many things that might interest them, and the incarnation of the Son of God, and the fact that sinners may be pardoned, through the atonement, are considerations that might attract their attention, and call forth a desire to know. But whatever may be the cause, we know that they are interested in the plan of redemption, and this fact should call forth the inquiry, why are not we who are directly concerned, be more interested in the plan of our redemption? If it excited such a deep interest among the inhabitants of the realms above, should it not cause a much deeper interest among us whose hopes depend entirely upon it? The plan of our redemption is revealed to us clearly, and we enjoy the privilege of accepting it as the means for saving our souls.

Reader, you enjoy a glorious privilege. Life and death are before you. One or the other is awaiting you, and which will you choose? It is our privilege to obtain everlasting life and eternal happiness, yet how many are traveling on that broad way that leads to destruction. Are not the angels astonished at the indifference with which man treats the plan of redemption. They are interested in it although they would be happy if they did not understand it. Our all depends upon it, yet how very indifferent we are. How wonderful it is that even personal interests will not prompt us to "look into these things." All other subjects of the most trivial and insignificant nature will engage our attention but this great work, the working out of the soul's salvation, is by thousands and millions entirely neglected. Oh what a privilege to be left unenjoyed. Reader think of these things.

There is another class again who give the subject some attention but make it only a secondary matter. The things of this life concern them more and thus they attend to the things that pertain to their eternal interest when it suits them, or when other things do not seem to conflict. It is to be feared that those of us who claim to be looking into these things, are not improving the privileges we enjoy. We are too much engrossed with the things of this life to appreciate them and thus neglect our christian duties and those means of grace so bountifully bestowed unto us.

Brethren and sisters will it not be well for us to see to these things; whether the privileges we have is a source of enjoyment, whether we love the service of Jesus; whether we are willing to make a sacrifice of the things of this life for his sake; whether we are willing if necessary, to sacrifice our own ease and comfort in order to attend to the duties that are devolving upon us as Christians. If so, then indeed may we feel and appreciate the privileges granted unto us. May God help us all to look more and more into those things that pertain to our eternal interest.

J. B. B.

A WORD ON BAPTISM.

Baptism is a command of the New Testament. And all professors of religion in general consider Baptism as a duty, and ought to be attended to in some way or other. Baptism is a positive institution, and therefore we must have some plain precept or example to direct us, both with respect to the persons who are to be baptized and the manner in which the ordinance must be administered. If we proceed in an ordinance without authority from the scripture, God will reject our services with those who hath required this at your hands. "In vain do ye worship me; teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Baptism is an ordinnoce peculiar to the gospel dispensation, and therefore the role of our duty must be sought in the New Testament and not in the Old. It is one thing to maintain that circumstances is not absolutely necessary to the essence of baptism, and another to go about to represent it as ridiculous and foolish, or as shameful and indecent, when it was the way which our blessed Savior exemplified, and was the way by which the ancient christians did receive their baptism. It's a great want of prudence as well as of honesty to refuse to grant to an adversary what is certainly true, and may be proved so; "And it came to pass, in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee and was baptized of John in Jordon; and straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened and the spirit, like a dove, descending upon Him," and as in the case of Philip and the Eunuch, "and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him." Now it would be very unnatural to suppose that they went down into the water, merely that Philip might take up a little water in his hand to pour on the Eunuch. Baptism is immersion, and was administered in an ancient time according to the force and meaning of the word. Anciently, those who were baptized were immersed and buried in the water, to represent their death to sin, and then did rise up again out of the water, to signify their entrance upon a new life. And to these customs, the apostle alludes Rom. 5: 2–6; also 6 :3–4 there is an allusion to the manner of baptism which is by immersion. The various instances of baptism as recorded in the New Testament, in their view amply provide the principles thus laid down. We refer our readers to the inspired oracles, and say that those baptised by John, confessed their sins. Matt. 3 : 6, the Lord Jesus Christ gave the command to teach and baptize: Matt. 28 : 19, Mark 16 : 15, 16. At the day of Pentecost they who gladly received the word were baptized; and they afterward continued steadfastly in the apostles doctrines and fellowship, Acts 24 : 41, 42, 47. At Samarea, those who believed were baptized, both men and women, Acts 8 : 12. Cornelius and his friends heard Peter received the Holy Ghost, and were baptized, Acts 10 : 44, 48. Infants are therefore excepted because they cannot perform the duties or observe the ordinance of our holy and spiritual religion. Believers and believers only, who have been convinced by the word and spirit of God that they are in a sinful and dangerous condition—are fit subjects for this holy ordinance.

In the present age there are not a few persons who deny the perpetuity of the ordinance of baptism. There is no intimation that the law of baptism was designed to be restricted to any nation, or limited to any period of time. It is a general law without any restriction, except that which refers to character. "He that believeth," a divine law must continue obligatory until it is repealed by divine authority. There is no intimation in the scriptures that the law of baptism has been repealed, and therefore there is no reason to suppose its obligation has ceased.

Baptism answers all the purposes at this day which it answered in the first age of christianity; and these are as needful now as they were then. No reason can be assigned for the observance of the ordinance in the apostle's days which will not apply in all its force to believers in every age of the christian church.

The above considerations afford incontestible proof of the perpetuity of christian baptism, and shows that its observance is as obligatory at present as it was in the days of the apostles; and that it will continue to be as obligatory until the consummation of all things. It being thus evident from the scriptures that baptism is designed by the Head of the church to be co-existent with the gospel system as a constituent part of it and co-extensive with repentance towards God, and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ; it is manifestly a great error to imagine the obligation to baptism has ceased. There is not the slightest foundation for such opinion. Against it, there is the strongest evidence. Should this fall into the hands of any who dispute this statement, we would entreat them, seriously, to consider whether they are not, through their mistaken opinions, regarding the perpetuity of water baptism, doing great dishonor to the Saviour by disobeying his command, and to the Holy Spirit by rejecting his written will in setting aside what the scripture so plainly teach to be binding on all believers to the end of the world. This is one of the many texts given for our instruction, showing us what the design of baptism is and what it will accomplish when done in the name of the Lord with a full purpose of heart which can be testified to by many living witnesses, and gives us the answer of a good conscience toward God.

A READER OF THE PILGRIM.

PRAYER.

The duty of prayer is urged by every consideration. None but God can provide for us, none but he can forgive and guide and support us. None but he can bring us into Heaven. He is ever ready to hear us. The humble, he sends not away empty; those who ask, receive, and those who seek find. How natural and proper then is prayer? How strange that any can live and not pour out their desires to God! How strange that any are willing to go to eternity with the sad reflection, "I have gone through this world, spent my probation, wasted my strength and am dying, and have never prayed." How awful will be the reflection of the soul through all eternity? I was offered eternal life, but I never asked for it. I lived from day to day, and from year to year in God's world, breathed his air, rioted in his beneficence, forgot his goodness, and never once asked him to save my soul!" Who will be to blame if the prayerless soul is lost.

SUSIE A. COFFMAN.

A RIGHT SPIRIT.—On one occasion a minister found it necessary to punish his little daughter. But Mary climbed into his lap, and throwing her arms around his neck, said, "Papa, I do love you." "Why do you love me, my child?" the father asked. "Because you try to make me good, papa." It is in this spirit that God's people should accept the chastisements he sends, remembering it is in love he rebukes and chastens; not for his pleasure.

He that is good, will infallibly become better, and he that is bad, will as certainly become worse; for vice, virtue, and time, are three things that never stand still.

LITTLE BARBARA'S HYMN.

A mother stood by her spinning wheel.
Winding the yarn on an ancient reel;
As she counted the threads in the twilight dim;
She murmured the words of a quaint old hymn:
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Little Barbara, watching the spinning-wheel,
And keeping time with her toe and heel
To the hum of the thread and her mother's song,
Sang in her own sweet voice, ere long,
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

That night, in her dreams, as she sleeping lay,
Over and over the scenes of the day,
Came back, till she seemed to hear again
The hum of the thread and the quaint old strain,
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Next morning with bounding heart and feet,
Little Barbara walked in the crowded street;
And up to her lips, as she passed along,
Rose the tender words of her mother's song:
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave our life for his sake."

A wanderer sat on a wayside stone,
Weary and sighing, sick and alone;
But he raised his head with a look of cheer,
As the gentle tones fell on his ear;
"Whether we sleep or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Toiling all day in a crowded room
A worker stood at her noisy loom,
A voice came up through the ceaseless din,
These words at the window floated in:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

A mourner sat by her loved one's bier,
The sun seemed darkened, the world was drear;
But her sobs were stilled, and her cheek grew dry,
As she listened to Barbara passing by;
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

A sufferer lay on his bed of pain;
With burning brow and throbbing brain;
The notes of the child were heard once more,
As she chanted low at his open door;
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Once and again as the day passed by,
And the shades of the evening time drew nigh,
Like the voice of a friend or the carol of birds,
Came back to his thoughts those loving words:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Alike in all hearts, as the years went on,
The infant voice rose up anon,
In the grateful birds that cheered their way
Of the hymn little Barbara sang that day:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

Perhaps when the labor of life is done,
And they lay down their burdens one by one,
Forgetting forever these days of pain,
They will take up together the sweet refrain:
"Whether we sleep, or whether we wake,
We are his who gave his life for our sake."

ABOUT SUSPENDERS.

When I was a well-grown boy, being away from home for a vacation, I very naturally broke one of my suspenders. I immediately took possession of an extra pair that my father was using for another purpose, without so much as saying "by your leave." When he discovered it, he bade me return them to their former use. He then added: "I do not like to have you take possession of my things in this arbitrary way. It has already bred a bad habit in you. But I know that you need suspenders, and you shall have them when you are willing to ask for them."

But I had long cultivated a false independence, and refused to ask properly for things I needed. I had fixed on a way of my own for getting helped at the table, and instead of asking for things with an expression of thanks, I had resolved that a statement of my wants, as "I would like some butter," was as far as I could bring myself to go.

I would not, therefore, ask for the suspenders, and contented myself with the remaining one. I assure you, it was a great annoyance to me to have my pants hung on in that lop-sided manner, and a great grief to my father that I should be so obstinate.

About five weeks after this, my father had a plain talk with me about my folly, his anxiety to give me what I needed, and the wretched habit I was strengthening. He told me it would prevent my getting things from God; for they could only be had by asking for them. I frankly told him I hated to give in after I had held out so long. He only said, it was easier than when he had held out longer.

Still, I was not ready. And as my one suspender was tearing off the top of my trowsers, I changed it over to the other button. Father said I could not be allowed to tear my clothes in that manner, and sent me to get a tow string for another suspender. It cut my shoulder so bad for a week, that I brought myself to say, when he had given me some money for another purpose, "I am sick of wearing these old strings, and I think it high time I had some decent suspenders. Can't I take this money and get some?"

He simply said, "You know you can have them when you frankly and squarely ask for them. But you know that this hinting in a roundsabout way is not what is required."

Then I got mad and declared it was a mean shame, that I was an abused boy, and other sputterings of wrath, that were in accordance with my state of temper.

About this time it became necessary to buy me a new suit of clothes. And I gave myself and my father the immense chagrin of trying them on before the dealer, with those old strings over my back. I tried my best to conceal them, but it was with doubtless success. I felt like the boy with the fox under his cloak. I tried to keep my face straight, but it gnawed my very vitals.

Finally, I went to father when he was asleep, and said, "Father?"

He opened his eyes, and said, "Well?"

"I would like some suspenders," said I.

He paused a moment, and then said, "I think you might have phrased that request better, but you will find a pair in that upper drawer."

I went to it, and took out a nice new pair, that had been lying there nearly all the time that had been sawing my shoulder with those old strings. I felt heartily ashamed of myself. He had the thing I wanted all ready provided, was anxious I should enjoy it, grieved over my loss of comfort and temper, while I was keeping him and myself out of a pleasure.

I have since learned that God has blessings already provided—all sorts of suspenders. He yearns to give them to us, is sorry for our toiling and hurts; but we go on sawing our shoulders, tearing our tempers, losing infinite blessings, bearing infinite burdens, and grieving our Father, all because we will not ask for suspenders.—Zion's Herald.

OUR REPORT.

Some of our readers may object to our report on account of the names being omitted but this was the restriction laid upon us by A. M., and we shall not take the liberty to violate. Those who read it for the sake of truth can arrive at the same conclusions as well without the names as with them and perhaps better.

THE ALTOONA CHURCH.—The time will be soon here that the churches composing the Middle District of Pa., are to report the amount they are willing to give towards building a Church in Altoona. The more we learn of the place, the more necessary it seems that a house should be built there. Some of the churches have reported quite favorably and if all do something near their duty the move will be a success. Go to work at once and report before the 1st of July, to George Brumbaugh, Grafton, Huntingdon Co., Pa.

We have just received some specimen pages of the above work. It is written in such an entertaining style that it cannot fail to be of general interest. It is now being published by the National Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, O., and St. Louis, Mo. As soon as issued we will give a full description of the work.

THE HOUSE AND GARDEN.—We have just received the first six numbers of this interesting monthly. The first volume of The House and Garden was published in 1860–61 and was highly prized by us. At the close of the volume it was suspended until the beginning of the present year. It now comes in its old and familiar dress and is as readable as ever. We give it a hearty welcome and hope our home may be benefitted from its monthly visits. It is just the thing for our mothers and daughters to read. Published by M. J. Lawrence, Cleaveland, Ohio, at 80 cents per year.

UNDERGROUND.—We desire to call the attention to that very interesting, useful and entertaining book published by J. B. Burr & Hyde of Hartford, Conn.—UNDERGROUND OR LIFE BELOW THE SURFACE—Advertised in another column.

The object of this volume is to describe underground life in its varied phases; and the author has so well succeeded that he has given us a work at once valuable for the fact and information it contains, and fascinating in the manner in which these facts, interspersed with lively incidents in the lives of miners, etc., are set forth.

Those who have any interest in the mineral products upon which we are so dependent should not fail to purchase and read this book, and we are confident they will be abundantly repaid. It is a vast storehouse of information. See advertisement.

QUERY 5. Is is right to gather or boil sugar water on the Sabbath, or Lord's day?

Answer. Best not to do so.

An amendment was proposed : "Members should not do so." Another amendment proposed : "Not right to do so."

The first answer wes announced to he passed; but there was a differenee of opinion among the brethren, and considerable confusion prevailed, and the question was reconsidered.

——. In case of a sudden freeze, when the pots are likely to burst, would you let it stand there if the crop was likely to be lost?

——. Turn the crocks up on Saturday evening.

——. The Savior never has said we should not not take care of property on the Sabbath day, when loss was likely to be suffered.

——. A very strong prejudice against us exists, that the 'Dunkerd' Brethren do not regard the Sabbath, and I want to show that if individual Brethren will do it that we, as a body, do not approve of it.

——. Say it is wrong.
